mous thirteenth chapter. It is "the more excellent and unending way of love." Love in the church makes for unity and harmony; it is the product of regenerated living and not of Christian bickering. It is the way of ways in all matters pertaining to Christian life and action; it is a gift which all may exercise and find daily reward at the setting of the sun. Note how Paul uses this magic key to unlock the barred doors to frozen hearts and wayward spirits!

1. When factions arise over preachers, and mar the harmony of the church, try the principle of love which unites the Bridegroom and the Bride. Is Christ divided? (1:10-13).

2. When one offends notoriously, remember the position of the Christian in the world (in it, but not of it), and purge out the old leaven. (5:7).

3. When legal entanglements develop, remember our common brotherhood in the Lord Jesus Christ (6:6).

4. When marriage is questioned and impurity is rampant, try "the expulsive power of a holy affection." (7:29).

5. When meats offered to idols trouble the weak, let the strong in love help the weaker brother. (10:33).

6. Where head covering is an issue, let tolerant and sober expediency prevail. (11:2).

7. When the Lord's table is desecrated, remember him who was dead and is alive in holiness and in communion. (11:26).

8. When "speaking with tongues" is in evidence, let order, decency, and wisdom be manifest. (14:1ff).

9. When the resurrection is denied, call to mind the power of the resurrected One whose Kingdom is spiritual and one of love. (15:44).

The Resurrection Body

(Sumarized Truth)

1. It is assured by Christ's resurrection.

2. It will be the resurrection of the same body.

3. It will be, nevertheless, a different body whose powers identity is preserved.

4. It will take place when Christ returns to the earth.

5. It will be the glorious experience of the living saints to receive the new body incorruptible.

Dr. Scofield has an interesting array of facts pertaining to the resurrection of the dead which will be appended here:

"(1) The resurrection of the dead was believed by the patriarchs (Gen. xxii. 5 with Heb. xi. 19; Job. xix. 25-27), and revealed through the prophets. (Isa. xxv. 19; Dan. xii. 2, 13; Hos. xiii. 14), and miracles of the dead restored to life are recorded in the O. T. (2 Ki. iv. 32-35; xiii. 21).

(2) Jesus Christ restored life to the dead (Mt. ix. 25; Lk. vii. 12-15; John xi. 43, 44), and predicted his own resurrection (John x. 18; Lk. xxiv. 1-8).

(3) A resurrection of bodies followed the resurrection of Christ (Mt. xxvii. 52, 53); and the apostles raised the dead (Acts ix. 36-41; xx. 9, 10).

(4) Two resurrections are yet future, which are inclusive of "all that are in the graves" (John v. 28). These are distinguished as "of life" (1 Cor. xv. 22, 23; 1 Thes. iv. 14-17; Rev. xx. 4), and "of judgment" (John v. 28, 29; Rev. xx. 11-13). They are separated by a period of one thousand years (Rev. xx. 5). The "first resurrection," that "unto life" will occur at the second coming of Christ (1 Cor. xv. 23), the saints of the O. T., and church ages meeting him in the air (1 Thess. iv. 15, 17); while the martyrs of the tribulation, who also have part in the first resurrection (Rev. xx. 4), are raised at the end of the great tribulation.

(5) The mortal body will be related to the resurrection body as grain sown is related to the harvest (1 Cor. xv. 37, 38); that body will be incorruptible, glorious, powerful, and spiritual (1 Cor. xv. 42-44, 49).

(6) The bodies of living believers will, at the same time, be instantaneously changed (1 Cor. xv. 50-53; Phil. iii. 20, 21). This "change" of the living, and resurrection of the dead in Christ, is called "redemption of the body" (Rom. viii. 23; Eph. i. 13, 14).

(7) After the thousand years the "resurrection unto judgment" (John v. 29) occurs. The resurrection-body of the wicked dead is not described. They are judged according to their works, and cast into the lake of fire. (Rev. xx. 7-15).

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

By Rev. Milton Bennett Lambdin

As an outstanding result of the long war of independence in the expulsion of the foreign Hyksos invaders of the seventeenth dynasty, Egypt emerged as

A Great Military Power

The succeeding, or eighteenth dynasty was the most heroic or dominant in the military art in all of its annals, lasting from 1650 to 1400 B. C. Its first great conqueror was Thutmosis III, the Alexander by anticipation of his times, obsessed by an insatiable craving for conquest and carrying the dread prowess of Egypt from the equatorial lakes to the south to the distant Euphrates, bringing Syria, Mesopotamia, Arabia, Lybia and North Africa, with the islands of the Egean Sea, under the supremacy of the Egyptian arms.

Upon the walls of Karnak you can see to this very day the chiseled pictures of the of the platoons of his spearmen, bowmen and charioteers. It was his proud boast that he placed the frontiers of Egypt where he pleased.

Siti I, of the nineteenth dynasty, continued his conquests, but greater than he was his son and successor, Rameses II, in his long reign of sixty-seven years. Rameses is identified as the Pharaoh of the Oppression. The writer of this article has looked upon his photograph in stone, cut into the recess of a cartouche on the side of a mountain cliff overhanging the Nahr El Kelb—Dog River—some four or five miles to the northeast of Beyrout, to commemorate one of his military campaigns in the north. Rameses is said to have led his army into Thrace-Europe, but was prevented from farther advance by the severity of the winter's climate.

An inscription that he cut upon the walls of Thebes of a treaty of peace with the Hittite king of the North, and a redoubtable rival for the supremacy of Western Asia, contained, it is said, the first historic provision of an "Extradition Treaty" between nations.

Crowned with the immortels of earthly renown, Rameses II died at the ripe old age of one hundred years. His august majesty, while a stern believer in the extinction of Egypt's enemies, could hardly pose as an ardent advocate of Egyptian racial suicide, so far as his personal example went, as he left behind a tidy little group of 166 sons and daughters to mourn his departure. To be exact, something like fifty-five sons and 111 daughters. There may have been even more enumerated, were not the record very much mutilated.

Succeeding this, said to be the last of the conquering Pharaohs, the prestige and glory of Egypt as a great world power started in on its decline. And each of its subsequent kings in the ironic language of Jeremiah 46:17, was the target for the derisive tagging, "Pharaoh, king of Egypt, is but a noise, he hath passed the time appointed."

As the successive centuries passed away, Egypt glided down the toboggan slide of national disasters to her final doom of extinction as an independent and powerful nation. In successive order, she fell under the power of Assyria, Babylon, Persia. She was overrun by the armies of Esar Haddon, Ashurbanipal, Nebuchadnezzar, Cambyses, Darius, Xerxes Artaxerxes, Alexander, when it finally passed under the power of the Ptolemies, with the Greek Queen, Cleopatra, as the last Pharaonic ruler.

It was during one of these periods of Egyptian depression that the Hebrews made an alliance with her in the desperate hope of finding Egypt a national helper in the

THE CHURCH BY THE SIDE OF THE ROAD

By Mrs. D. A. C. Teeter

*One bright, sunny morning in April,
When raindrops of yesterday's showers
Were clinging to buds and to grasses,
And helping to bring forth the flowers;
The birds, too were happily singing,
All nature was just at her best.
So we went for a ride in the country,
From our problems and duties to rest.*

*We saw many farms on our journey,
Passed a man struggling on with his load,
Turned a corner where plum blossoms fragrant Touched "a church by the side of the road."*

*There it stood, so lonely and dreary,
The steps had all rotted away,
The windows were broken and dusty—
The sight gave us sadness that day.*

*And so on the very next morning
We started again on our search
For a goal with a happier ending,
And we spied quite a different church.
By the side of the road it was standing
Looking brave in its dress of pure white,
While the church yard was neat and so tidy,
And the windows were shining and bright.*

*The bell in the belfry was ringing,
"You are welcome," it just seemed to say.
So we stopped and went in to worship
And were happy, so happy, that day.
And now when we go on a journey
In our quest for relief from the load
Of our daily problems, we find it invasion of its territory by the Assyrians and Babylonians, and found her naught but "a broken reed" in the time of her extremity.

The Prophet Ezekiel (19:15) made a remarkable prediction of its future humiliation and can be read today in the light of its complete fulfillment: "Egypt shall be the basest of the kingdoms, neither shall it exalt itself any more above the nations." And yet another, likewise in open evidence: "And there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt" (Ezekiel 30:13). And thus Egypt exists today, an outline shadow,

An Empty Phantom of Her Former Self, in a literal carrying out of the Divine decree made more than 2,500 years ago. Foreign rulers from that day to this have held authority over her, with a puppet king of an alien race now seated on its tottering throne, as a vassal to England. But, as "In the wreck of nobler lives, Something immortal still survives,"

Egypt in her decrepitude, no longer "Egypt the Imperial," yet sustains and will forever continue to maintain immortality of renown for what she once was and what she has left behind as the glorious evidence of her former greatness.

She needs no illustrious "Hall of Fame" to emblazon her name to succeeding centuries. Stark and bare as she stands in the midst of her ruins, she herself is her own "Hall of Fame." Her awe-inspiring pyramids, her rifled tombs, her stately obelisks, her shattered temples, her dreamlike river, her mystic scenery of mountain and desert and sky, bespeak a vanished greatness and a grandeur, more vocal and eloquent than spoken words, that no land nor nation of all the bygone centuries can hope to compete or equal.

And the marvel of it all is the mummied, life-like remains of her august Pharaohs, and queens, and priests, and generals, and nobles, who wrote her name deep and permanent and illustrious upon the emblazoned pages of history. Nothing like it anywhere among the races of mankind. We may read the story of the famous heroes and kings and statesmen of the past, but while the written records and legends of their lives abide, their mortal bodies have moldered into the dust.

But otherwise so with "Egypt the Imperial." Think what it means to look upon the very forms and faces of the many of its historic personages whose deeds illuminated its ancient life. To list the names of but a few: Severan Ra, prince of the Thebiad, who headed the War of Expulsion of the hated Hyksos, Thotmes III. Seti I, Ramos II, and others yet of possible equal or lesser note. And think too of the prodigious amount of decorated royal coffins and carved and embellished furniture and costly jewelry brought to the light of modern day. But we must come to a final halt somewhere in what we have to say about "Egypt the Imperial," lest our readers grow weary, though "the half hath never been told" by my joyous pen, nor even yet the hundredth part.

And we make a needed pause, to impress

The Obvious Moral of It All

Visit the Valley of the Tombs of the Kings directly across the Nile from Luxor-Karnak, the site of ancient Thebes, for fifteen hundred years the capital of ancient Egypt. Tread the shifting sands of that former mighty empire and look upon her innumerable sculptured ruins. Pay your five plasters — twenty-five cents — and pass through the wide portals of the Cairo museum, to stroll its many corridors filled to the overflowing with the priceless antiques rifled from Egyptian tombs. Look with awe upon the faces and forms of her renowned mummied Pharaohs, whose scepters were wielded in coercive power over conquered nations, and whose lips spoke the words of life or death to cringing subjects, captives, and slaves.

And what does it all mean, as they sleep the unbroken sleep of death, and with stony eyes unseeing, as winged time flights its passage by their caskets?

What is the moral that Imperial Egypt enforces in its grandeur and its decay? What but this:

“The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour,

The path of glory leads but to the grave.”

“Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher, all is vanity.” And it bids us to lift our hearts and minds above the vapory mists of our life below the stars, to behold the city of the New Jerusalem, and a destiny there eternally, through an humble faith in Jesus Christ, the soul's only hope of salvation, in its grandeur and felicity unspcakably beyond what eye hath seen, or ear heard, or the heart of man hath conceived.

SOLOMON

Lesson Text: 1 Kings 5 to 8; Golden Text: Psalm 100:4.

Solomon's Wise Choice. 1 Kings 3:4-9.

When Solomon was elevated to the exalted position of King of Israel he remembered two things—first, that Saul had been denied the privilege of having a son succeed him as king, and second, that David's loyalty to God has secured for him the privilege denied to Saul and he was given a “son to sit upon the throne of Israel.”

Remembering the experiences of his two predecessors the young king was in no wise “puffed up,” but rather was humbled, and in his humility asked Jehovah to grant to him “an understanding heart” that he might rightly judge his people. Exalted position too often results in conceit rather than humility. Humility enabled Solomon to make the wise choice.

TUESDAY

Solomon a Wise Judge. 1 Kings 3:16-28.

There is little that can be added to the account of Solomon's method of judgment in this case of two mothers laying claim to the same child.

Modern courts would hardly approve of this method of procedure, and some folks may insist that it was but a simple application of a principle of psychology on the part of the king; but psychology or no psychology, it was a master stroke on the part of the young ruler, and has come down through the ages as one of the wisest acts of judgment ever performed by mortal man. And we must believe that it was in direct answer to the request the humble king made to Jehovah upon his ascending to the throne of his father, David.

WEDNESDAY

Solomon's Knowledge. 1 Kings 4:29-34.

If “knowledge is power,” then Solomon must have been one of the most powerful kings civilization has known. We do not know just how Solomon attained all his knowledge; but as we read the passage of Scripture assigned for today, we are amazed at the breadth of his knowledge.

The thousands of proverbs he spake and the great number of songs he wrote are not enough so far as numbers alone are concerned to indicate any great fund of knowledge; but when the divine recorder tells us of all the things about which he wrote, of trees and plants, of birds and beasts, of creeping things and fish, we are compelled to give him credit for being the possessor of all the wisdom and knowledge the rulers of the surrounding nations ascribed to him.

THURSDAY

Solomon Builds the Temple. 1 Kings 6:1-10.

The outstanding event of the Hebrew monarchy was the building at Jerusalem the Temple of the Lord which is commonly spoken of as Solomon's.

It had been the ambition of David to erect such a temple for use in the worship service of the Lord God who had delivered the children of Israel out of Egypt; but because David was a man of blood, he was not to be favored with this high privilege. Yet he was privileged to have a large part in it in following the instructions of the Lord in gathering together the materials out of which it was to be built; and Solomon, faithfully following the instructions given to him, with the aid of 160,000 workmen, and $2,450,000,000 worth of gold and silver, was able to complete this most marvellous building of all time.

FRIDAY

The Ark in the Temple. 1 Kings 8:1-11.

It matters not how magnificent the walls of a building may be, yet if it has not proper and harmonious furnishings, it is but an empty shell. With the aid of Hiram and his skilled workmen Solomon was able to have constructed furnishings for the temple that would be in keeping with the glory of the outer structure; but even then the temple was incomplete. There was one thing lacking, the sacred thing for which David wanted to build the temple, even the “ark of the covenant.” So Solomon made elaborate preparations and with much pomp and ceremony the ark was brought by the priests from the place where David had it safely preserved on Mount Zion and given its sacred resting-place in the Temple of the Lord.

SATURDAY

Solomon's Prayer of Dedication. 1 Kings 8:22-26.

The apostles said to Jesus, “Lord, teach us to pray as John also taught his disciples,” and he gave to them, and to all believers as well, that wonderful model prayer as recorded in the Gospels; but Solomon had no such specific instructions. Yet, as one reads the prayer the king made at the dedication of the temple, one is caused to marvel at the all-comprehensiveness of his supplication. It may have been an extemporaneous prayer but it came from a heart that had meditated many hours upon the graciousness of a loving Jehovah. Many rambling and indefinite prayers might be greatly improved by sincere meditation before they are offered.

SUNDAY

A Call to Praise. Psalm 100:1-5.

One might be led to believe that all true praise is so spontaneous that it should be entirely unnecessary to ever call upon one to give expression to it. But this does not seem to work out in life. Even at a football game it seems advisable to have a “cheer leader” to call out the most enthusiastic expressions of approval of the “rooters” in the bleachers or stadium. So it seems, to get the best results, it is essential to have one's attention called to the fact that one owes praise to Jehovah and the Psalmist in a very few well-chosen words causes men to understand just why they should praise the Lord, and he earnestly calls upon them to give expression to their feelings of joy.

THE MIRACLE FOUNTAIN

The miracle fountain of Andersonville is still flowing seventy years after lightning brought water to the wilderness in time to save a multitude of Federal prisoners, dying in a hostile land. There is a monument there now. It is a national shrine. More than 12,000 Unionists died at Andersonville. Its tragic story is told by the thousands of tiny tombstones that line the hills down to the spot where water miraculously spouted from the earth at a time when men were dying of thirst. Some authorities say the tales of the horrors of Andersonville were exaggerated and that records prove the men were not killed wantonly. The prison was a stockade where 45,000 men were herded. Many were wounded. Sanitation was the prison's greatest problem. Disease was rampant. The South, its ruined acres supporting its own armies and the invaders, could scarcely furnish doctors for its prisoners. Even water was scarce at Andersonville. The supply was contaminated. It was August and the blistering South Georgia sun scorched the prisoners and their Confederate guards—men too old to fight. All suffered. “Water,” pleaded many. And all that was left was alive with germs. Some prayed. Many sang. A black cloud dropped low and a bolt of lightning crashed over the stockade and tore away the earth almost in the center of the prison. And from the hole gushed water—enough for all. Many thought a little pool had been struck and that the supply would soon run out. Years after the war somebody remembered the spring and a monument was built around it.—Baltimore Sun.

Life is a slowly unrolling scroll. Do the duty just before you, and the next duty will come into view. Courage for all the road may well be beyond our claiming, but only a little courage is required for just the next step.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

LA ARGENTINA

The winter in Argentina this year has been unusually severe and the poor people lack proper clothing. Many are unable to attend our meetings on this account.

At present there is an epidemic of influenza so prevalent that public schools have been closed ten days on account of it. This is a pity for children go to school only half of each day even when they are open and half of that time is spent in recesses or in teaching the rites of the church instead of the things that should be taught. The lady school teachers are as a rule the helpers of the priests and a great hindrance to the work of the Gospel.

Brother Sichel is holding evangelistic meetings in different missions, which are well attended and which he will doubtless report later.

The writer recently visited Buenos Aires and preached a few nights in an independent mission there which for some time has wished to change to a distinctly Brethren mission. Fourteen adults, including the pastor and his family were baptized and the Lord's supper was instituted as we observe it. I did not go further, however, as I could not promise any financial aid and I do not know whether the home church would approve of having a mission which uses the Salvation Army method of receiving support.

This group of believers gave good testimonies and are well spoken of by the people around them. I have known them for eight years and feel sure that they are sincere, good people.

For several years also, I have been asked by a pastor far to the north, on the border of Bolivia, to come and baptize him and his flock, but the distance is great and I have not been able to go.

Pray that these isolated groups may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord and a way may be opened to maintain the full Gospel among them.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA REPORT

Twenty-Third Annual Bible Conference of Brethren Churches of Southern California District

"The finest Bible Conference ever held in Long Beach" was the testimony given on the part of many who attended and enjoyed the rich spiritual feasts daily spread from July 21 to 30 in the First Brethren Church of Long Beach. This church annually throws open its doors to its sister churches of the Southern California District who send their delegates as official representatives and many others drive in their automobiles from their homes to the various sessions of this great ten day Bible Conference. The membership of this splendid church also throw open their homes to entertain the delegates during conference and friends desiring to stay over night any time during this period.

The messages delivered this year were unsurpassed in their spiritual content, quality and delivery. The Conference opened with one of the greatest challenges to progressive service ever presented to a District or to the entire brotherhood—that challenge being set forth in the Moderator's address delivered by our beloved brother Louis S. Bauman, D.D. This address will appear in the pages of our Evangelist and additional copies are to be printed for distribution among the brotherhood of our district, hence no need of elaborating on this splendid address in this report. Copies of this address may be had by writing the Secretary whose name and address appear at the close of this report. The series of Bible studies this year was delivered by our own Brother Alva J. McClain, Th.M. These never-to-be-forgotten, edifying, doctrinal messages delivered in such a convincing and masterly manner were the means of establishing many of God's children in the "faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." So often in past conferences, men outside of our own denomination were called upon to lead our conference in such a series of Bible study, but it was clearly demonstrated this year that we need not go outside of our own fold for such ministry. We wish we might have given the readers of our church paper much of the meat of these addresses but neither space nor time will permit. For the subjects upon which Brother McClain spoke we refer you to the Evangelist issue of July 1, 1933 page 15. The California Male Quartet, who travelled by machine from Ashland, holding meetings in the various churches on their way to California, contributed largely to the success and blessing of the musical part of the program. In addition to their greatly appreciated musical numbers, some of these splendid young men delivered inspiring addresses. As they, with Brother and Sister McClain, return to their duties and studies at Ashland the prayers of this conference will follow them. Inspirational and practical messages were brought by the pastors of the district. Speakers invited from other denominations were as follows: Cortland Myers, D.D., of Pasadena; Rev. Louis T. Talbot, Acting President of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles and pastor of the Church of the Open Door, Los Angeles; Charles E. Fuller, D.D. Managing Director of the Gospel Broadcasting Association, Los Angeles.

The attendance this year was the largest known at such conferences. With a seating capacity of 1200 at a few of the evening sessions we were obliged to request some of the younger generation to come to the platform and sit on the steps leading there to in order to give their seats to the older folk.

All conference expenses were met by the free will offerings and the usual amounts donated by the churches of the district. With a good surplus in the treasury the new executive committee and other committees appointed by the conference will be enabled to carry out many of the suggestions presented in the Moderator's address.

The executive committee chosen to serve the conference for the ensuing year is as follows: Moderator, W. A. Ogden; Vice-Moderator, John G. Lienhard; Secretary, Alan S. Pearce; Assistant Secretary, A. D. Cashman; Treasurer, Charles W. Mayes; Member Executive Committee, H. V. Wall. District Statistician, John G. Lienhard.

We praise God for his manifest blessing upon the twenty-third conference and should our blessed Lord tarry until another year we look to him through the indwelt power of the Holy Spirit to work through each one in the District to the salvation of many precious souls and the extension of his cause through the Brethren Church in Southern California as never before. Brethren, may we pray one for another to this end throughout the entire brotherhood.

In his service,

ALAN S. PEARCE.

Secretary, Southern California District.

NOTE:

We are happy to add to this report another brief statistical report prepared by our faithful statistician, Brother John G. Lienhard, Pastor of the Second Brethren Church of Long Beach.—A. S. P.

Statistician's Report

There are eight Church Houses in this District, and one parsonage. During the conference year forty-two members were added by Letter or Relation, two hundred and eighty-eight by baptism, making a total of three hundred and twenty new additions. Throughout the year there was a loss of one hundred and seventy-four members by death, letter and dismissal. The present total number of members in this District is 2,614. This company is divided into 1,041 male members and 1,568 female members.

During the year a total of seven revivals and eight Bible Conferences were held. There was an average attendance of 608 at the weekly prayer meetings.

Total valuation of church properties amounted to $418,761.36. The pastor's salaries amounted to $15,777.67. Evangelistic services cost $1,223.52 and Bible Conferences $595.16. Improvements cost $356.42 and the current expenses amounted to $17,447.11.

The District gave to Home Missions $1,120.97, to District Missions, $1,545.41, and to Foreign Missions, $10,545.17. For Superannuated Ministers $199.93, Brethren Home $127.09, Ashland College $371.79, Brethren Publishing Company $322.10 and the total amount paid out, inserting an amount of $18,515.63 which was spent for miscellaneous obligations, was $67,151.98.

The Churches of the District reported forty Deacons, forty-six deaconesses and twenty-two Elders.

LIMESTONE, TENNESSEE

The latest news from the work here was given last fall at the end of our evangelistic meeting which was conducted by Brother Benshoff of Waynesboro, Pa. Therefore a number of months have elapsed since that time and it is now fitting that another report should be given. I should like to say, by way of review that our last evangelistic meeting accomplished much in building up and strengthening the faith of the membership of our church. Brother Benschoff was undoubtedly chosen of God for this field. At the close of the meeting there was a spirit of unity, fellowship, and good will prevailing among pastor, people and the evangelist, which was definite proof that God had manifested his power in the services. Brother Benschoff was universally loved by both pastor and people, and in the beginning of this news letter, I am happy to state that we are again looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to having Brother Benschoff conduct our evangelistic meeting again this coming October. We covet the prayers of all that the Word of the Lord may have free course, and that many precious souls may be saved. In one sense of the word, this is a very hard field. There are so many churches, and it seems that some have become Gospel hardened and also, there is a class of sinners in this section of the country who will not attend evangelistic services for fear they will become convicted. How we should pray that God might loose them from Satan's chains with which they are bound and do not realize it! There are also some people in this community who feel that they are justified in the sight of God because of their morality. This class of sinners is always struck hard by the evangelist but it seems as if they do not want to be impressed by the Gospel. Since I am now on the subject of soul saving, I am so glad to report that during the summer when our pastor, Brother Maconaghy, would give the invitation, a number of our young children have spontaneously responded to the Gospel call. It has been very impressive to observe these children as they so boldly and so sincerely gave their hearts to Jesus, and this, too, without persuasion on the part of the older people. In their tender years, they have felt the call and did not quench the Spirit. We have had two baptismal services this summer, and there are three children now awaiting baptism.

Now, in getting down to a general report, I am pleased to say that we have had no summer slump which I hear is prevalent in many of our churches. Our attendance and interest is not always what it should be, however, under the leadership of our conscientious and consecrated pastor, Brother Maconaghy, the various activities of the work have been making marked progress during the past months. The attendance at our Bible class and prayer-meeting has increased a good percentage over the winter months. Since January 1, the prayer-meeting has been placed in the hands of a committee whose business is to secure leaders. We have had some very interesting meetings. In case a leader fails to come, the pastor holds himself in readiness to take charge of the services.

Some weeks ago, in our Saturday evening Bible class, which is taught by the pastor, we completed a study of the Messianic Psalms. Truly those who attended the class can testify to the fact that their vision of the Savior was very much enlarged as a result of this study. At the present time, we are taking up the study of dispensations and covenants. We have never had a more interesting study and the knowledge gained from this study is of vital importance if one desires to grasp the deep things of God's Word. There is so much material for discussions which lends a great deal of interest to the lessons.

Our Intermediate and Senior Christian

Endeavor meet each Sunday evening. The attendance at the Senior Christian Endeavor is not what it could be, but those who attend are faithful and the topics for study are very profitable indeed.

On the third Sunday evening of each month, the Senior C. E. has a missionary program. In this way, the men of the church have an opportunity to attend a missionary program once a month. In fact, this year, the missionary committee consists of three men who make out the programs and conduct the meeting each third Sunday evening.

The Intermediate C. E. is in charge of sister Maconaghy with Miss Nola Brobeck as her assistant. Both are very consecrated leaders. The attendance at the intermediate C. E. is usually good and we trust that these young people are heeding the instruction given out by Sister Maconaghy and Miss Brobeck each Sunday evening. Both the Senior and the Intermediate C. E. Societies are having quarterly business meetings this year. At the business session of the Senior C. E. Sister Mary Pence, who is president of the society, always gives some very helpful suggestions and instructions relative to the conducting of the Sunday evening C. E. meetings. If all leaders and those who take part in the program would always heed the advice of the president, all the meetings would be quite interesting and inspiring. At the close of these quarterly meetings, a social time is enjoyed together, which adds spice to the meetings.

The teachers and officers of the Sunday School are, also, having quarterly business meetings to discuss the problems arising in Sunday School and the best means of solving these problems. We have learned, however, both as a church and a Sunday School, that prayer is the best solution to all problems that confront us. How true were the words of Jesus when he said, "Without me ye can do nothing."

The first Sunday in July, there was a merged service of Sunday School, Children's Day and the regular preaching service. The house was pretty nearly filled on this occasion. At the close of the children's program, Brother Maconaghy brought a message in which he made a special appeal to the young people to invest their lives in God's service. As a result of this message one little girl accepted Christ as her Savior, which seemed a very opportune time, since it was the occasion of Children's Day.

The Easter season is always a time of spiritual refreshing and this year it was enjoyed very much indeed. Our spring communion is always observed on Saturday evening prior to Easter. On Sunday morning an inspiring message was brought by the pastor. The music for the Sunday morning Easter service was furnished by the Intermediate Christian Endeavor. This act of the young people was appreciated and enjoyed by all. A special effort was put forth in Senior Christian Endeavor to get as many people out to the C. E. meeting on Easter Sunday as possible, in order that they might become informed concerning our Mission work, and the great need for the best Easter offering that could be raised.

In closing we desire to say with the Psalmist of old, "The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." May our hearts ever be filled with praise to him for his continued goodness to us. "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

National Conference Minutes for 1933

MONDAY EVENING

The Forty-fifth Annual Conference and the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Brethren Church was officially called to order by Moderator W. C. Benschoff. Dr. Chas. A. Bame was presented as the Conference music director, who conducted a spirited song service. Devotions for the hour were conducted by Homer Kent, who read Col. 1:1-18 and invoked Divine Guidance upon conference convened. "Pass Me Not" was prayerfully sung which prepared the hearts for the Vice Moderator's address which was delivered by R. F. Porte upon the theme, "The Obedience of Christ." The opening session of conference closed by singing, "Blest Be the Tie" and the benediction by A. V. Kimmell.

TUESDAY MORNING

"Ring the Bells of Heaven" introduced the morning song service. L. V. King read Romans 12 and offered the morning prayer. Business session ensued which was devoted to Conference Organization. The initial report of the credential Committee revealed the presence of 62 ministerial and 94 lay delegates or a total of 156 delegates. This report was adopted. A motion prevailed that the chair appoint a member to substitute for a vacancy on the committee on Rules and Organization. A. L. Lynn was appointed. Conference agreed to extend to Raymond Blood the courtesy of Conference until he be able to present properly filled out credential. The new Conference Executive Committee was next submitted and approved by conference and is as follows. Ohio: Dr. E. E. Jacobs, R. D. Barnard; S. Calif., A. J. McClain; N. Calif., J. Wesley Platt; North West, Fred Kinzie; S. Eastern, J. L. Bauman, Herman Koontz; Illinois, E. M. Riddle; Mid West, L. G. Wood; Indiana, D. A. C. Teeter, C. D. Witmer; Penna., A. V. Kimmell, Geo. Jones. By prevailing motion the secretary of National Conference was asked to secure before hand the names of the new Executive Conference and read same at Conference.

The result of the election for Conference Organization follows: Moderator, A. J. McClain; Vice-Moderator, M. A. Stuckey; Secretary, J. L. Gingrich, Assistant Secretary, L. V. King; Treasurer, Ira C. Wilcox; Statistician, Geo. Cone; Committee on Committees, A. V. Kimmell, Kenneth Monroe, C. L. Anspach. Vice-Moderator presented the moderator who read his address captioned "The Brethren Church for Such a Time as This."

The newly elected moderator was escorted to the platform, presented to conference and regularly inducted into office.

The first Bible lecture, "The Woman and the Three Measures of Meal," was brought by A. J. McClain at this period. Morning session concluded with the benediction by A. J. McClain.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON

Conference joined in singing, "The Promised Land". John Hathaway represented the people before God in prayer. L. S. Bauman lectured on "Prophetic Signs of the Times." Frank Gehman pronounced the benediction.

TUESDAY EVENING

The first portion of the evening session was devoted to Christian Endeavor and was presided over by R. F. Porte. "Tis So sweet to Trust in Jesus" opened a spirit song service. Fred Vanator was responsible for the devotions and read Rom. 12 and lead in prayer. E. M. Riddle spoke on, "The Beginning and Progress of C. E., in the Brethren Church." Miss Dorcas Bame rendered a vocal solo which every one appreciated.

The closing message of the day was delivered by J. L. Gingrich using as a subject, "The Divine Indwelling." Benediction was pronounced by A. E. Whitted.

WEDNESDAY MORNING

Chas. A. Bame announced song, "Am I a Soldier of the Cross" to begin the morning session of conference. G. L. Maus read Eph. 4:1-18 and prayed for Divine Counsel upon the session to follow. The Credential Committee reported to date the presence of 76 ministerial and 110 lay delegates which makes a total of 186. Conference accepted this report.

The minutes of the previous business session were read and approved.

The following reports were read and approved by conference:

Annual Report of the Fiances of the Missionary Board of the Brethren Church 1932-1933

This abbreviated financial report means the saving of about fifty dollars in printing under that which an elaborate report would cost. The tremendous reduction in support given to Home Missions this year makes impossible any full operation of any department of our work. We regret these conditions but they are the facts.

The following are the points to which financial aid has been given by the Missionary Board of the Brethren Church during the year 1932-1933.

National Statistician's Annual Report

Milledgeville, Illinois, August 17, 1933.
Dear Brethren In Christ, Greetings:

The Statisticians of the various Districts cooperating with your National Statistician have gathered what they hope will be useful information. Doubtless there is Romance and more or less tragedy concealed in the information here presented.

There are 144 churches which have seen fit to report and some 20 which did not report. The churches reporting record 144 church houses, 7 union houses, 7 school houses and halls used, 57 parsonages and 21 other properties. One church is reported as, to be sold. Some of the smaller churches have had no pastoral care for so long they are becoming discouraged. Some of the larger churches, because of some indebtedness, refuse to hire pastors thus discontinuing Church worship services and forcing pastors out of employment in the Denomination.

During the past twelve months additions of 190 by letter, 108 by relation and 1775 by baptism, or a total of 2073 are reported. The Romance of Love to God and his Church is written large in these figures. But immediately we turn to another side of the picture. Losses through death number 260: By letter, 232, and by dismissals 919, or a total loss of 1,411. Here there is the probability of tragedy, for some precious souls turned from a church home. Souls for which Christ died, sent away without Spiritual nurture.

A male membership of 15,015 and female membership of 26,486 nurtured by these churches. Of the 20 not reporting a conservative estimate would be 1,350 souls making a grand total of 27,836. This is a loss of more than 1,100 over last year's report. Some churches have been doing some severe revising of church rolls.

Looking to the salvation of souls, 101 evangelistic meetings were held at a cost of $6303.62 and Bible Conferences to the number of 23, at a cost of $735.86. This work may well be greatly extended in scope and intensity. In the ministry of the churches 195 ministers and elders are reported at salaries totaling $119,243.14. With deacons numbering 445 and deaconesses numbering 335.

Other than the Lord's Day services of the churches, there are 119 prayer meetings held with an attendance of 3,136 attendants per meeting.

The church houses together with lots and fixtures are valued at $2,050,546.98 with union houses at $400.00 and parsonages at $189,300.00 and other property—mostly houses, vacant lots and the like, $62,490.00, or a total property evaluation of $2,302,736.98 owned by these Brethren.

They have spent $6,399.91 in improvements and $63,334.75 for current expenses.

In the General Interests of the Church, Home Missions was granted $6,817.84, Foreign Missions $26,253.10, Superannuated Ministers $1,258.58, The Brethren's Home $1,148.77, Ashland College $776.90, Brethren Publishing Co., $1,225.52 and other expenses of $28,663.42, making a total of $267,355.49 spent in the nurture of those whom the Lord calls to himself. This averages a small fraction over $10.00 per capita for all church work for the year. Would the per capita income of these Brethren be so low as only $10.00 for the year do you think? It would appear to be so if Brethren are living up to the Lord's instructions in Malachi 3:10-11.

A reported balance of $18,755.14 was in the treasuries on the date of reporting. Only two items reach or exceed the total of last year's report for the same item. Those are Brethren's Home and Miscellaneous Expenses.

Pastors salaries dropped many thousands of dollars and most of the General Interests of the Church dropped greatly. Doubtless in many cases much suffering was experienced by these losses but in some cases the great joy and blessing—not to say romance—of a more complete trust in Christ and a fuller leaning on the promises of God were experienced.

May he who is our Lord and Savior more mightily use the Brethren Church in these trying days. Your Statistician, GEO. E. CONE.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

"BEER" signs along the road. It seemed that almost every type of business place was selling beer, or trying to sell it.

I took occasion to make some inquiries from grocers and other dispensers, and was told that business was not so good with some. One or two declared that they would lose money for the year after the license was paid for, and they expected to give up the beer next year. It seems that the present younger generation, in the main, does not care greatly for beer. And this would seem to prove that the 18th Amendment has been effective to this extent—that the present generation will have TO BE TAUGHT TO LIKE BEER. And doubtless the brewers, with their usual efficiency, will attend to this matter. Just as the tobacco magnates made cigarette smoking almost universal within a few years. This afternoon, as I write, Madame Schuman-Heink and Pryor's famous band will perform over the air, to advertise a great BEER EXPOSITION in Cleveland. The cigarette advertising over the radio is bad enough. If Beer is added, one wonders whether any space will be left for the other activities and interests of mankind.

IN THE SHADOW

AULT—Mary Edith Ault, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Moss) Balesbaugh, was born near Denver, Indiana, August 25, 1879, and quietly slipped away to be with her Savior July 21, 1932.

On October 20, 1904 she was united in marriage to Albert Ault of Mexico, Indiana, who survives together with one son, James Elvin and one daughter, Ellen Marie, one son having preceded her in death.

She deceased united with the Mexico Brethren church in 1904 under the preaching of Brother G. W. Reich. Throughout the years she was a most faithful member, loyal and devoted to her Lord and to the church of her choice. The church and community keenly feel her passing, and the very large attendance at the funeral service is a living testimony to her unselfish life as hid with God in Christ Jesus.

The funeral service was conducted from the Mexico Brethren church by the writer, assisted by Brother L. W. Ditch. MARK B. SPACHT, Pastor.

BRETHREN EVANGELIST

And when he had found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing.—Luke 15:5.

*And just as silly sheep, to snares a prey,
I wandered from the sheltering fold away,
Till I was lost; none seemed to wonder where;
But Christ, my Shepherd, missed me; had a care!
He braved the night of darkness all around me,
And searched the desert till with joy
he found me,
And brought me back, his loving arms around me!
Now I am sheltered in the shepherd's care,
No more to wander in the desert bare.*

HOOF and Mouth Disease

One of the dread ailments to which certain domestic animals are subject is known as the "Hoof and Mouth disease." It has not been long ago that this country experienced a very serious outbreak necessitating state wide quarantines. During that time, when the phrase was constantly before our eyes in newspaper reports, a certain man was asked how his church liked their new pastor.

"O, quite well," answered the man, "except that he is suffering from an attack of hoof and mouth disease."

"But I didn't know that human beings were subject to the disease," protested the questioner. "What are the symptoms?"

The man replied, "He CAN'T PREACH and he WON'T VISIT."

HOUSE to House

There may be some preachers so great that they can win souls and build up churches without going into the homes of the unsaved. If so, they are greater than the Apostle Paul who declared that his ministry had been both PUBLIC and FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE (Acts 20:20). The pastor who neglects the "house to house" ministry will not see great results in his "public" ministry.

The false cults of the day are wiser than some of the most orthodox preachers. Quite often while the preacher is thundering against them to EMPTY PEWS, the Russellites are visiting the people that the preacher SHOULD HAVE VISITED.

It is not given to every pastor to be a great pulpit preacher, but the humblest pastor can be a great "HOUSE TO HOUSE" preacher. And if there were more "house to house" preaching, there would be more powerful pulpit preaching.

PREACHING with Signs

I am convinced that we do not exploit the possibilities of preaching by means of the sign-board. Great companies pay large sums of money for the privilege of erecting sign boards in conspicuous places near and in our cities. But the average church, while often having a well located situation, very seldom bothers to use it. Approaching every town and hamlet throughout the country you are exhorted to "Drink Beer," to "Smoke Cigaretts," to "Buy an Automobile," etc. But sign-boards heralding the Way of Life are almost unknown. And when they are put up, quite often the sign is painted by some one who knows nothing about either the art of spelling or advertising. Hence the notion has arisen that to preach the Gospel by the sign-board method is slightly moribund.

The average church is utterly asleep to the possibilities here. I do not refer to the modern movable letter board. Such signs are beautiful but few people look at them. This opinion is based on first-hand observation. Some years ago the Philadelphia First Church erected one of the regulation moveable letter boards and I spent several hours watching the people passing on street car and side walk. I was disappointed. Very few looked at the signs I put up on the board. For one thing, the letters were too small to see clearly at any distance. And again, the Board was like all others of its kind, a case of stereotyped monotony.

So we tried something else. One of the men helped me prepare a rather large glass covered board, another got me a roll of fair quality wrapping paper which would take paint, and I began to paint signs. I am no artist, but like Paul I could make large letters. About the only merit my signs had was that they were different. But amateurish as the painting was, I found that people read them. And there are members in the Philadelphia congregation there today who came to the church for the first time because they read one of my signs. I tried to make them short and to the point, some arresting truth of the Word.

Let us preach the Gospel by EVERY MEANS. The time is short.

A GOOD Suggestion

The editor of the Evangelical Christian writes that the other day he saw a very ordinary sign on a building, one you can see almost anywhere in a large city.

It read: KEEP OUT—THIS MEANS YOU.

It impressed the editor and finally moved him to write an editorial in which he suggested that the invitation of the Gospel is just the opposite. The sign erected over the gate of heaven is: COME IN—THIS MEANS YOU.

Now if I were still painting signs, I think I would put this sign up in front of my church and let it stand for at least a week.

LORD GREY is Dead

To some this announcement will mean little. But those who are old enough to recall the events leading to the cataclysm of 1914 will remember Lord Grey as the Minister of Foreign Affairs for England when the war broke out. Of all the men who held responsible positions at the time, Grey was most fitted by ability and experience to understand the problems and tendencies which plunged the nations into that disastrous conflict. In fact, there are commentators who claim that Lord Grey might have averted the war if he had acted differently. Such a view is doubtful.

Grey's own view of the matter, as reported from an authoritative source, was that "when the war broke out, the lights were being turned down all over Europe. It was the beginning of the decline of civilization in Europe. The nations were like the herd of Gadarene swine in the Scriptures, which went violently over a steep place. . . . They are still struggling and cutting each other's throats."

THE Work of Demons

Lord Grey's reference to the Gadarene swine in describing the nations is very apt. Those swine, the reader will recall, did something abnormal, something which even beasts will not do under ordinary circumstances. They plunged into the deep, not because they were dumb beasts, but because they were POSSESSED WITH DEMONS.

So it was with the nations. Men even in their fallen and unsaved state do not deliberately plan to destroy themselves and all the values of civilization so laboriously wrought out. They may be sinful, selfish, prone to fight and kill, but under normal conditions they do not coldly plan the destruction of the world.

Whether the wise men of the world admit it or not, there is an Evil Genius in the affairs of men. The Bible calls his the "god of this world" and the "Prince of demons." It is he who "deceives the nations." If you wonder how, read in Revelation 16:14 of "the spirits of demons, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

No Godless League of Nations, no Christless grandiose scheme of government or system of treaties can exorcise the demon influence in international affairs. Only Christ can do that. Some day he will cast them out together with their prince, and shut them up for a thousand years. Then the nations will not act like Gadarene swine.

AN ECHO OF BYGONE YEARS

*A song comes back from the bygone years
Whose melody never grows old,
And I listen again, through my smile and tears,*

*Though the singer lay dead and cold.
'Tis a song so sweet, by a voice so rare,
Far purer than any other,
And I hear it again, though troubled by care,
The lullaby sung me by mother.*

*There are times, it seems, when all alone,
The singer is by my side,
And I hear her voice in a monotone,
Like the rise and fall of the tide,
While the days go by, till the end of time,
And the struggle of life is ended,
May the singer never forget her rhyme
Till her bliss and mine are blended.*

Further Re-actions to "Re-thinking Missions"

At least one of our readers has gotten into a serious mental mix-up regarding the Appraisal Commission on Foreign Missions, and we are wondering how many more there may be who have been similarly mis-led thereby. This paper has on a number of occasions carried unfavorable comments about the so-called "Laymen's Report" because it is our conviction that it is vicious and wields an un-Christian influence. We did not think we had borne down too heavily upon it but it has seemed so to one of our correspondents, who took exception to our editorial insistence a few weeks ago that we cannot share the Gospel of Christ without proselyting. Now we are convinced that we have not said enough about that "Report", nor pointed out clearly enough its unchristian character.

Our last editorial utterance on this matter, which called forth the criticism, pointed out the folly of the Appraisal Commission in suggesting that the attitude of missionaries and mission societies needed changing from one of proselyting the devotees of non-Christian faiths to one of mutual sharing with them. We insisted that Christianity is imperialistic in its very nature, that it cannot adopt a fraternal attitude toward other religions because it is the only true religion, that its Founder is the one and only Savior of men, and that the church cannot do else than proclaim the Gospel of saving grace to a dying world and seek to win men from their false religions to the acceptance of Christ. We are obligated—every professed follower of the Son of God—to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature", to share the blessed salvation we have experienced in Christ with men everywhere, and that sharing means effort to get men to turn from their idols and their humanly devised forms and notions to the religion of Jesus Christ, which is the only true revelation of God and the only saving faith.

Attitude of Laymen's Commission Toward Christ

This is not the attitude toward Christianity that is suggested by "Re-Thinking Missions", nor is it the attitude displayed by those who examined Christianity and the efforts of Christians on the mission fields. Their attitude is just what we pointed out in the recent editorial that elicited the criticism. It is that the old conception of "one way of salvation and one only, one name, one atonement" needs "re-thinking", that "this plan" with its old-time content and "with its particular historical center in the career of Jesus," and its insistence that this "must become the point of regard of every human soul" is no longer effective or tenable. These investigators proceeded with a conception of Christianity that is as far from the conception of the Apostle Paul as the east is from the west. Christianity loses for them its supernatural character and becomes wholly rationalized; it is a combined system of philosophy and ethics. And on that basis alone it must make its fight for universal acceptance. In describing the old view, they say: "The universal quality of Christianity lay not alone in its valid principles of truth and morals, but in an essential paradox, the universal claim of one particular historic fact, the work of Christ. General principles may be reasoned out, and perhaps proved, so that all men must accept them. But particular facts cannot be proved; they must be recognized. Hence, in respect to the central fact Christianity was necessarily dogmatic—it could only say Ecco Homo, Behold the Man; and it was committed to a certain intolerance, beneficent in purpose—in the interest of the soul it could allow no substitute for Christ. It came to proclaim truth, which is universal; but its truth was embodied in a particular person and his work." ("Re-Thinking Missions", pages 35, 36). With this positive, definite, dogmatic view, they are out of sympathy, and they tell us why.

This old view is no longer adequate; there is need of a changed attitude. Christianity must grow along with the other great religions and help them. "So far from taking satisfaction in moribund or decadent conditions where they exist within other faiths, Christianity may find itself bound to aid these faiths, and frequently does aid them, to a truer interpretation of their own meaning than they had otherwise achieved." This cooperation with other faiths, and in fact, this purifying and saving of the old non-Christian faiths, will be found necessary in order to save the people from irreligion. For Christianity cannot hope to do the job by itself; it needs the cooperation of the old national faiths. Particularly is this said to be true of China. We quote again: "The fate of religion in China, in any time we can now foresee, depends chiefly on the fate of these religions: . . . We can reach the hundred thousands but not the hundred millions except through their media. The great need of China," say these nominal but unfaithful exponents of Christianity and investigators of Christian missions, "is for interpreters (not of the Gospel of Christ, but) capable of perceiving its deep-running spiritual life, and with all else that they bring, laboring with infinite patience and love to preserve the treasures within the old inheritance," rather than giving them a new possession. That is not the voice of men enthusiastic about Christianity; neither is it the voice of those who are loyal and true.

What the Word Says

If any person thinks that attitude is one of loyalty to the Word of God, let him read the following, among the many passages that might be cited. First we have the definite word of God that he will give all the people of the world to his Son, Jesus Christ, to be his possession: "I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son. This day have I begotten thee. Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession" (Psa. 2:7, 8). There is no suggestion here that he will be asked to share his possession with another, as these mission investigators would have him do. Again Christ is set forth in prophecy as the coming Savior of the world: "I will give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the ends of the earth" (Isa. 49:6). Again the word is given unto the prophet: "Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin" (Isa. 53:10). Paul testifies that Christ was indeed the Savior of the world according to the purpose of God from the beginning: "Who hath saved us, . . . according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began, but is now manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Tim. 1:9, 10). And our Lord himself declared that he was come to "give his life a ransom for many" (Matt. 20:28).

Not only does the Word of God declare Christ to be the Savior of the world, but the only Savior. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me" (John 14:6). Again he declares himself to be "the door of the sheep", and he that "entereth not by the door, . . . but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber", and "all that ever came before" him are "thieves and robbers" (John 10:1, 8, 9). Peter proclaimed that "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12). Such a Savior is exalted above all other beings, for God has "raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all" (Eph. 1:20-21). Such uniqueness and distinction given to our Lord by God's revealed Word, put him absolutely beyond all comparison; there is none other who can share his glory or power or dominion. And any person or group of persons who will not insist that all men, of whatsoever race or nation, shall leave their gods of wood and stone and their superstitions and false religions and bow in humble recognition of his sovereignty, are not worthy to bear his name.

The Harm and Their Bias

These men who have presumed to investigate missions without themselves having the missionary spirit are doing incalculable harm in the church, by influencing many of our splendid men and women of the church to lessen their ardor for the evangelization of the world. They are doing a great dis-service to the church at home and abroad. To verify this statement and to indicate something of the character of the survey made and the reaction of most of the missionaries abroad, we quote from The Presbyterian a paragraph from a report by the Japanese Mission of the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A., prepared by Mr. and Mrs. Gordon K. Chapman:

"One comments on the visits of the Fact Finders and the Appraisal Commission with some hesitation, for we would not for the world cast any unfair reflection upon them. The fact-finding investigation was undertaken under the general direction of Drs. Galen M. Fisher and Harvey H. Guy, both of whom were missionaries in Japan at one time. In addition to these, at least three other Fact Finders and five of the members of the Appraisal Commission were either ministers or else involved in full-time Christian work. Thus one could not help but wonder wherein this investigation was any more a lay effort than the numerous other inquiries which have been made in mission history. While doubtless it was too much to expect that the inquiry would be absolutely unbiased and without the interjection of personal opinions and convictions, and while the time allowed was far too short to carry through a thorough-going investigation and appraisal of the missionary enterprise, the fact was that the personal views of the commissioners largely gave direction and color to their activity in Japan. It was almost immediately apparent that at least one leader was very much predisposed toward the non-Christian religions of the land, and it was most difficult to get him to inspect Christian work. He gave the impression that he was out here mainly to study certain aspects of Buddhism, Shintoism, etc. Fact Finders resolved themselves into critics on occasion, and thus came to be dubbed 'fact-finders.' The efforts to secure conferences with individuals and groups which seemed likely to support the views of the inquirers was altogether too obvious. Their antipathy for doctrinal preaching and certain forms of evangelistic work was most apparent, and we personally know of very successful projects of this type which were completely ignored. Take the attitude of the Report toward non-Christian religions which sees them as allied with Christianity in the struggle against irreligion and which fails to properly distinguish between just any religion and God's supreme revelation to mankind. This general viewpoint of cooperation with non-Christians, of being 'brothers in a common quest,' etc., finds very little support either among the Japanese Christian leaders or mission workers in Japan. Thus the Commission does not base its recommendations with regard to the non-Christian religions on any consensus of opinion derived from Christians in Japan, but rather supports its own preconceived notion in this matter with an appeal to an isolated instance known as 'a venture of understanding,' which is featured in Chapter II of 'Re-Thinking Missions.' The fact is that aside from a questionnaire which was filled out in part or whole by a number of Christian workers, there was practically no effort made to get the opinion of the Christian Church at this point. Most missionaries saw little or nothing of these commissions, and in cases where various ones met them, there was apparently little effort made to ascertain the viewpoint of these workers with regard to the various problems. We had the privilege of meeting some of them at a tea party and also when a thirty-minute visit was paid to our seminary chapel service. Some of the generalizations which were based on such casual

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Not only young people but other readers as well will enjoy Brother E. M. Riddle's article, begun in this issue, dealing with the "Rise and Progress of Christian Endeavor in our Denomination." It was a national conference address, and will prove both informing and interesting.

Dr. Bame speaks a word about the new quarterlies. It was a means of encouragement to have the Boys' and Girls' quarterlies and the Youths' quarterlies all sold out during the two preceding quarters, though the House was sorry to have been compelled to disappoint some of the schools by being unable to fill their orders. A still larger edition has been printed this quarter so that it is not likely that any order will need go unfilled. Anticipate your school's growth and place a large order for supplies, both of quarterlies and Sunday school papers. You can't get better supplies elsewhere, nor any as good for Brethren schools.

It is an interesting letter that Mrs. Hattie Cope Sheldon writes this week regarding the progress of the Lord's work in and about the Bellevue station in French Equatorial Africa. In her opening paragraph she records a fact that pays high tribute to Christianity. The native Africans were afraid to eat with strangers before conversion to Christianity lest they be poisoned, but now that Christ dwells in their hearts by faith they trust one another, even though belonging to different tribes. It is true everywhere that Christ destroys, if he is really allowed to have his way, tribal and national and racial distinctions. Christians everywhere recognize each other as brothers and sisters in Christ. And people with that attitude can trust one another.

Brother R. Paul Miller, secretary-treasurer of the Home Mission Board, reports this week some items of interest relating to the business of that Board as transacted at Conference. Plans were laid for bringing home to every section of the brotherhood the importance of more generous support of national home missions in the immediate future. We sincerely hope these representatives of the Home Board will find ready response and that every district will do its utmost to prepare for a real supporting offering this November. Nothing is more important during the next few years than the launching of new preaching points and the building of new churches, and it is the obvious duty of every loyal Brethren to cooperate by giving this Board his wholehearted support.

The Pennsylvania conference will convene in Berlin, October 2 to 5. Brother W. C. Benschoff supplies us with the program in this issue. Brother N. V. Leatherman is the pastor of the entertaining church. Prof. M. A. Stuckey is to be the special Bible lecturer and speaker.

The Indiana district meeting is to be at Shipshewana Lake, beginning October 3. Announcement regarding conference and entertainment is in this paper, but the program has not yet arrived.

The Iliokota conference meets at Milledgeville, Illinois, October 10 to 12, the program for which is found in the news department. Dr. Charles A. Bame is to be the special out-of-the-district speaker.

The Mid-West district convenes in conference at Beaver City, Nebraska, October 10 to 12. The entertaining church having no pastor or preaching services, the Sunday school and the W. M. S. are assuming the entertaining responsibilities.

Two members of Ashland College faculty were honored by being given a place in the recently issued "biographical directory of 10,000 of those in North America who have done most to advance the cause of education, whether by teaching, by administration, by publication or research." President Edwin E. Jacobs and Dr. L. L. Garber are the two whose names were included in this publication entitled, "Leaders in Education." The volume is issued by Science Press, and contains brief biographies along with scholastic records and achievements of those chosen. Dr. Jacobs' place among the educational leaders is based on his deanship of Ashland College for seven years, his presidency of the school, and success in college administration, his successful teaching experience, his work with teachers' institutes and as a chautauqua lecturer, Fellow of the Geographical Society, member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts, London. Dr. Garber's recognition rests on his headship of the Normal Department of Ashland College in earlier years, his survey of schools in Ohio, five counties, in 1913, his headship of the English department of Kent State Normal, his work as superintendent of schools, his publications in the form of teachers' helps, his "The Educative Process in Religious Education" and "The Creative Study of Literature." The church as well as the college is to be congratulated on having such recognized leaders in the field of education, as well as others who are rapidly gaining such recognition.

A National Conference Program of Action

An aggressive, well-planned course of action that will get results

By Dr. Charles A. Bame,
Chairman Promotion Committee

"We believe that this time of apostate and lethargic Christianity among the churches generally is a most strategic time in our history for the promotion of New Testament Evangelism as interpreted by Brethren people and urge our churches and Districts to advance along these lines": Then follows the program as given in the "frame" as set on this page.

Without one dissenting voice, the National Conference of the Brethren Churches at Winona Lake put itself on record for what should be the most aggressive Home Mission Program ever attempted in our Brotherhood.

It has been made a most important item in the Moderator's Address. A similar program had been adopted with enthusiasm in the Ohio Conference at Dayton two months before. It had been voiced and stressed for many years as our one hope of progress and the background for all hope of measured advance in our own country.

It is well known that we are already overloaded with overhead as a people. It is only because of the heroic mold of many of our people that we have been able to maintain our status as a denomination during this time of stress and retreat in most denominations. More members make less overhead.

It was but five years ago that I had a conversation with a leader of another denomination as we conferred concerning another Cause. He asked: "How do you account for the present confusion of the people along almost every line of thought"? I answered: "Well, I believe, and our people believe, that Jesus will soon return to the earth to become its King and Ruler. Confusion will dominate the thinking preceding that time and we are surely enough confused. We await a Ruler who will rule in righteousness." He answered: "Well, I believe that too".

It must now be fifteen years ago that a young man asked me, "Shall I go into business, seeing the coming of the Lord seems to be so near"? I answered, "Surely, go into business; no one can tell the day nor the hour". He did and must have been able to do the Lord good service in these fifteen years of his earnings.

Only during this National Conference, a man who is contemplating uniting with our church but who is confused because of family hindrances asked me what I thought he should do. I answered, "I would not like to have my church letter in my pocket when Jesus comes." I believe it went home.

I have now reached the climax of my argument: even though the Lord should come before we have completed this program of advance, I'd rather be trying to enlarge his kingdom and winning men to Jesus Christ than sitting idly by or hoarding my money for a time of utter destruction. We'll only prove ourselves good Brethren if we are working.

I have been in many conferences on Evangelism and in great state conferences on Church Work in general and I profess boldly that I have never seen a better program for conquest than the one here outlined. I shall not rehearse the outline here again. Just look it over and pray about it and then, get busy in your own field.

If you have a church that needs a school for evangelism, ask for it. If a revival is needed, ask for that. If you know where a new Sunday school could be started or where you yourself, could start a Bible Class in a small nucleus near your home, get busy.

Let it be noted that this program stresses first, a revival in every congregation this year. But some one will ask, how can this be done? But that is a poor question to ask, or one easily answered, at least. Just get busy and work toward that end. Plan a campaign. Evangelists, as I know them, are ready to do this kind of work for the opportunity. There is small hope for many of our smaller groups unless we get busy and add new members. A program of evangelism can be promoted in every church if there is enough zeal to do it. Do it with the pastor if he will, or with an exchange if that seems better, but better still with a man whose experiences proves to you that he knows how to get it done. The objection that a church can not afford an evangelist no longer holds as can be proven by writing to the evangelist. Many of them will go now, without a guarantee. All should do so in this year of programmed evangelism. There is no point more needing stress than this: A REVIVAL IN EVERY CHURCH THIS YEAR.

Of course, this revival should be preceded by a school for evangelism. These ought to be in process of organization in each District NOW! But in case groups are too far apart for this, a school can be started in each congregation. One

PROGRAM OF EVANGELISM

This program shall give chief prominence to promote aggressively the winning of men to the church through New Testament Evangelism by fostering:

- 1—An Evangelistic Meeting in each congregation this year.
- 2—A Bible Institute in each church or group of churches properly situated.
- 3—A Lay-Visitation Campaign. (To be done by the Deacons or a group like the Seventy).
- 4—A School for Evangelism for all pastors and others who desire to carry forward a successful campaign.
- 5—Definite efforts to establish preaching places or Bible Study Classes in at least TEN new Communities in each District.

successful evangelist in a group for a single day could tell folks how to get things done and a day of this sort of study would work wonders in many a campaign. But most of our churches are so grouped that several could meet in a few inspirational sessions and the spiritual members would doubtless respond to a call for service if they can be brought to realize that the whole brotherhood is working in the same effort. Ohio will soon be called for such a meeting to perfect the organization and exchange ideas as to the most important and strategic phases to advance.

Promotion Day in each congregation might be the first rally of the churches this fall. Get the best man in the group to rouse the people to action by stressing these points one by one and I can conceive of no better way to arouse the people to action than by letting them know that this is to be a year of aggressive action in Evangelism. Pastors will please take note of this suggestion at once.

Finally, let me stress sacrifice on the part of the men of our denomination to put money in the background and go everywhere and anywhere in this campaign of arousal and enlistment. It can be done. There is no other alternative.

Church Conferences meeting this fall should take some action concerning this program. If the Conference is past, then the duty devolves on the Board of Evangelists to start things in their Districts. Surely, Moderators of Conferences have some responsibility in this matter. "Action, and action now," has been the key-word of our government and, right or wrong, we surely have had action so swift that few of us can realize what all has happened, but all—every home and business—are supposed to have the NRA Blue Eagle in it by now, or have refused it. ACTION AND ACTION NOW, IS THE WATCHWORD OF OUR NEW ADVANCE. "Onward, Christian soldiers!"

Some Impressions of the 1933 Conference

By George C. Pontius, Pastor of the Roann, Indiana, Brethren Church

Another year's work has been added to the history of the Brethren Church, but better, than the history that has been added to the record, are the impressions that have been written on the hearts of men and women. That such impressions have been written cannot be denied. No one could have been in attendance at these sessions without having lasting impressions to carry away with them. Just what was uppermost in the minds of the many hearers would be pretty hard to say. But to those who for many years have watched the growth and strides of our beloved denomination this year's conference was certainly significant.

Can we be blamed, if we, as we heed the world events and as we watch the deliberations of various churches, say that we listened with great concern to the reports of our various activities and as we listened to the various programs that were given? Was our program to pass without the devil taking some part in forcing his way in and making some feel that the Brethren church was going backward and losing some of the ideals and doctrines that we have held dear for many long years?

But, Praise the Lord, we stood true. Not one note of modernism, not one atom of compromise with worldliness; not one change in the policies and doctrines that are dear to all Brethren people; not one change in the message that we carry to those who are lost; not one bit of retrenchment in our mission endeavor! On all these we stood firm and in instances even planned advancement.

Every sermon, every Bible lecture, rang true to "the faith". The added afternoon Bible lecture hour proved a source of real inspiration to all who attended. And the delegates were loyal, loyal not only to the inspirational programs but to the programs devoted to our denominational interests as well. On a program that was crowded to the limit, it seemed that pleasure was a secondary matter and the week's service was climaxed with a wonderful Sunday service.

So, another year has passed. Another year is before us. May the Brethren Church continue to remain faithful. May we profit by our past mistakes. May we go on giving to a lost world the message of life. We thank God for the Brethren Church: for the Brethren ministry and for the loyalty of Brethren people.

The Bible Lectures at Conference

By Delbert B. Flora, Pastor of the Brethren Church of Muncie, Indiana

Surely the Brethren Church can be proud of her message to the world as sounded out during the periods given over to Bible lectures at the General Conference which has just convened. Our beloved brotherhood still believes in the Old Book which has withstood so many storms and the passage of so many centuries. The message came from that Book in certain tones and uncompromising language. It came that way because the Author of the Book expected it so to be broadcast and because the lecturers recognized that fact. They believed (and still believe) Christ meant what he said when he said, "Go . . . and preach the Gospel." What courage we ought to take unto ourselves when we find there are yet men who are not afraid to "preach the Gospel"! How we ought to "preach the Gospel" from every pulpit of the Brotherhood! And if we really "preach the Gospel" as sincerely and uncompromisingly and zealously as it was heralded from the Conference platform, the world will beat a path to the door of the Brethren Church. And how dare we do less when Christ commands?

Muncie, Indiana.

All real and wholesome enjoyments possible to man have been just as possible to him since first he was made of the earth as they are now; and they are possible to him chiefly in peace. To watch the corn grow, and the blossoms set; to draw hard breath over plowshare or spade; to read, to think, to love, to hope, to pray—these are the things that make men happy. Now and then a wearied king, or a tormented slave, found out where the true kingdoms of the world were, and possessed himself, in a furrow or two of garden ground, of a truly infinite dominion.—John Ruskin.

The Privilege of Drawing Near to God

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

Draw near to God, and he shall draw near to Thee" (Jas. 4:8). Who, when he came and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

If even Saul of old could say: "Let us draw near hither unto God" (1 Samuel 14:36) in order that he might ask counsel of him, how much greater is our privilege and our responsibility in drawing near to him!

Indeed we may declare with the Psalmist (73:28): "But it is good for me to draw near to God. I have put my trust in the Lord that I may declare all thy works."

Tonight we are privileged to be missionaries, ambassadors of Christ, declaring his works. But we could not be thus privileged had the call not come to us early, perhaps even in childhood, to draw near to him. It is told of Adam Clarke, the great Bible expositor, that even when a small boy, clerking in an English haberdasherie, he had drawn so near to God, that he refused to assist the proprietor in stretching cotton goods beyond their actual length. For this refusal he received his discharge and found God in faithfulness drawing nigh to him. *

Thus Adam Clarke chose early in his career to draw near, positively unto God, loving him not alone "in word or in tongue but in deed and in truth" (1 John 3:18). For there is a negative manner of professing to draw near, to which human nature is not a stranger. Isaiah (Ch. 29: v. 13) rebuked those of his day who drew near to the Lord with their mouth, who honored him with their lips, but who had removed their hearts far from him, and whose fear toward God is taught by the precept of men. We praise God, however, that there is also a positive manner of approaching God, a manner with which the human heart is also acquainted. We read of this manner in Jeremiah 30:21: "For who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me, saith the Lord." How many a young man seeks the heart of some beloved one: who became literally his "sweet-heart," because in accepting him she has not only given him her hand, but also her heart, actually engaging her heart to the one who has sought her. In the same tender manner our Heavenly Father would have us, as we draw near to him, engage our hearts unto him.

"Let us therefore draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience and our bodies washed with pure water."

How blessed, that he does not leave us comfortless, but that we may have engaged hearts, that we may have true hearts, and that in these frail hearts, engaged to him, and true to him, we may have an absolutely full assurance, confident of his love and rejoicing in his faithfulness.

For just as an earthly fiancée redeems his promise to his beloved, so, our God draws nigh unto our souls and redeems them even as we confide in him.

We have striven to draw near, we have longed that we might do so through our obedience to his laws—only to find that the "law hath made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by the which we draw nigh to God." In our poverty we have barely accepted salvation, but we have felt we must provide for our spiritual life through our own works. How few frail morals are willing to trust him for all. It is said that a man recently crossed on one of the great Atlantic liners, but provided crackers and cheese for his diet. On the last day, passing the kitchen, his hunger was aggravated by the smell of roast turkey. He made bold to inquire of the steward the price of a meal and was told that all the abundance of the ship's bountiful table might have been his. How often HE would have fed us with the finest of wheat, how often HE would have satisfied us with honey out of the rock! (Psalms 81:16). Truly we may exclaim with the Psalmist: "Oh, Lord of hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee."

As we look back upon the heroes who throughout the ages have drawn near to God, we realize how necessary we are in that perfect consummation of God's plan for the church when we read in Hebrews 11:39 and 40:

"And these all, having obtained a good report through faith received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect."

Faintly there is borne in upon us some of the happiness of his continual presence.

"Then", as we read in Isaiah 58:14, "we shall delight ourselves in the Lord, and he will cause us to ride upon the high places of the earth." For in his presence is fullness of joy, and at his right hand are pleasures forevermore." But what is "joy"? Some one has said: "It is only as we delight in Jesus that we can ascertain the meaning of joy. Which is first Jesus—then Others—then lastly Yourself, thus forming an indelible acrostic for our memories.

As long as I live my heart shall delight in the majesty of the 37th Psalm, especially the fourth verse: "Delight thyself also in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart."

As we delight in him we come to realize that God our Father is the great first cause. For did not Jesus himself say as recorded in John 6:44: "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day."

And yet so inseparably one are God the Father and God the Son that in John 12:32 we read: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

There are many combinations of letters and figures found in dealing with locks. There was a lock which only one combination of letters would open. Those letters spelled the name of Jesus. Oh, may it be true of our hearts tonight, locked though they may be with a difficult combination that one name and only one will open them, and that the name of Jesus!

In Isaiah 5:19 we find the words: "And let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw near that we may know it."

In his majesty and wisdom God transcends his creatures. We cannot take the ground that we will not believe him because we cannot understand him, for, as a man once said to his friend, "We must expect to let God know some things which we do not understand." Yet, though we do not understand all, may we yet believe all and may we enter upon the business of this Conference with the earnest prayer that the "counsel of God may draw nigh unto us."

Ten years ago tonight the founder of the Oubangui-Chari mission lay dying. Throughout his brief and troublous life, he had resolutely drawn near to God. And now in the last hours of his life as he felt God drawing infinitely near to him, his prayer was that the Lord might come quickly to claim his completed bride. And so, praying repeatedly, "Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly," his prayer was heard. Without us, and without the remnant of the completed church he shall not be made perfect, but the last name on his life in time was the first on his tongue in eternity. He had drawn nigh. May we too be faithful until he comes or calls, conscious that we have been instruments, magnetized by the Holy Spirit for the drawing near of others to our Lord.

THE TROUBLES IN SPAIN

Spain has for centuries been the most dominantly Roman Catholic country in the world. Until recently Protestant churches were forbidden, and it was against the law to sell a Bible in the land. Since the overthrow of the monarchy, the country has been rapidly swinging away from Catholicism. Protestant churches are permitted under certain restrictions, and the sale of the Bible allowed. Recently the government passed a Religious Orders Bill which provides for opening seven thousand public schools with teachers who are not clerics, and taking away from the Roman Catholic clerical orders the right to teach in the public schools. This has called out fierce resentment from the Vatican at Rome. The pope has pronounced the legislation to be 'A Masterpiece of Iniquity in the sight of God and man,' has excommunicated all the members of the Spanish government connected with the movement, and called upon the people of Spain to resist the new legislation by every legal method. Evidently the Roman Catholic Church is true to its ancient motto, 'Ever and everywhere the same.' The leader of the Roman Catholic party in Spain says that the separation of church and state in that country may actually benefit the former by making religion more spiritual. He says religion had become a mere formula and was exercising but little influence upon the lives of the people.—J. D. Rankin in United Presbyterian.

THE POPE'S HOLY YEAR

Each year Toronto has a Sunday parade of the Roman Catholic Holy Name Society. With the primary aim of the Society no right-thinking Protestant would quarrel. Generally however, the parade is climaxed with a fervent sermon extolling Romanism as the only hope of the world. This year was no exception in that respect. When the parade was held recently, Rev. J. B. O'Reilly preached the sermon. He said in part: "The historical event of paramount importance in the annals of religious history for this year of grace 1933 is undoubtedly the solemn promulgation by our Holy Father Pius XI of an extraordinary jubilee year commemorating the nineteenth centenary of the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour."

No doubt Mr. O'Reilly believes this. but he will have a job convincing the rest of the world not under the Roman See that this is true. As an event of "historic importance" the encyclical issued by the Pope this year will have little influence on this or succeeding generations. Historically, as a matter of fact, the inauguration of 1933 as a jubilee year is wrong. There are few scholars today who will admit that this present year is one thousand, nine hundred and thirty-three years since the Saviour was born. All the evidence points the other way. Secular history for one thing can confirm the time of the death of Herod the Great as before A.D. 1, and we know that our Lord was born before he died. And what is this "Holy year" to consist of? The making of pilgrimages to Rome if possible, and the granting of so many indulgences for so many visits to so many shrines. That will, no doubt, bring large revenues into the coffers of Rome, but as influencing the course of human events it will have as much effect on the history of our times as any other of the Pope's encyclicals have done. "Today two paths lie open before the modern man," the speaker went on to say, "one leading to chaos, the other to Catholic Christianity." Had he said, "Evangelical Christianity" we would have accepted this statement. Roman Catholicism will never solve the problems of this world. The Evangel of the Grace of God can and will.—Evangelical Christian.

meetings, however, were most amazing indeed. The moderator of this presbytery, in characterizing the activity of the Layman's Inquiry, said: 'It reminds me of an American moving picture company. The plot is conceived in America and then the directors come to Japan to select a suitable cast and film the play. Under these circumstances, unless one can fit into their previously conceived plot, he is ignored and left out.'

II Corinthians

"God effects all—that the spirit aspires to
Is by him consummated,
And all signs that are like seed
Scattered 'mongst regions of dark heathenfolk,
Will one day wave in ears of gold.
The heartfelt supplication—in eternity Receives its answer through the Lord."

"Therefore I write these things being absent, lest being present I should use sharpness, according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification, and not to destruction." (II Cor. 13: 10).

Occasionally it becomes necessary for even modest, meek, and gracious men to defend themselves against misinformation and misinterpretation. Such a man was St. Paul, the pioneer missionary preacher of righteousness, slave of the Savior, and defender of the faith.

Strange as it may seem, the world always has had and always will have gossip-mongers and idle tale bearers. The best men of history have been the targets of pernicious and destructive criticism. Unscrupulous men and women—America has a veritable horde of them—persist in lampooning maliciously the characters of our great and worthy Christian people. No truly great man can escape the spurious and uncertain mouthings of the incompetent and low-brow element of society.

Pertinent Examples

Witness the meek Moses and the puritanic Joseph subject to abuse and calumny! Watch Elijah, accused of being one "that troubleth Israel." Of John the Baptist it was said, "He hath a devil," while Jesus, to whom he pointed, was labeled as a "gluttonous man and a wine-bibber." Augustine, Calvin, Luther, Jonathan Edwards, George Whitefield, Billy Sunday, and others, have had their earnest and sincere motives questioned and their characters besmirched time and time again.

Shall men always accept criticism graciously and never respond? By no means. When it becomes necessary for a man to speak in self-defense, let him speak. Billy Sunday says: "They say I stroke the fur the wrong way. I say let the cat turn around." Not all men are so aggressive and dramatic as the dynamic Billy Sunday, but who is not for him when he is held up to ridicule and scorn by some of the rotten press-agents of our day.

"They say! What say they?—let them say,"—is the best possible attitude for men to take in the face of much criticism. Silence is sometimes very, very golden indeed. To refute some sneers would be to arouse another. Sometimes it is best to entrust our case and our cause to God and God alone.

"What idle whispers here concern thee aught!
Follow thou me, nor heed what others say;
Be like a tower that never stoops its head,
Bellow the tempests fiercely as they may."

It has been said that a certain eminent man of yesterday treasured up in a book all the fierce attacks which were made upon his name. He never answered one of them, never spoke a good or ill word concerning them, but he kept the volume for the amusement of his friends. Better still is the remark of Archbishop Tillotson: "They cannot harm me by what they say of me. I am too near the great white throne for that."

Well, what has all this to do with II Corinthians? Simply this, Paul once found it necessary (not only once, however) to take a stand in defense of himself and his conduct before the entire Church of God which he was instrumental in establishing in Corinth. Let us investigate the situation.

The Second Epistle

Having written the first letter to Corinth, sending it by Titus' hand, Paul departed from Ephesus early in the spring of 57 A. D. to Troas on a preaching tour. He planned to meet Titus there. Titus, being greatly delayed, caused Paul much grief and anxiety; consequently he crossed the Aegean sea to meet him. At Philippi they met eventually (2 Cor. 2:12, 13; 7:5, 6). Paul was, no doubt, ill in body by that time (2 Cor. 1:8-10).

Titus assured Paul that his first letter was well received, that the offending culprit was now repentant. But there was a new danger—Judaizing teachers fresh from Jerusalem were hounding his footsteps with another gospel, denouncing, of course, his apostleship, and building up a hostile party to him.

Consequently, he wrote a second epistle to do the following things:

1. To explain his delayed visit to them.
2. To praise them for accepting his first letter.
3. To recommend the restoration of the repentant brothers.
4. To warn the carnal, unrepentant people.
5. To advise against the false teachers.
6. To vindicate his apostleship.
7. To urge the collection of money for the Jerusalem saints.

Someone has said that this epistle "resembles an African river. For a time, it flows smoothly on, and one is hopeful of a satisfactory analysis, then suddenly there comes a mighty cataract and a terrific upheaval, when the great depths of his heart are broken up." Certainly this is a very true observation, but is it not an excellent thing to witness the innermost emotions of a good man's life now and then? It keeps life interesting and plucks us out of the ruts.

In spite of the so-called diversity of structure in this letter, there is a unity manifest in it which another has partially outlined in this way:

- I Explanation. (A day and Sufferings) 1-7.
- II Exhortation. (Liberality and Collection) 8-9.
- III Vindication. (Dignity and Authority) 10-13.

The Gospel Ministry

Dr. W. G. Moorehead, the former Xenia Seminary Bible expositor, caught one of the main ideas of this epistle when he outlined (4-5:11-20) the conception Paul had of the Gospel ministry. It is the ministry within the church to which the apostle referred.

"(a) Its august names and titles: 'ministry of reconciliation,' 'ambassadors for Christ,' 'Entreating for God' (v. 18, 20).

- (b) Its one exalted theme, Christ Jesus the Lord (iv: 5, 6).
- (c) Its supreme object and aim, "manifestation of the truth" (iv: 2-4).
- (d) Its mighty motive, the constraining love of Christ (v:14).
- (e) Its impelling principle, unwavering faith (iv:13).
- (f) Its unfaltering steadfastness (iv:1, 2).
- (g) Its weakness and its power (iv:7).
- (h) Its manly straightforwardness (iv:2-4).
- (i) Its sufferings and triumphs, its defeats and victories (iv: 8-12).
- (j) Its glorious rewards (iv:17, 18).

There is passionate intensity, a kind of extravagance in the words of iv:17, 18. Antithesis, comparison, and pleonasm, as grammarians name it, are pressed into service to express fitly something of the surpassing glory awaiting the faithful servants of God." "Affliction" is set over against "glory," "light" against "weight" "for a moment" against "eternal." And then the glory is described by four remarkable terms, "a far more exceeding." It is next to impossible to turn into adequate English these strange, pregnant terms of the Apostle. Here are some attempts: "Over measure an everlasting burthen into highness of glory" (Wiclif); "above measure exceedingly" (Douay Bible); "beyond measure excellent" (Diodati); "in a surpassing and still more surpassing manner" (Alford); "in excess unto excess" (Farrar); "in excess into superfluity and eternal weight of glory." Paul heard when caught up into Paradise "unspeakable words," or "wordless words." Here he strives and struggles to utter some of those matchless words. We honor the sublimity most by our thoughtful silence. A little joy enters into us while we are here in the world; we shall enter into joy when there. A few drops here, a whole ocean there."

The Ministry of Tribulation and Comfort

"We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the exceeding greatness of the power may be of God, and not from ourselves; we are pressed on every side, yet not straitened; perplexed, yet not unto despair; pursued, yet not forsaken; smitten down, yet not destroyed; always bearing about in the body the dying of Jesus, that the life also of Jesus may be manifested in our body."

"In everything commending ourselves, as ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings, in pureness, in knowledge, in long suffering, in kindness, in the Holy Ghost, in love unfeigned, in the word of truth, in the power of God; by the armour of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, by glory and dishonor, by evil report and good report; as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

"I take pleasure in weaknesses, in injuries, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake; for when I am weak, then am I strong."

"These are the experiences of the Christian ministry," so Dr. G. Campbell Morgan writes. Continuing he observes and rightly: "There is experience in tribulation. That is a subject not perhaps to be dealt with in detail in the great assembly; yet one which we all need to face. Is it not true that the Word of God only becomes truly quick and powerful, full of solace and help, when spoken by such as have suffered? I say this, not that any should seek the pathway of suffering, but that the man to whom is committed the preaching of the Word, and who is in the midst of buffeting and bruising and suffering, may know that by such processes the Word of God from his lips will become quick and powerful. I had a young friend who was brought to God, through his good grace, by my ministry. He devoted himself to the ministry. I never heard him preach until his college days were over. Then his sermon was wonderful, brilliant, sparkling in cloquence. When it was over and we were in the private seclusion of home, I asked my wife what she thought of the sermon. Her reply was: It was wonderful; but it will be better when he has had some trouble. I never heard him again until he had stood by the side of a grave, and his heart had been smitten; and oh, the difference! It is through tribulation that the Word of God becomes powerful. I think I would hardly dare to write that, but it may be that some brother in the ministry may read this, who is in trouble. God help you, my brother! It is by the pressure on the earthen vessel that the light flames through. It is by the hour of sorrow that we become instruments able to convey to the people of God the message that heals and helps."

The Church Exalted

Ours is a day in which the church universal is derided, despised, and manled beyond measure. Though imperfect, let us remember she is still the Bride of Christ. When she is criticized because of her preachers and servants—all are imperfect to be sure and liable to error—before the modern youth of modern America, let us not forget that Christ is being criticized in his work too. He it is who walks among the churches. Therefore, let us exalt the Church, let us sing her praises, let us do her work today "for the night cometh when no man can work."

SOME EARLY LEADERS OF ISRAEL

Golden Text: Ephesians 6:10

MONDAY

Joshua Succeeds Moses. Joshua 1:1-9

The outstanding leaders of Israel have been brought before us in our Sunday school lessons for the past three months, and we have followed them from the period of the invasion and conquest of Canaan under Joshua to the dedication of the temple at Jerusalem under Solomon.

Throughout all this period the thought of the golden text was the secret of every victory, and when Joshua succeeded Moses his only hope of conquest was to be found in his trusting in the Lord and in the strength of his might.

TUESDAY

Caleb's Inheritance. Joshua 14:6-14

All inheritances are not good. Many a man or woman has been ruined by an inheritance. Sometimes it is an inheritance of contaminated wealth, and at other times it is an inheritance of contaminated body, or sometimes even of mind. Blessed is that one who receives a good inheritance.

Caleb's inheritance would not appear as something to be greatly desired by one who was lacking faith in God, but though the country seemed hard to win, it had been promised Caleb by Jehovah and he had faith to believe it could be won and that it would be worth while.

Deborah's Victory. Judges 4:11-16

Deborah was a remarkable woman in more ways than one, and she showed her great versatility, first by dispensing real justice to a people as a judge in Israel, and then stirred her people to a patriotism that was far more genuine than any "ballyhoo" about the NRA can arouse in the minds of the American people, and with the aid of Balak and the power of Jehovah, in whom she trusted, she won that signal victory over the oppressors of Israel that will ever remain as one of the outstanding achievements of human conflict.

Samuel's Vision. 1 Samuel 3:1-10

It is an old Biblical saying that "Where no vision is, the people perish." Israel was rapidly approaching a downfall at the time of Samuel's birth, because neither people nor priest had any true vision of God and his relation to the people whom he had created.

While the child Samuel was attending upon the wants of the priest Eli God spoke to him. It was a divine call, and by listening and then by heeding he became the last and the greatest of the judges of Israel and also one of the outstanding characters of all time.

FRIDAY

David Chosen King. 1 Samuel 16:4-13

Saul was a king after the desires of the people, but he proved entirely unsatisfactory to Jehovah. A successor must be chosen from a family that manifested a more worshipful attitude. David had this family background, and thus he had a good start in life. He had a good home in a good community, and Samuel the prophet in his search for a successor to Saul was divinely led to the home of this modest shepherd lad who was so soon to be raised to such an exalted position, as king of Israel.

SATURDAY

Solomon, the Wise King. 1 Kings 3:1-9

In every age the world has needed wise rulers, and especially is this true in this present age, in which confusion is rampant all the world.

Perhaps the confusion was less at the time Solomon was made king of Israel, but he had occasion to call all his powers into action to meet the needs of his day. In his own strength or his wisdom he could not have succeeded; but trusting in Jehovah and praying to him he was enabled to win for himself and his kingdom a name that surpassed that of any other in the period in which he ruled.

SUNDAY

Triumphs of Faith. Hebrews 11:32 to 12:2

The writer of the book of Hebrews, after recounting the many achievements of faith in the first thirty one verses of the eleventh chapter, seems to pause a moment for breath, and then adds in the next verse, "And what shall I more say? For the time will fail me if I tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah; of David and Samuel and the prophets, etc."

This is a marvellous chapter and should be read frequently when one is inclined to become discouraged, and to wonder whether it is really worth while after all to continue steadfast in the face of the many difficulties that constantly appear in the pathway of life.

The Rise and Progress of Christian Endeavor in Our Denomination

By E. M. Riddle, President Brethren National Christian Endeavor Union

(Address at National Conference)

The Christian Endeavor organization opens this series of evening services for the week with each auxiliary of the church using the opening hour of each evening.

It is surely needless to say to a Brethren audience that the Christian Endeavor organization is a YOUTH MOVEMENT, now fifty-two years old. This movement originated in Portland, Maine, during the pastorate of the late Dr. Francis E. Clark. However, so far as I have been able to glean facts, and I have written rather widely securing my information for this message, we can well afford to consider next year, 1934, as our 40th anniversary of Christian Endeavor in our own church.

My information concerning the Rise and Early History of Christian Endeavor comes directly from men who had to do with the early life of the organization with us. Under date of March 18th, this year, our brother, Dr. C. F. Yoder writes, "I became pastor at Warsaw, Indiana, in 1894 and organized a Christian Endeavor society. It was the first, so far as I know, in the brotherhood, although one at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania was organized about the same time. Near the same date Elder J. O. Talley, pastor at Milledgeville, Illinois, organized what he called the "King's Children's Society" and when in 1896 the question of Young People's work came up in the National Conference, he insisted on a denominational society, while I (Dr. Yoder) advocated co-operation with the Endeavor movement. However Brother Talley had badges made and literature printed for "The King's Children's Society", which flourished for a few years, then changed to Christian Endeavor which gradually came to prevail over the Brotherhood."

Parenthetically, may we suggest that this bit of information is worth while for the Warsaw church, and most certainly in the years to come they will in some way take recognition of the fact.

A letter dated March 3rd, from Dr. W. D. Furry, president of Shorter College and some years ago president of Ashland College, writes me almost identically as did Dr. Yoder concerning Brother Talley's movement known as the King's Children. His letter says, "Dr. Charles Yoder and myself felt quite certain that our young people ought to have fellowship with the world movement and sought in every way to have affiliation with it without losing our denominational distinctiveness." Further, he says, "After some years of quiet effort Dr. Yoder was made president and succeeded in having the name changed to 'King's Children of Christian Endeavor.' This title was acceptable to the leaders of Christian Endeavor movement and we at once began to affiliate with the organization. It was my pleasure to work with the young people of the church and during my term of presidency I saw wonderful changes in the attitude of our young people toward the life and work of the denomination."

Our work, as has that of every organization, has been retarded financially, as you would well expect but from every other angle it is on the upgrade and making good time. Brother A. B. Cover of California writes, "Christian Endeavor is well organized in our entire state. The work in our own church is of high order and well organized." He further says, "In our own church, we have adult, Young People, Intermediate and Junior societies and a Signal Light group (Little primary folks). What is true of our church is true of the others of our brotherhood. Our work is recognized by the county and district."

From the great North-west Brother Albert Lantz writes of the growth of their Christian Endeavor work. "Spokane Endeavorers are wide awake," he says. His wife is president of the city union. This city union will entertain the state convention in 1934. Their own society has made a big growth.

From Pennsylvania there comes to me excellent reports. No finer piece of work could hardly be offered than that carried on among our churches in the vicinity of Johnstown. There are too many really active Endeavorers in this locality for me to dare to name one. They have had their own Christian Endeavor paper for some time, for which I have written on different occasions.

You will be satisfied, I think, if I refrain from mentioning other churches, states and districts, as much as I would like to talk with you about Maryland, Ohio, Indiana and Iowa Endeavorers, with whom I have labored. However, I do want to speak of our foreign societies. In South America Dr. Yoder says that he organized the first Christian Endeavor society in Argentina, that in Rio Cuarto, the first in any denomination, although there are a good many in and around Buenos Aires now. Then in Africa, a recent message from Brother Hathaway says: "We have nothing known as Christian Endeavor on our Mission Field as yet. We attempt to develop the same gifts of leadership in our natives through our Fisherman's club, which takes our Christians to and before the heathen in the village, rather than before a Christian group as does the Christian Endeavor. We have one leader with several speakers at these meetings."

around the Poste but the most of them prefer our services.

It is raining so much these days and how we do praise the Lord for it! The natives around here are reduced to semi-starvation about half the time. Kaffir corn is their main food and since they raise only enough to last about six months, they have to starve the other six. There is no overproduction in this land! No need to burn up wheat or other food! Of course these people wouldn't be so foolish as not to share what they have with others. The villagers don't like to eat manioc at this time of the year. They say it will make them get fat around their knees! Many of the old tribal customs and taboos are breaking down among our Christians.

Every night we hear people blowing their horns all through the night. They are not passing motorists, neither are they fog horns, but I suppose you would call them "Hippopotamus horns." We live on the bank of the Ouham River and the natives have their gardens all along the river. At night the hippos come out on land to graze on whatever they can find. Now when a hippo walks through your corn patch there isn't much corn left! His feet tramp down what he doesn't eat. The natives have found that by blowing their horns intermittently during the night, that they can scare the hippos away. We used to be permitted to shoot them, but now we cannot without a special permit.

We covet your prayers as we labor here for the Master.

In his Name,

HATTIE COPE SHELDON.

In breaking the Commandments we do not destroy them; we destroy our own souls.

From the Bellevue Station in French Equatorial Africa

Bellevue, A. E. F.
July 11, 1933.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Since last writing you we attended conference at the Yaloke Station from May 29 to June 9. It was a blessed time of prayer and fellowship and I am sure we all came home with more power to perform our tasks because of the strength received. The native Christians also held a conference at the same time. Meeting and fellowshiping together is comparatively new for them, for just a few years ago they feared to eat with another tribe, for they thought the stranger might put poison in their food.

Just after the conference Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Miss Bickel left for furlough, sailing from Kribi, June 25th. Miss Tyson came to the Bellevue Station to care for the dispensary and Miss Patterson returned to Yaloke. Mr. and Mrs. Foster also moved to the Yaloke Station to care for the work during Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway's absence.

School opened here July 3rd, just one day more than seven years ago, the work was begun on the station. The natives have constantly prayed for a school and when Miss Crawford came forth they saw their prayers answered. She has started with about 75, but expects to eliminate some during the next few weeks.

The Bible reading classes continue to progress. Some chapters of the Gospel of Mark have been completed and mimeographed and they are now studying them. How thankful we are that they have started on the Word which will light their way. We had hoped to have the Gospel of Mark completed by now but so far we are still re-correcting it. It is a difficult task to translate when the language must be reduced to writing at the same time.

Our chapel work continues to prosper. Recently we dedicated the chapel at Bos-sangoa. Most of the people who had been attending the Catholic chapel come to ours

now. The Priest passed this morning to visit the chapel (the one at Bozoum also cares for the work at our Poste). I suppose he will try to intimidate the people so they won't attend ours. The Catholics claim most all of the educated class of natives

News from the Recent Home Mission Board Sessions

By R. Paul Miller, Secretary-Treasurer of Home Mission Board

Three new members were elected to the membership of the board by conference. Edward H. Wolfe, a layman, Moderator of the First Brethren Church of Philadelphia; Willis Ronk, pastor of the Brethren Church at Meyersdale, Penna.; and Kenneth Monroe of the faculty of Ashland Seminary. Each of these men is strong in his own field and, we believe, will prove of great help in our Board's work. They were chosen to replace three of our members who, in recent years, have found it almost impossible to attend our Board sessions, namely, N. P. Egin, of Hamlin, Kansas; J. Wesley Platt, of Manteca, California; and Mrs. Mary Wenger of Dayton, who had resigned.

In view of the serious situation confronting Home Mission Work, and the vital need of an enlarged Thanksgiving offering at once it was decided that members of the Board should undertake to stress the work in their own sections, as follows:

Southern Indiana—Freeman Ankrum.
Northern Indiana—S. M. Whetstone.
Southern California—A. B. Cover.
Northern California—R. Paul Miller.
Northwest—R. Paul Miller.
Southeastern—Frank G. Coleman.
Eastern Pennsylvania—W. C. Benshoff.
Western Pennsylvania—Claude Studebaker.

Northern Ohio—George C. Carpenter.
Southern Ohio—Roy A. Patterson.
Southwestern—Mrs. L. G. Wood.
Illiokota—C. C. Grisso.

Each member is also assigned an article to prepare for the Witness during the coming year, on some special angle of Home Missions.

It was decided to merge the Brethren Witness with all other Brethren publications in a new and improved arrangement of the Evangelist. It being understood that one issue each month of the new magazine will be published as a Home Missions Number containing ten pages of distinctive Home Mission material. The carrying out of the new program to be brought about by a new Publication Board of eleven members including two voting members from each additional Board entering the merger. Freeman Ankrum, Vice President, and R. Paul Miller, Secretary-Treasurer of our Board were chosen to act on the new Publication Board.

It was further decided to defer the receiving of homeless children at Riverside Institute, Kentucky, for one year, but that the Missionary work now going on there should be pressed in view of the splendid progress recorded in the short time since possession of our buildings there had been regained.

It was decided that the Board should meet on Friday, Saturday, and Monday preceding next National Conference, and that the members should pay all their own expenses thus incurred.

Further reductions were made in operating expenses and all other allowances in the endeavor to keep within the reduced income of the Board.

The Foundation Builders Banks are to be distributed on May first of each year instead of January first as originally planned.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON

Song, "Tis So Sweet to Trust in Jesus" opened the song service. Devotions were conducted by Norman Uphouse, who read Mt. 6:1-17 and led audibly in prayer. Prof. M. A. Stuckey had charge of the Bible Lecture hour which was occupied by a careful study of "Prayer." The afternoon hour concluded with prayer by Bertram King.

WEDNESDAY EVENING

After the usual spirited song service God's guidance was invoked upon the evening program by Chas. Bame. The Sunday School interests were considered and discussed. S. M. Whetstone presented "Some Needs of Brethren Young people." Conference joined in singing heartily the Doxology. The second address was delivered by Kenneth Monroe on the subject, "The Art of Sunday School Teaching."

A vocal duet was rendered by Miss Vada Grisso and Robert Ashman.

The last message of the day was preached by A. T. Wirick upon the theme, "A Whale of a Difference or a Modern Jonah." The services concluded with singing, "I Love to Tell the Story" and the prayer and benediction by L. S. Bauman.

THURSDAY MORNING

Conference business convened by singing "The Way of the Cross Leads Home." Everett Niswonger read Eph. 1:3-14 and made the morning prayer. An additional report of the credential committee revealed the presence of 73 Ministerial and 126 lay or a total of 199 credentials. The report was duly received. Minutes of the former session of business were read and approved. Conference granted a request of the Brethren Home Board the election of Dr. J. A. Miller and A. V. Kimmell to succeed themselves for a period of five years. The following persons were elected to the same Board, for three years—W. S. Whetstone, W. C. Benshoff, Freeman Ankrum; for two years—Geo. Carpenter; for one year, R. Paul Miller. Two new members for three years—Kenneth Monroe, Willis Ronk; one new member for one year, Ed. Wolf.

Conference moved, seconded and passed that The General Conference of the Brethren Church hereby authorize the Board of Trustees of the Brethren Home, a Corporation under the laws of Ohio and a cooperating Board of this Conference, in order to meet certain pressing financial obligations, to make a loan or loans not to exceed $5,000.00, and that said Board be and is hereby empowered to negotiate such loans and execute the necessary instruments therefor.

A Resolution

Whereas there seems to be a needed change in the matter relating to the raising and distribution of funds for the Superannuated Ministers, and, realizing that the interests of this Board is closely related to that of the Brethren's Home Board, and, feeling that the whole matter of Benevo-

The request to have Norman Kimmell to succeed himself and the election of Ira Wilcox and A. L. Lynn to the Publication Board was granted. A motion prevailed that the Committee on Committees appoint a permanent committee on "Ways and Means" to discern the feasibility of combining all reports under one cover and report at this conference.

Following prayer by H. F. Stuckman, A. J. McClain presented a very fruitful study of "The Threefold Christian Sanctification."

lences should be under one head and, because there has been a call from the general church body for consolidation of these interests—

Be it therefore resolved:

1. That the Board known as the Benevolent Board of the Brethren church be hereby abolished.

Frank Roscoe, Treas.

The report of the Committee on the Moderator's address was read and accepted as follows:

Report of Committee on Moderator's Address

Your committee hereby recommends:

1. That we commend the entire address for its fine Christian spirit, its loyalty to the Word of God and Brethren ideals, its comprehensiveness, and its appeal to greater devotion and sacrifice on the part of every member of the church, ministry and laity.

2. That greater emphasis and more loyal support be pledged to all of our mission interests, without which the church cannot long exist, let alone prosper.

3. That our ministry and all church officials exercise more care and effort toward conserving our membership.

4. That, since evangelism is at the heart of the God assigned task of the church, a committee be appointed to prepare and present to this conference the suggested program of evangelism for the coming year.

Respectfully submitted by your committee,

G. C. Carpenter.
C. C. Grisso.
Frank Gehman.

The Conference voted to request the Publication Board to print 5,000 copies of the Moderator's Address.

The Moderator appointed brethren R. F. Poite, Grant McDonald and Delbert Flora to constitute a Committee to convey Fraternal Greetings to the Eel River Christian Conference now in session. Business session concluded by singing, "True Hearted, Whole Hearted."

R. D. Barnard invoked the Lord's guidance upon the hour to be devoted to Foreign Missions.

L. S. Bauman reported the financial work of the past year:

The conference adopted this report. The Society reelected Chas. Mayes and U. J. Shively for a period of three years and elected Homer Kent for a period of three years.

The address of the period was presented by Dr. J. Allen Miller, entitled "New Testament Appraisal of Foreign Missions." The hour closed with singing "Let the Lower Lights be Burning," and prayer led by A. V. Cover.

The Bible lecture was presented by Dr. E. E. Jacobs who spoke on "Religion and Science." W. E. Ronk pronounced the benediction.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON

Devotional services consisted of spiritual song service and a prayer by John Parr. John Hathaway, a returned missionary on furlough, reviewed very effectively "The Work in Dark Africa." This heart searching message was followed by singing "Grace Greater than Our Sin." The closing prayer was offered by I. D. Bowman.

THURSDAY EVENING

The evening program was entirely given over to Foreign Missions. "The Old Rugged Cross" was used to open the devotional period service. Claude Studebaker made the opening prayer. The first speaker on the program was Mrs. U. J. Shively speaking on, "Have We Done Our Best?" Special music was rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Brock singing, "Carry On" and "Love Divine." A. V. Kimmel next spoke on the theme "Is the Day of our Freign Missions Over for a Whole Gospel Church?" "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart" was fervently sung while an offering was being received which amounted to $56.00.

The evening sermon was preached by E. L. Miller on "Christianizing, Civilizing or Modernizing the Heathen." Jas. Cook closed with prayer.

FRIDAY MORNING

The morning session of Conference convened with singing, "Work For the Night is Coming." Wm. Steffler read 2 Thess. 5: 1-9 and made the morning prayer. The Credential Committee reported 7 additional lay and 4 additional Ministerial or 210 in all. This report was officially received. Minutes of the former business session were read and approved.

Conference ordered that the annual reports of all auxiliary organizations and Boards be bound together in one book for distribution at Conference, expenses to be shared proportionately; a representative from each organization and Board with the Conference Executive Secretary as chairman, to constitute this committee; all reports to be sent to the Executive secretary not later than August 10; uniform type, size of page, etc., be adopted; the committee in charge to meet at this conference to agree on details of the plan. Conference ruled that at next year's Conference the Brethren Home Board and Board of Benevolence be combined under the Brethren Home Board. The Home Board to be sufficiently enlarged to care for additional work. The two needs to be given their own distinctive appeals.

Conference voted to accept the date of Aug. 27-Sept. 2, 1934 as the time for 1934 Conference and that the place be Winona Lake, Ind., providing the spiritual atmosphere be such as that to which we have been accustomed in former years and that the places of meetings as provided by contract shall be available without any embarrassment.

Motion prevailed that an extra business session be held Friday afternoon, 4:30-5:30 for unfinished business.

A Committee consisting of Judge O. W. Whitlock and Archie Hooks conveyed Fraternal Christian greetings from the Eel River Christian Conference in session. Song, "Till the Whole World Knows" was sung and the devotions were read by Raymond Blood who read 2 Tim. 3:16-4:8 and lead in prayer. The Evangelistic and Bible Study League had charge of this hour. J. C. Beal reviewed the work of the league in the following words:

Report of Secretary, Evangelistic and Bible Study League

In keeping with other lines of church activity the work of the League has been handicapped by the depression through which we have been passing in the way of activities in the work of the League. No effort has been made to secure memberships in the League in the past year, neither was any effort made to collect the yearly dues from those who have been holding membership in the League. Local church work and other activities have taxed our membership to the limit.

The times through which we are passing furnished opportunity to do a really worthwhile piece of work and it is hoped that conditions in the financial world may soon become such that those in charge of the work of the League will feel justified in again taking up the work which has been so signally blessed of the Holy Spirit in the years past and it is also hoped that when the appeal comes to those who have made the work of the past possible there will be a ready response to that appeal that the work of soul-saving may be carried forward.

We shall be pleased to have those who are interested in reaching the lost and bringing them into saving relationship with the Lord Jesus Christ pray very definitely for his guidance for those who shall be responsible for the work of the League in the months ahead.

"IT IS A PLAN—DELIBERATE, REASONABLE AND JUST"

"I tell thee, these, thy sons of the desert, though they have separately the speed of eagles and the endurance of lions will fail if they are not trained to run together..."
—Lew Wallace in Ben Hur.

The President has presented to the American people "a plan—deliberate, reasonable and just." Based on this plan he appeals to them to "sign a covenant" with him in the name of "patriotism and humanity."

The plan and the battle cry of the new economic freedom is COOPERATION.

The principle of cooperation is as old as the human race itself. The greatest strides of humanity were made when that principle was its controlling motive and it lost ground every time it departed from that principle.

Civilizations have fallen for the want of vision in adopting the principle of cooperation to changed economic conditions.

With a system of rules and regulations established for the various economic activities by his administration, and foundations laid for a permanent prosperity, the President said in his radio address:

"The proposition is simply this:

"If all employers will act together to shorten hours and raise wages, we can put people back to work. No employer will suffer, because the relative level of competitive cost will advance by the same amount for all.

"But if any considerable group should lag or shirk, this great opportunity will pass us by and we will go into another desperate winter. This must not happen.

"I cannot guarantee the success of this nation-wide plan, but the people of this country can guarantee its success. When Andrew Jackson died someone asked, 'Will he go to Heaven?' and the answer was 'He will if he wants to.'"

Confident of success based on the recent experience of rise in wages under the codes, the President stated:

"On the basis of this simple principle of everybody doing things together, we are starting out on this nation-wide attack on unemployment. It will succeed if our people understand it—in the big industries, in the little shops, in the great cities and in the small villages."

With the knowledge that there are those of "little faith" and of others without a social mind, the President continued:

"There are, of course, men, a few of them, who might thwart this great common purpose by seeking selfish advantage. There are adequate penalties in the law, but I am now asking the cooperation that comes from conscience."

"You can look on every employer who adopts the plan as one who is doing his part, and those employers deserve well of everyone who works for a living.

"It will be clear to you, as it is to me, that while the shirking employer may undersell his competitor, the savings he thus makes is made at the expense of his country's welfare."

"The agreement has already brought a flood of approval from every state, and from so wide a cross-section of the common calling of industry that I know it is fair for all."

It is the opinion of all that the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt is a departure, and the opinion of many that it is directed against the anarchy of modern capitalism—"everybody for himself and the devil take the hindmost."

Some may honestly disapprove of his leadership. But whatever the opposing states of mind are with reference to it, the friends of the administration point to the situation a few months ago when the economic condition "was without form and void; and darkness was upon the" face of every one. Prayers were offered up—anything to keep us from going to the "bow wows."

Now, that nothing short of the miraculous has taken place, two peculiar states of mind obtain: First, some of those who prayed have forgotten the substance of their prayers. Second, the short-sighted and apathetic toward the welfare of the people think nothing more needs to be done now that we are in a new cycle of prosperity. Let well enough alone; nothing will stop us now, they say. But beware! These are the laissez-nous faire fellows who were largely responsible for what ailed the country. They think of prosperity as a thing of cycles, and try to keep on top of the heap whatever the conditions are.

The new economic freedom; the new vision, is one of plan that the welfare of the whole social order may be constantly maintained on relatively higher levels than have heretofore prevailed—not a return to any "normalcy" of the past, but an advancement, the creation of a better norm, a higher standard of living and thinking.

There is no reason, outside the destructive doctrine of fatalism or the perverse machinations of the selfish, why we should not go forward to better times than the people as a whole have ever enjoyed.—Scottish Rite News Bureau.

A portable electric humidifier has been designed to wash and purify air and to keep it from becoming dry. This automatically controlled machine will be a boon to health, according to doctors and public health officials. They say that tiredness, nervousness, and irritability are caused by poor air conditions. Dry air affects the membranes of nose, throat and lungs, and lowers man's general resistance. Dry air also has a disintegrating effect upon household furnishings.

The New Quarterlies

The Quarterlies for the fall Quarter are now coming off the press. Challenging lessons are these comprising the life of Paul. Our study of this dynamic character should be complete and thorough. It is no time to limit orders. It is no time for cheap literature. We believe that ours will challenge the best of them.

Boys' and Girls' and Youths'

For the last two Quarters we have sold out entirely of Boys' and Girls' and Youths' Quarterlies. Now, we are making our order for the next Quarter larger and we hope to sell them. We believe that our pastors understand the situation better also, since we discussed this matter in one of our sessions, and we trust they will use their good offices to get orders for Brethren issues of literature.

Home Departments

What has happened to our Home Departments? Have they died out? Do they not know how good is our Home Department Quarterly? "The Lesson and the Home" is a new department full of suggestions about the home that we believe ought to sell it. Let our Sunday Schools get the great inspiration they should this fall, from the study of "The Life of Paul."

ANNOUNCEMENTS

INDIANA CREDENTIAL BLANKS

Credential blanks have been mailed to the churches of the Indiana District for the conference convening at Shipshewana Lake, October 3, 1933. Any church not receiving its blanks either through its pastor or clerk, please notify me at once.

FRANK, GEHMAN, Secretary.

To All Indiana Brethren—

The time of the Conference draws nigh, and you are no doubt wondering how you will be entertained during that time. The local committee has made arrangements to take care of all who come. We are asking that you bring some extra covers along for your bed. These Lake cottages are not always adequately supplied with bedding and to insure your own comfort, you should bring some extras. We are completing plans whereby, even though the weather may be a bit chilly, we will have heat for the public meetings. Don't remain away because you are afraid of accommodations. Plan to meet in this Conference with other Brethren. We expect the largest Conference in the History of Brethren Churches in Indiana.

Signs of the Times

NOT Dead Yet

It has been suggested by some that the notorious "Layman's Report" on the work of foreign missions is a dead horse and should be given no further attention. Such is not the case. The Commission, apparently still amply financed in these times of depression, continues to mail out its propaganda. Only last week one or their communications came to me, as they doubtless continue to be sent to foreign missions boards, secretaries and leaders in the various denominations.

Fortunately the newspapers have about dropped the matter, evidently awakened to the fact that what purported to be news was after all a deliberately planned campaign of propaganda. But the thing is not dead yet and needs to be dealt some good stiff blows such as the Editor of the Evangelist dealt last week.

If you have not read it, go back and read the editorial and thank God that you have an editor who sees clearly in this important matter.

WHAT Another Editor Thinks

The widely read and influential Watchman Examiner in a vigorous editorial says about the above mentioned report:

"What then shall we do with the report of the Commission? Why, put it up on the shelf with your discarded books. Let the men who paid the huge expenses of the Inquiry, charge this money up to profit and loss. 'Rethinking Missions' will do no harm as a merely academic statement. It will do harm if the group standing behind it continues to promote it. If any mission board accepts its nonchristian doctrinal basis, that mission board will write 'Ishabod' above all its future efforts."

HORSES, Wives, and Gold

The Book of Deuteronomy, written by Moses just before the tribes of Israel crossed over into the promised land, made a remarkable forecast of what would happen once they were settled there. (Deut. 17:14-20).

The people were first told that when they came into possession of the Land they would demand a king like the nations which surrounded them, which soon came to pass. Concerning this king, God laid down three restrictions.

1. "He shall not multiply horses to himself."

2. "Neither shall he multiply wives unto himself."

3. "Neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold."

If you read the context of the Sunday school lesson of last week in First Kings, you have found that Solomon broke all three of these commands. The first tendency spelled Military Preparation, the second Sexual Perversion, the third Economic Exploitation. And the end was national disaster.

War, Women and Wealth are still the gods at whose altars the modern world of nations too often kneels. And the end will be disaster, regardless of the "wisdom" of all our Solomons.

THE Everlasting Hills"

Genesis, which seems to picture the earth as the important place for which the remainder of the universe was created, has often been assailed by those who assumed to speak in the name of Science. And some believers were greatly disturbed.

Now comes Sir Arthur Eddington, eminent British astronomer, to caution his colleagues about accepting without qualification the evidence of even "observational facts." He says that "we seem to be coming to the theory that the earth is older than the Universe itself."

Christians should not worry about the fate of Genesis. It was given by the God who made the Universe, and it may be safely presumed that he knew what he was talking about. Doubtless he has not told us all that may be known about the world, else the work of science would have no justification. But what he has told us in Genesis is true. That will become more and more evident as the scientists come to a better understanding of the world, and as we come to a more perfect understanding of Genesis.

If we must worry, let it not be about Genesis, but rather about the fate of an unbelieving world.

THE Stupidity of Unbelief

Last week I received the advance prospectus of what is grandiloquently named "560 of the World's Greatest Books." The contents of these books are summarized in twenty volumes which you may buy for so much down and so much a month.

According to the publishers there are "over 4,500,000 books in the world. Of these, there are 100,000 worth reading once. Of these, there are 560 everyone should know."

Looking over this list of 560 books, I found the Egyptian Book of the Dead, the Books of Brahminism, Confucianism, Hinduism, the Koran, Zoroastrianism, Paine's Age of Reason, and even the Talmud and the Apocrapha. BUT THE BIBLE IS NOT ON THE LIST.

In searching my vocabulary for some word to describe this omission, I can think of none better than STUPIDITY. Even if the editors who selected these books did not believe a word of the Bible, the omission is inexcusable. Even if they regarded the contents of the Bible as wholly mythological, surely it is better mythology than the mythology of the Koran!

It is well known that unbelief is blind to spiritual values. We expect that. But the peculiar stupidity of unbelief is that it apparently cannot even see literary values. Its natural vision and judgment is blinded by its spiritual prejudices.

A POLITICIAN vs. a Preacher

A preacher in the city of Cleveland recently said that "Franklin D. Roosevelt has done in four months what it took Moses 40 years to accomplish."

Passing over the historical inaccuracy (both ancient and modern) of this assertion, I wish to point out the tendency of an apostate religious world toward the apotheosis of its human heroes. Having rejected the Godhood of the true Son of Man, the religious world slips easily into the worship of those who are mere men.

Sometimes the politicians see further and deeper than the hero-worshipping preachers. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace remarks in a speech, "We are building a new social machinery in Washington, and I am convinced that social machinery will fail unless there is going along with it a definite change in the human heart." (Bold face mine)

The father of Mr. Wallace was a member of the United Presbyterian church, a body of people who for the most part still believe that man is totally depraved by sin and has no means of recovery within himself apart from the New Birth. The utterance of his son seems to contain at least a trace of this ancient and tested truth, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God."

If Mr. Wallace sticks to his views he will not be popular among the wise men who think that the world can be saved by merely tinkering with the "social machinery."

In the meantime, let us hope for the Coming of that Prophet who is to be "like unto" Moses. Moses, you will recall, actually got the Israelites into the Promised Land although he took forty years in the wilderness to get them ready. Which is more than can be said for any modern ruler. The Prophet who is like unto Moses will bring the world into the promised land and keep it there for a thousand years. Read Acts 3:19-26 and Revelation 20:1-10.

*With every rising of the sun,
Think of your life as just begun.
The past has shriveled, and buried deep
All yesterdays; there let them sleep,
Nor seek to summon back one ghost
Of that innumerable host.
Concern yourself with but to-day.
Woo it, and teach it to obey
Your will and wish. Since time began
To-day has been the friend of man,
But in his blindness and his sorrow
He looks to yesterday and to-morrow.
You and to-day, a soul sublime,
And the great, pregnant hour of time
With God Himself to bind the twain;
Go forth, I say, attain, attain.*

The Church in a New Advance in Evangelism

If the leadership of the brotherhood follows out the program outlined by General Conference, we will soon be entering upon a new advance in evangelism. Nothing could be more significant or promising. Evangelism is the heart of the Gospel and the chief function of the church. The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, and those who have experienced that saving grace are moved by the very fact of the new and life-filling experience to tell of this saving power to other men. This desire to tell is the most natural thing in the world. In fact, the genuineness of the change that has come into one's life may be measured pretty accurately by the degree and persistency of his desire to tell the "good news" to others. Not only is it the natural thing, but it is the thing to be expected of the Christian, the thing he is charged to do. No other responsibility rests so heavily upon the church and every member of it as just that duty of telling to dying men everywhere that salvation is to be had in Jesus Christ, the Son of God. Bearing witness to the saving power of God is the highest command of the Master and the universal requirement of his servants. His last words to his disciples were: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." "Ye are witnesses of these things." "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations." That makes evangelism compulsory. The telling of the "good news" is not left optional to the individual, but is morally and legally binding upon every child of God and when a church sets itself to the prosecution of its evangelistic task, with new vigor and determination, it is facing its supreme duty and may surely count on the blessing of Almighty God.

If this evangelistic advance is to be successful in the largest degree, there are at least three things that must be kept in mind as we proceed. (1) There must be a faithful teaching of the Word of God. (2) There must be a reliance upon the power of the Holy Spirit. (3) There must be a flaming of the evangelistic passion.

THE WORD

(1) The very first consideration in evangelism is the Word of God, the message to be delivered, the revelation of the way to life and blessedness. It is not enough merely to tell emotional stories and to ask men to come to Jesus. A knowledge of the Word must be laid as the foundation of conviction. That must be made the basis of appeal. The word must be taught. That obligation is in the commission, "Go . . . teach." Paul instructs Timothy to "preach the Word" (2 Tim. 4:2). And he admonishes the Christians of Philippi that they should be letting their light shine by "holding forth the word of life" (Phil. 2:16). "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. 4:12). And we may rest our case on the Word, remembering that God hath promised: "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isa. 55:11). And the psalmist bears witness to its influence in these convincing words: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes" (Psa. 19:7, 8). Well may we pray, as Paul requests of the church at Thessalonica, "Pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course (run) and be glorified" in the quickening of hearts and building them up in the knowledge of God.

Not only should the preacher "preach the word", but the membership of the churches should be encouraged to engage in a serious, prayerful, Spirit-directed study of the word of God. It will help them as nothing else can to get a stronger grip on the spiritual life. "Ye search the scriptures," said Jesus to the Jews, "because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of me" (John 5:39). But their painstaking study failed to enlighten them, because they saw not him of whom the Scriptures spake. All too much of our Scripture reading and study does not even have the merit of carelessness such as the Jews' study possessed; it is haphazard as well as lacking in serious purpose. We need to give ourselves to a really diligent study of the word of God that will enable us to sense the presence of God, discover Christ and become acquainted with his Spirit. We should study that we may know what the Bible has to say about sin, about salvation, and how obedience and disobedience to God's laws resulted. There are many great doctrines of the Bible with which we should become acquainted and which will make for a keen spiritual life and more zealous soul winning. In fact, a general revival of Bible study would do more than almost anything else to encourage a great revival of evangelism.

THE SPIRIT

(2) We must depend on the Spirit to bring conviction to the hearts of sinners and to turn them in saving faith to the crucified One. If we are to make a real advance in evangelism, we must know that it is wise counsel to go to the storehouse of Divine power and read therein that it is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit." And truly that has been the secret of success whenever the church has experienced great victories in evangelism. It was true in the early church: "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. . . . And they were all amazed and marvelled, saying, . . . how hear we every man in his own tongue, wherein we were born? . . . But Peter . . . lifted up his voice and said unto them, . . . hearken unto my words. . . . Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls" (Acts 2:4, 5, 7, 8, 14, 41). Again we read: "And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness. And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: . . . And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all" (Acts 4:31-33).

As it was in the apostolic church, so it must be today, the Holy Spirit must be sought in prayer for the enabling power for victory in evangelism. And the promise is unto us that we may receive that help, that power, if we will but claim the promise: "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts 1:8). The Holy Spirit is God present in power, a personal, active, all-sufficient power, who animates the church as well as every believing soul. Evangelism operates not by blind force, not by capricious, magical, unreliable influences, but by a personal Spirit, who is given unto us in response to the prayer of faith. It is the Spirit of God. The same God, who, in the person of and by the death of his Son, reconciled the world unto himself, is wooing men unto himself in the person of the Holy Spirit. Only the Spirit of God would be efficacious, and truly it is God in the third person of the Trinity. As God in Christ consummated salvation on the cross, so God the Spirit continuously carries on the work of salvation, making it effective in the lives of men. God is present, manifesting himself, seeking and saving men through the prayer of faith, and by the preaching of the Word. God give us many men and women who are willing to lay hold on this power for the salvation of lost souls and we shall gain great victories for Christ and the church during the coming year.

THE PASSION

3. And lastly, a very important element to an evangelistic advance is a flaming passion for the saving of lost souls. A great soul winner must be a great lover of men. Only he who loves greatly will pay the price that successful soul winning costs, and only he who loves much has the spirit that makes for success in such activity. Successful evangelism comes high, it means personal sacrifices, hard work and burning out the life in zeal. It is costly, and yet it ought to be most common because the blessed evangel is the priceless possession of so many people. It would seem that few truly appreciate it, but rather value it lightly, or have a mild estimate of the horror of sin and its consequences. How feebly our passion burns beside that of our gracious Lord, who when he came near Jerusalem, wept over the city because of its rejection of him and the consequent terrible fate that awaited it. How cool is our zeal even compared with that of the Apostle Paul, who said: "I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost: that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh" (Rom. 9:1-3). Again he declares that "by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears" (Acts 20:31).

A recent editorial statement in the Reformed Church Messenger stressed this point in a most forceful way and we wish to quote it in conclusion:

The late Silvester Horne, in his eloquent lectures on preaching at the Yale Divinity School, gave utterance to this striking dictum: "But the supreme qualification for the ministry is a soul of flame!" Those might fitly be called "burning words"; it makes the soul flame merely to read them. Nor were they spoken lightly by the distinguished gentleman; he had been a living exemplification of the great saying throughout his own powerful ministry; his soul had been so surely aflame that his life was burned out almost immediately on the completion of that course of lectures, at the early age of forty-six years. "The supreme qualification for the ministry is a soul of flame!"

There are weighty reasons for the acceptance of this noble saying. The minister is charged with the proclamation of the Word of God. He is a herald, and it is the function of a herald so to sound forth his message that men may hear and heed. That implies fervor, flame. The nature of the message sets the heart aglow. "Is not my Word like a fire?" cries the prophet; and with that Word in the minister's soul it must flame. His message is one of supreme significance and therefore demands a tongue of fire and a soul of flame. If he could possibly withhold that message, or hesitate to publish it, there would be, in his heart, as it were, a "burning fire shut up in his bones"; he simply must give utterance to the glowing truth. "The supreme qualification of the ministry is a soul of flame!"

Another weighty reason why the minister's soul should flame is that he is charged with proclaiming this vastly momentous message to dying men. He speaks as "a dying man to dying men!" It may be his last opportunity to herald the message; it may be the last opportunity for some of his auditors to hear it. Silvester

The Indiana Conference program is published in this issue, and the date for the meeting is October 3-5, and the place is Shipshewana Lake. This is Indianas' popular summer meeting place, but this is the first time, if we remember correctly, that their fall conference has been held here, and inasmuch as the entertainment is not to be in the homes of the members but in the summer cottages, prospective delegates are advised to bring extra bedding.

Our good letter this week from Allentown, Pennsylvania, brings to our minds anew what we have long known, namely, that it takes young people to furnish real enthusiasm. That is what the church at that place has discovered and is making use of. They are certainly capitalizing on their young people and these young people are showing themselves a group of splendid qualities, and they give much credit to the inspiring leadership of their pastor, Brother S. E. Christiansen. During the year past fifteen new members have been received, and at the time of the report one new baptism and one confession had been made. Every department of the church is showing itself faithful.

Every week the editor and business manager are getting encouraging letters from Evangelist subscribers, and we appreciate them all. But about the most appreciated kind of encouragement that comes to us is that which grows out of the knowledge of effort to help spread the influence of our church paper. The following excerpt from a recent letter containing a subscription renewal, reveals the cooperative, missionary spirit in behalf of the Evangelist. A missionary is one who not only appreciates a cause or an institution, but goes out and tells his appreciation and seeks to win adherents to his cause. That is what this reader is doing—seeking to bring others into the Evangelist family. She says: "I surely do love my church paper. It is next to my Bible. It seems to me to be getting better with every issue. I would hate dreadfully to do without it. I am trying to get some new subscribers." May many others go and do likewise.

We are informed by the dean of Ashland College, Dr. E. G. Mason, that the enrollment promises to be quite satisfactory, considering economic conditions, the expectation being that next week there will be 250 students enrolled in the regular college department. That is a decrease from last year, but the percentage of loss is smaller than many colleges are experiencing. One school rated larger than Ashland has enrolled only 180. Ashland College has won for herself a place of loyalty in the hearts of its constituents that is above that enjoyed by the average school, as the records for a number of years past will verify. It has made splendid strides forward, but we must guard against slipping back in these difficult times. Especially during this present year when there is so much hopefulness abroad that economic conditions are taking a turn for the better and when such vigorous efforts are being put forth to bring about better conditions, our college constituency, and particularly the Brethren portion of it; ought to stand by with every possible support and every effort ought to be made to encourage young people to attend our own church school.

Ohio Brethren will find in this issue a program of special interest to them. It is a program of the first school of evangelism to be held in the state in compliance with the one year program of Loyalty and Evangelism adopted at the Dayton conference held in June. The execution of that program was put in the hands of the district evangelists. There are seven members of that Board and Dr. Charles A. Bame is the chairman and most responsible for getting things going. He is making a start by calling the district leaders, both lay and ministerial, to Ashland for a school in evangelism. That was a feature in the new national program as well as in the Ohio program. Other such gatherings for the study of evangelism and the stirring up of the evangelistic spirit ought to be arranged in many sections of the brotherhood forthwith if we are not to allow the year to get so far started along the old rut-worn paths that our churches will not benefit by our program. We would suggest that the several district conferences soon to convene take cognizance of the national conference program of evangelism and take such measures as they think best to aid in its operation in their district. It has great possibilities if we will work it.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Because they arrived too late for publication in connection with the Pennsylvania district program last week, we are glad to announce here the subjects of two addresses to be given by Brother Claud Studebaker in the Berlin conference which begins October 2. They are: "Under the Searchlight" in the Home Mission Hour, and another entitled, "The Gospel."

We have a letter this week from Dr. Florence N. Gribble, of our French Equatorial African mission, telling of the new station personnel since the departure of Brother and Sister Hathaway and Miss Emmert on their furlough. God is blessing our missionaries in their work and raising up some splendid local leadership. It is a satisfaction that little Kenneth and David Sheldon are getting along so well in the matter of health.

The Obedience of Christ

General Conference Opening Address
By Vice Moderator R. F. Porte, Th.D.

Importance of Christ's Entire Ministry

God's sovereignty requires obedience
Fellowship rests on obedience
Being a servant implies obedience
God's truth the sanctifying agent

Text: Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered: and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him.—Hebrews 5:8, 9.

Christian people are interested in learning the truth of the importance of Christ's active ministry on earth. The text seems to establish an importance to Christ's obedience to the Heavenly Father. This obedience of Christ to the Father is to be followed by the obedience of the believers to Christ through Whom we obtain eternal salvation. The building of a spiritual house would of necessity require a foundation, a building, before the completing act. Such a building requires progress, a series of separate but related acts which unite to make the building perfect.

The Apostle Paul conceived the work of Christ to be a progressive development. "In Whom (Jesus) all the building fitly framed together growth unto a holy temple in the Lord" (Eph. 2:21). The sixth chapter of Hebrews bears the same thought, and catalogs some of the first principles as, "repentance from dead works, and faith toward God, baptism, and laying on of hands," etc., these acts are mentioned as foundation principles of God's spiritual temple. The Apostle Paul speaks in another place of Christ as the foundation of the building. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 3:11). The place of believers in this spiritual house is stated in these words, "Ye as lively stones are built up a spiritual house" (1 Peter 2:5). It is good to know we are to be builded by God in his spiritual house. The believer is selected and elected to a place in God's spiritual building. We are to be subject to the place where God shall choose to use us, a place with honor because it helps to complete God's building. How wonderful it is to know that wherever God places you and me in the building is a place of honor. The place God chooses for you is a place for the perfecting of the Divine program.

Fallacy of Presuming on God's Planning

The Christian economy is wholly of God's planning. One of the most dangerous elements of apostasy is to presume on the way of God's building. Christians are often inclined to show a lack of faith that God is able to care for his spiritual building. We Christians have stepped into God's place and attempted to establish limits of Christian orthodoxy. We have established credal statements like great towers of Babel for the defence of the true faith. The language of Christianity has become confused. We do not all speak the same thing although we each claim to be led by the same Spirit. What more can human beings do than to be submissive to the Divine will in all things? What can we hope to add to what God's Word has said and who would dare to take away from that which God hath spoken? All credal standards, except the literal Word of God, are only human instruments. They add nothing to Christian faith, except as they encourage a devout acceptance and obedience to the very Word of God as contained in the Holy Bible. The enforcement of a human creed constitutes a denial of the sufficiency of God's Word. If one believes less than the whole Bible he falls short of God's provision for salvation, if one would add to the Word of God that one is guilty of presumption and is worthy of the condemnation of God. True faith in God never questions his Word. Like faithful Abraham, we shall be willing to sacrifice our dearest possession for God. That is saving faith.

Importance of Christ's Entire Ministry

The Brethren Church has always held that the whole life of Christ on earth was necessary for salvation. We have differed from traditional theology in holding that salvation does not center in the cross alone. The cross is the seal of that which the life of Christ on earth actively expressed. The cross is an eternal fact, not a mere fact of history. The Brethren believe that the life of Christ on earth as revealed in the Gospels constitutes the way by which human beings may come into an understanding of the Divine mystery expressed by the cross on Calvary. We Brethren believe that those who seek salvation must needs enter into that fellowship which the disciples had with their Master during his earthly ministry. A legalistic theology would leave sinners stranded without participation in the active life and ministry of our Lord. There is a way to the cross, this way is revealed to us in Christ's earthly ministry. Christ did not live in vain and therefore did not die in vain. In him is the way of life contrasted to the way of death.

Salvation Involves Living the Life of the Spirit

The supreme danger of legalism lies in its destruction of moral achievement. We agree that human work has no merit for salvation apart from the Divine program of salvation revealed in Christ, but the human being in Christ is accounted worthy to be saved (1 Peter 2:5 op. cit.) The reception of the Spirit involves a participation in the life of the Spirit. The Lord told the man at the pool of Bethesda, "Behold thou art made whole, sin no more lest a worse thing come unto thee" (John 5:14). The escape from the life of sin and death lies in living the life in the Spirit. This truth is again set forth in the healing of the man born blind (See John 9:2). "Who did sin that this man was born blind?" "Neither did this man sin nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him." Christ did not say that the parents nor the healed blind man were sinless, the blindness was contingent to the natural human life while sight comes by the way of life in God. The Scriptures clearly teach a mutual working of the Divine and the human. The Divine must touch the human and the human must possess something of the Divine. The character of apostate religion is the promise of salvation without the living of the life in the Spirit. True life has a definite, positive content. The Christian life participates in the life of God in Christ.

Recognition of God's Sovereignty Require Obedience

1—The life in sin challenges the sovereignty of God. There is no recognition of God's sovereignty without complete obedience to his commands. The first departure from the way of life was man's disobedience to the command of God, "But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it" (Gen. 2:17). The Israelitish nation departed from the way of God when they disobeyed the command of God to completely drive out the Canaanites from the land (Exodus 23:31; Num. 33:55). The departure of the church consists in her disobedience to the command, "Be not conformed to this world" (Romans 12:2). The Divine blessing is certain when man elects to obey the command to walk in the way of Divine blessing. "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness but shall have the light of life" (Jno. 8:12). The world today does not lack in passive faith in God but the world does lack in active obedience to the way of life marked out in Christ Jesus. The sovereignty of God requires absolute freedom of his way in the life of the world. God's sovereignty means God's right to command and man's duty to obey the word, "Sin no more" (John 5:14). The life Christ lived on earth reveals the way a human life should be lived that is indwelt by God. Jesus said to his disciples, "I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you" (John 13:15). And the Lord's command, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" (Matt. 28:20). The sovereign Kingly right of God the Father and God the Son commands our obedience to all the Divine pronouncements laid upon the first disciples.

Significance of Christ's Self-Emptying

It is unnecessary to discuss the importance of our text in Hebrews 5:8. The meaning of this text stands as an eternal principle certified in both the old and new covenants. The Self-emptying of Christ may be simply understood from the fact that in order that he might do what he voluntarily chose to do as prophet, priest, and King; it was necessary for him to partake of the nature of these various offices. For example, when Christ became the Servant he became as one who served. In order that he might effect an atonement for sin he became the sacrifice. "Though he were a son" nevertheless he accepted what was involved in being the Savior of the world. No one who desires to be a true Christian can elect to do less than that which God requires to perfect a Christian. The sin-problem is our problem as well as God's problem. The price God paid for human redemption must be followed by a price to be paid by man, namely, "to deny himself and take up his cross and follow me (Christ Jesus)" (Mt. 16:24). The saved man is under the power of God. Like Abraham of old, he gives up a residence in Ur of the Chaldees for a possession in Canaan.

Did Jesus need to learn to obey? The answer is obvious, No. The obedience of Christ means the reality with which he entered into the life we must live in order to be saved. Jesus was a Son who knew what it cost to be obedient. The place Jesus voluntarily took upon himself for the redemption of the world required the exercise of true obedience. Christ was our Substitute. As our Substitute he would not be less than we ought to be or more than it is possible for God to help us to become. Christ as Savior appears in the role of a man in whom God is well pleased. Jesus invited his disciples to follow him. This involves our obedience as Abraham faithfully obeyed and was called "the friend of God" (James 2:23). Jesus obeyed the Father as man is to obey the Son.

Implication of "Being Made Perfect"

The Hebrew letter continues, "And being made perfect he became the author of eternal salvation." The Greek reading clearly reveals the true substance of this quotation, namely, "having perfected" or having fully completed the plan of God for man's redemption, he became the author of eternal salvation. What did Christ perfect if the whole of human salvation be confined to the death and resurrection of our Lord? There is revealed in the earthly ministry of our Lord a very careful attendance upon the will of the Father. Believing unto salvation means that we who are being saved accept and follow the way of Christ as revealed in the Gospel. What difference is there between the mass of the Roman Catholic Church and that Protestantism which looks at the sacrifice of the cross and neglects the obedience of the Gospel? There is no Gospel except that which properly belongs to life as lived in the world. Our problem is here and now. We want to know the life which will offer us victory over sin and death and give us the inheritance of eternal life. If Jesus Christ did not lay down the way we should live by his earthly ministry, then we are yet in the dark. The glory of the Christian faith is that our Lord and Savior personally brings us to the way of eternal living. Faith in Christ leads us to believe that having been faithful to him here and now we shall successfully meet the test which marks the entrance into the life to come.

The importance of Christ's earthly life in the plan of salvation is further confirmed by the passage in Philipians, chapter two. The Apostle Paul tells us that Christ became "obedient unto death." The meaning of the preposition "unto" in the Greek does not admit that Christ's death was the goal of his earthly ministry. It shows that his death on the cross marked the end of his ministry of salvation. The whole ministry of Jesus on earth is involved in his saving work. The death on the cross marked the change from God-incarnate to God the Son glorified and exalted to his place with the Father. The Apostle Paul relates the kenosis passage to the Christian in the words, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus" (v. 5). Christ humbled himself in order to become our Savior; we are to humble ourselves that he might exalt us with him in glory. A religion which pleases the world is not the religion of Christ. If we will empty ourselves of self-seeking and vainglory, God in Christ will fill us with all the fullness of Divine blessing. Christ gave up for a time his glory with the Father that he might take unto himself sinners who would seek salvation, and it becomes us to give up all we cherish in order to take Christ into our hearts.

Fellowship Rests on Obedience

2—Fellowship must rest on obedience. This is true of Divine perfectness and glory. Fellowship implies likeness and comity. The angels which kept not their station were cast out of their Heavenly fellowship (Jude 6). The church is exhorted to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace (Eph. 4:3). There must be a point of agreement and a consciousness of likeness in order that this Spiritual bond may be maintained. This unity is perfectly maintained in the Godhead. When Jesus said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (John 14:9), he simply indicated the perfectness of the Divine Persons. The laws which properly belong to God the Father are also characteristic of God the Son. The church, in its fullest comprehension of Christ and God learns the secret of life which Christ knew and exempli-

The Victorious Church of Christ

By Ray Klingensmith

Though the world misjudges and thinks the church a failure, yet it is victorious and true.
No short-cut to holiness. The pulpit needs guarding and the pew needs warning

The church has fought and won more battles than any other institution in existence today. She has lost some, to be sure; but she has won sufficient victories to merit the distinction of being the most powerful and the most permanent institution of the centuries.

The world does not judge the church to be so powerful or so valuable. But that is because the world has no gauge with which to calculate her worth. She judges the church by her own standards. She coldly watches the church through a telescope; she should come closer and use a microscope.

World Evaluates Material Things; the Church Heavenly

The world counts wealth and earthly enterprises alone as valuable. The church counts treasures in heaven for the future life alone as valuable. The world desires an institution which ministers to her carnal appetites and thus she ever encourages the church to broaden out, to socialize, to be more lenient, yea, to even lower her standards to enable more to reach her; but the church has ever disdained such a lowly ministry as furnishing pleasure for unregenerate humanity,—so in the eyes of the world she has failed.

Has the Church Failed?

Surely the church has failed, says the world. See the corrupt politics; see the tide of sin about us almost washing us all off-shore; notice the extensive Sabbath Desecration; witness the decay of decency. But the world has never had eyes with which to see the splendid array of saints which daily for the last twenty centuries have bade farewell to the churches' pews as they took their flight to the Eternal City made without hands. Nor has she seen the inestimable thousands of transformed lives which have been made over through the labors of the church; nor has she heard the millions of daily prayers which have been uttered by the saints of God, usually in her own interests; nor has she recognized the valuable contributions of the church in her much boasted advances and accomplishments of civilization.

The Mission of the Church

The poor old world has ever misjudged the mission of the church, and has ever been ignorant of the fact that the church's duty has been to call out those who would hear, to edify those who would believe, to follow the voice of the God of the Ages, to bear witness to the Truth, and to keep herself unspotted from the world. This has been the massive tonnage of her cargo which she has carried through the centuries. This is the task to which she set herself and from which she has never swerved in spite of the numerous admonitions of the world. And while the church has been occupied with such a program, she has ever diffused the fragrance of Jesus Christ to the starved world which has always hesitatingly and doubtfully looked on.

A Conflict in Standards

But surely the church is now making her last stand, urges the world. She is losing ground. And in the eyes of the scholarship of the world "the acids of modernity have eaten away the standards of morality" and consequently the church is far behind the times. She is antiquated because she still insists on holy living,—because she still confidently boasts of the reality of the spiritual world,—because she still holds in her bosom the Written Word of God and treasures it as her most sacred heritage. The changeless church in a changing world, to be sure, must suffer ridicule because of her constancy. But this is indirectly a compliment to her individuality; yea more, to her godliness. For Jesus said that they had persecuted the prophets before him, and they persecuted him and so they would also persecute us. Jesus never promised that the gates of hell should not war against the church. He only promised that the gates of hell should not PREVAIL against his church. Nor can she prevail, else in the last twenty centuries she would have at least made a start! But all of her assaults have only served to strengthen the bulwarks of the supernatural church of Christ, which triumphantly peers further into her enemy's battle line after each victory, only to behold the same General who has always opposed the Living God.

If the world ever does pay tribute to the church it is always to the church of by-gone days. But she forgets that then she persecuted too. She forgets that the same taunts that she throws at the church of today, she threw at the church of yesterday. Give us the "Old Time Religion," shouts the world piously, and we will worship with you. And behold, when they had the "Old Time" power they burned its ministers and drove their flocks from their earthly habitations. But give us scholarship and training, then shouts the world, and we will be able to tolerate you. And when the church thrusts forth her profound scholars which the world cannot gainsay, the world responds by mourning that they came too late, for everything has changed! Why doesn't the world become honest for once and admit that she wants a religion that will satisfy her and at the same time give her permission to indulge herself to any extent. As long as God is in Heaven, such can never be.

Church Adaptable yet Remains True

What the world has forgotten is that the church of Jesus Christ has many methods of reaching man. Just as a diamond can be cut in more than one way without detracting from its value, so can the church adapt herself to every age and remain true, sparkling with the light of heaven, her Chief Cornerstone. But the church is too wise to change herself so radically that she loses her luster. If possible, the world would smother her chaste beauty with a cluster of cheaper stones; but it would soon lose its love for them too.

But is it true that this supernatural organism, built on Jesus Christ and motivated by the Holy Spirit, never is in danger? No, that is not true. And it would not be true to say that she is not in danger today. For even though she is powerful and supernatural, her power has always been conveyed in earthen vessels. And if it is possible for these vessels to decrease in their capacity for Godliness, then it is possible for the church to weaken, —but not fail. So, accordingly as the church remains true to God and abides in his will, just so will she succeed in every age. Proportionately as her ministry and laity remain consecrated to their divinely inspired duties, so will the church remain powerful. To the same extent that the sheep of each village flock, each country lane and each city avenue follow a Godly Shepherd, so will the church remain holy and pure.

No Short Cuts to Holiness

But the church must remember that there are no short cuts to holiness. The old family altar, the church altar, the doctrines taught by the holy apostles, the daily living as taught by Jesus Christ are all essential to her full program. She can forego NONE of them. Her prayer life is as essential today as when the church gathered at Jerusalem and prayed till the Holy Spirit gave them great power with which to witness for the resurrection,—as when Peter went on the house top to pray,—as when Paul and Silas prayed in jail at midnight. Her doctrine of confession is as necessary today as when Jesus said "If ye confess me before men, I will confess you before my Father which is in Heaven",—as when Paul said, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead thou shalt be saved". Her practice of Triune Immersion is as indispensable today as when Jesus sent them to dip in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit,—as when Philip and the Eunuch stopped that queenly chariot and went both down into the water,—as when Jesus himself emerged from Jordan. Her plea for repentance today is as imperative as when John the Baptist cried, "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand". Her doctrine of Feet Washing is as urgent today as when Jesus said, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." Her refusal to conform to the world is as valid today as when Paul begged us to be "not conformed to this world,"—as when James besought his correspondents to keep themselves unspotted from the world. Her ideal of consecration is as needful today as when Paul exhorted us to "present our bodies a living sacrifice". Her Lord is as much God today as he was when he said "I and my Father are One", and "he that hath seen me hath seen the Father". And her Bible today is as surely the Word of the Living God as when Jesus said "The Scriptures cannot be broken" and "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away". To be sure, the church today is rich and powerful in precious doctrine. BUT IF SHE FOREGOES A SINGLE ONE OF THEM she will be poor and powerless; she will be so poor and powerless that even God can not help her.

Must Guard the Pulpit

But the church will not weaken if she is careful, particularly in some things. In the first place, she must jealously guard her sacred pulpits. She cannot permit a ministry to enter therein which is not wholly in sympathy with her mission and beliefs. Never can God bless the church when her ministry forsakes the place of prayer and turns the house of God into a social organization. NEVER! Never can the church hope to prosper when her ministry is so "cumbered with many things" that it hasn't time to preach the Word, and to exhort, and rebuke, and do the work of an evangelist. We may about as well have a moral modern atheist in our pulpits as a believing ministry which never lifts its voice to cry its beliefs in the Bible and God. Both will soon resort to the second-hand sermon on morality; both will fail; both will rob the church of her spiritual life and power. The time has come when the church must consider that there are false teachers as well as true ones; there are clouds without water who are but casting shadows over their thirsting churches. The time has come when the church must remember that the mercenary ministers has evidently forgotten that the God of Heaven still answers prayer, and places men over his flocks, and that he doesn't need to resort to the political scheme of candidating to do it either. If the churches permit such men to their sacred desks how can they hope for blessings?

But again, the ministry too must be alert these days. Can the ministry, trained and schooled in the things of God, permit the lay member to damper his convictions and dignity? I protest against it! And let our ministry ever remember that to remain silent when its voice should be raised is to permanently injure the church of Christ. You may escape its results but what about the man following you? Oh, the terrible confusion of training and educating a ministry, to be pampered about by unspiritual lay members who are generally more concerned with perpetuating their own family's popularity than the church of God! God knows that many a minister has been the victim of such satanic circumstances. But it is more noble to live wounded, with a sword and a shield to brandish for your God than to die a coward stabbed in the back.

The holy church of Jesus Christ is ever the victor. What is the prospect for her destiny? Can Jesus Christ fail? The church is his body. Can the Holy Spirit fail? The church is born of him. Can the Word of God fail? The church is built on it. Can the God of the ages fail? The church was planned by him before the foundations of the world; and consequently it will outlive them.

Horne died suddenly on his way to proclaim one of his messages; in an average congregation it is always possible that some may never return. Under such conditions, how can the true minister speak except with flaming soul? Face to face with those about to die, he must proclaim his message with tremulous lip and throbbing heart and flaming soul. "The supreme qualification for the ministry is a soul of flame!"

The weightiest reason why the minister's soul should be aflame is that he is an ambassador of God. He is not simply a spokesman for men to men; he is the messenger of Almighty God. It is his high privilege by faithful study, patient meditation, and fervent prayer, to receive the message which God would have him bear to his people. And when he has received it, his whole being will be aglow and athrill with its tremendous significance and power. He can hardly wait for the hour when he shall be permitted to stand before his people and speak as the messenger of God. The steam engine, all a-tremble with pent up power, awaiting the moving of a lever for the release of that power, affords an illustration of the minister athrill as he awaits the moment when he may pour forth the words of life as the messenger of God. "We are ambassadors therefore on behalf of Christ, as though God were entreating by us!" "The supreme qualification for the ministry is a soul of flame!"

A HARD MAN TO FIGHT

Mahatma Gandhi, reduced in weight until about 90 pounds and extremely weak, was released from prison by the British, after a fast of eight days, following his three weeks' fast last May. John Bull can tell you that a live Mahatma is troublesome, but far less dangerous than a dead martyr. Mr. Arthur Brisbane makes this interesting comment: "You can fight a man with gun, bomb or dagger, but it is hard to fight a man with an idea, when he is willing to die for it. The wise British say, Go and die somewhere else, not in our prison, and take with you the blessing of the King, Parliament, lion and unicorn."

When will the world learn the lesson that "men with ideas for which they are willing to die" are more potent than battleships and poison gas?—Reformed Church Messenger.

The world will never learn it, until it bows the knee and surrenders the heart at the feet of Jesus Christ, the coming King. What Gandhi knows about the power of an idea, he has learned from his contact with Christianity, even though he does not confess Jesus as Lord.

Galatians

"Of all the truths that from Thee shine,
Lord, Thy philanthropy divine
Next to my heart still lies,
And turns my spiritual eyes
From all ill-natured schemes designed To bound what Thou has to no bounds confined."

"He is a freeman whom the truth makes free,
And all are slaves beside."

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."
(Gal. 5:1).

Introduction

The epistle of St. Paul to the Galatians (Frenchmen) is truly the great Magna Charta of Christendom. It is the Manifesto of Christian liberty. It is the final argument against all legalism and ritualism as substitutes for living faith in the process of the working of salvation. It is the case of the Law versus the Gospel, and the Gospel is in itself triumphant.

Scholarly Opinion

Dr. Rendall Harris has thoughtfully labeled this epistle of freedom as an "explosive epistle." Dr. Martin Luther chose it as his favorite New Testament book designating it thusly: "The Epistle to the Galatians is my epistle. I have betrothed myself to it. It is my wife." What this last quotation may have to do with the first it may easily be conjectured. It was Luther's explosive "wife," and by that Catherine Bora was not held in mind. Paul and Luther cried "Liberty" from the mountain tops when they hurled forth the ideas of the Apostle's Emancipation Act.

Godet, in commenting on Luther's choice of this writing, aptly avers: "In this Epistle he found the secret of his own deliverance; hence he declares himself wedded to this letter and calls it his Catherine Bora. Taking this as his weapon, he plunged into the fearful conflict with the papistry and religious materialism of his time. This was the pebble from the brook with which, like another David, he went forth to meet the papal giant, and smote him in the forehead."

The Galatians

Somewhere between the dates of 50-58 A. D. Paul wrote his masterful argument against Judaism to the churches of the region of Galatia. They were a fickle Gaul people, embracing with great ease the earnest preaching of the Apostle, but they with the self-same ease dismissed the Gospel facts for another Gospel which was eventually preached to them by certain Judaizers—the persistent opponents of Paul. When the son of Tarsus heard of the matter he was righteously indignant at the changed attitude and took his pen in hand to write them a very personal letter. Usually Paul had a friend to write for him, but in this case he wrote with his own hand. Some scholars think the large letters to which he refers indicate that his "thorn in the flesh" was simply a case of weak eyes (6:11). There may be some truth in the suggestion. It is one of the many conjectures concerning the malady which afflicted the great missionary.

Paul's Defense and Argument

The following brief outline will aid the reader to grasp something of the content of the Galatian letter.

- I Personal: Apostleship: Equality (1-2).
- II Doctrinal: Faith: Fraternity (3-4).
- III Practical: Freedom: Liberty (5-6).

Paul's apologetic is literally a defense of his own apostleship. He shows how he was called to be an apostle, not by man, but of God; he consorted with the chiefest of the saints and claimed absolute equality with them. They recognized that equality too.

Then the writer proceeds to discuss "Divine Grace versus Human Merit." This controversy centers around the point of faith and works. By faith and by faith alone is man justified before God, so Paul argues. But the legalists said, "No, we must follow the requirements of the law to be justified before God." To become a Christian, according to the formula of the latter, a man must become a circumcised, ordinance obeying Jew first. That was not acceptable to Paul. It was not Gospel truth.

External rites, rituals, and requirements have nothing to do with salvation as such. They are not necessary to the completion of salvation. To affirm that circumcision is necessary to salvation is to deny the preceding power of faith. To superadd any formula or rite to faith is to absolutely destroy the foundations of Christianity.

Paul won the argument by citing:

1. His reprimand of Peter.
2. The presence of the Spirit among the Galatians.
3. The case of Abraham.
4. The covenant relationship.
5. The import of the law.
6. The Mosaic saints and the Gospel saints.
7. The peril of Jewish idolatry.
8. The history of Abraham and his two sons.

Paul, let it be remembered, is asking for faith, not works; the Gospel, not law; freedom, not license; the cross, not circumcision. That to him represents the sum and substance, the bone and marrow, the brain and sinew of Christianity.

The hortatory section urges love as the final and authoritative grace in action and conduct. Love is the spirit of the law. The works of the flesh and the fruit of the Spirit are compared and contrasted and every "new man" to use Trapp's words "is two men."

Paul cites the scars and brands which he bore for the sake of the Savior. The Galatians bore scars, too, but they were the scars of useless Jewish ceremonial requirements. To bear the stigmata of Christ was an honor to Paul. "It is not gold, precious stones, statutes, that adorn a soldier, but a torn buckler, a cracked helmet, a blunt sword, a scarred face," so Pericles declares. Paul met all of the requirements of a good soldier.

The Abiding Appeal

If the church of the twentieth century wishes to sever itself from Christ, then let it superimpose upon the Gospel requirements, the requirements of Moses; let it add to faith, the rites, ceremonies, observances, etc., of an Old Testament economy, as necessary to salvation, and we depart from the revelation of God in Jesus Christ. That holds true for individuals, churches, councils, yea, entire Christendom.

If we wish to join the motley crew of the false religions, then let us adopt new ceremonies, systems, creeds, and the life of the church shall be no more. The pagan religions are lifeless because they have no morality. They have no morality because they have no Christ. They need no atonement for sin because they can appease the God or gods of wrath by the offerings of their hands. They offer their sacrifices and say, "Now we can do what we like." Consequently sins of every variety abound under the sanctions of religion? Why? Simply because some extra and non-essential requirements are super-added to faith.

The writer is done with legalism. He is a Christian by virtue of the fact that he can sing:

"Nothing in my hand I bring Simply to Thy cross I cling."

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

By Rev. Milton Bennett Lambdin

IV. Palestine: "The Glory of All Lands"

Palestine is the most wonderful country on all the face of the earth. Not so by reason of its size, for it is but a wee bit of land surface, just about 150 miles long, and anywhere from thirty-five to sixty miles in breadth, hardly as large as our little state of Connecticut. You could tack Palestine away in a corner of Texas, which is twelve times its size, and play hide and seek to find it.

Not wonderful as an ancient scintillating world power in competition with the other great nations of the historic past; nor were the people of that land famous in the constructive arts, as were the dwellers of the Euphrates-Tigris valley and the Nile. You look in vain for the massive and imposing ruins of pyramids and obelisks and sphinxes and palaces and tombs. They made no pretense in the achievements of scholarship in the sciences, literature, inventions, discovery, with well stocked libraries to exploit their attainments in the wide domain of literary culture.

You dig in vain into the rubbish ruins of its ancient cities to run across numerous extensive "finds" of papyrus and cuneiform tablets with their historic records and legends of the long forgotten ages of the vanished centuries.

And yet, inconspicuous as Palestine has been in comparison with other lands, in its extent of geographical areas, and backward, too, in the rich trophies and accessories that milestone and illuminate the grand march and pageantry of the world's upward climb to what is termed an all rounded civilization, it has been

The Theater of the Most Stupendous Events upon which the eyes of men and of angels have looked in all the long drawn history of the bygone ages. For it is the Land of the People, the Land of the Book, and the Land of the Man. The people, the descendants of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, chosen of the Almighty "to be a special people unto himself, above all the peoples that are upon the face of the earth" (Deuteronomy 7:6).

The Book—The Bible. The inspired "God-breathed"—Word of God,

"That gives its light to every age,
That gives, but borrows none."

The Man—the virgin conceived, but the Holy Ghost begotten, eternal Son of God, garbed in human flesh in his mission of seeking and saving poor, lost polluted sinners like you and me. And there is no land, though it be a land coronated,

"Like the glory that was Greece,
And the grandeur that was Rome," that can so thrill our imagination or pul-satte our hearts as this Land of the People, the Book, the Man.

Physically the land of Palestine is Divided Into Four Longitudinal Belts running practically its entire length north to south.

First, the Maritime Plain of the Great, or Mediterranean Sea, a famous historic highway over which the innumerable armies of the past tramped and retramped in their campaigns of mutual aggression and conquest. A ligament, too, to peaceful intercourse and good will for the travelers and tourists and wanderers of an adventurous turn of mind, in those far off fascinating days. Likewise arteries of trade and commerce, with endless caravans always on the move, in the intercourse between the lands of Egypt, the Euphrates-Tigris valley, the clustered cities of Persia, far-off India and China, along with that of the distant reaches of Ethiopia and equatorial Africa and Arabia.

The second belt is a continuation of the mountain range of Lebanon, as it extends down through the very backbone center of the land to lose itself in the Southern desert. In its head on towards the Sinaitic peninsula. It makes its single break in the Plain of Esdraelon, a short distance south of the Sea of Galilee, with a sharp "right turn" towards the East, thus constituting an open door, or meeting point between the East and the West.

A pivot spot battle plain of the remotest ages, where Assyrian, Chaldean, Persian, Hittite, Syrian, Egyptian Greek, Roman, Moslem, Crusaders, French and English armies contended for the supremacy of Palestine. It was here that Napoleon fought the English and the Turks in 1799, and where the French cavalry drove the Turks into the swamps to their utter destruction.

At this strategic spot, stood the strongly fortified city of Megiddo, a well nigh impregnable fortress guard to the mountain gap, or open door of entrance into Palestine. And its name has been interwoven into a weird prophetic symbolism, Armageddon, "for the scene of some great spiritual contest" in the coming ages (Revelation 16:14-16). where shall be fought "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Whatever the symbolism may actually mean neither you nor I can tell.

The third belt is the volcanic fracture or depression of the Jordan valley, the deepest gorge, or split, on the surface of the globe, reaching from the headwaters of the Jordan at the Lake of Merom, to the Gulf of Akaba in the Sinaitic peninsula. Through this gorge runs the Jordan in a zigzag course for two hundred miles, but only some sixty miles "as the crow flies," to empty itself into the salt, or Dead sea, the lowest point below sea level on the face of the earth, 1,292 feet.

The fourth belt is that of the Houran, immediately across the Jordan, "the Land of Gilead," some 4,000 feet above sea level, a marked contrast to the land on the west in Palestine proper, some 1,300 feet below the sea level.

The natural frontiers of Palestine, as we can readily see, are the Great, or Mediterranean, sea on the west; the Syrian desert on the east; the Arabian or Sinaitic deserts on the south and the Lebanon mountains on the north. Anciently it was locked and barred to invasion from every direction by sea, mountain and desert. The fortunate people that inhabited the land could put the key of national security into its pocket and safely hand up the warning sign, "Private Property. Keep Out." Not, of course, in these modern days, with its long range guns and aeroplane flotillas.

Its geographical lay made this tiny bit of land surface a connecting link between Europe, Asia, and Africa, a veritable and essential gateway to three continents. And no position could be more strategic for military, political and commercial purposes. The power that held it had its hand on the latchstring to open, or to close the passage-way of entrance from all directions. And it was for this imperative reason that the great world empires of the past looked with covetous eyes upon Palestine as a rich prize worth competition for in diplomatic statecraft and upon fields of battle.

Alexander and Caesar both sought to ingratiate the friendship of the Jews and granted them most favorable civil and religious concessions. The numerous physical descriptive chapters of the Old Testament picture Palestine in glowing colors, as and fertility. "A good land," Deuteronomy 6:18; "Glorious land" Daniel 11:16; "Glory of all lands" Ezekiel 20:6. A land of brooks, and springs, and wells. A land of wheat and barley and vines and fig trees and pomegranates. A land of forests in which honey dripped from the trees, with cattle on a thousand hills, and corn growing to the tops of the mountains, and harvests so prolific that every seventy years the soil could lie fallow. and with the occupant of the land free to enjoy a whole year's vacation from manual toil. An ideal condition of things.

Its beauty and fertility color tone the pages of the Bible in a fresco of poetic imagery, while the cities and villages took their picturesque names from its attractive setting and surroundings. You can drink in the musical ripple and melody of the waterfall in En Gaminin, "Garden of Fountains." En Englain, "Spring of the two pools." Mizpah, as in imagination you see the wide pinioned eagle poised on his aerie. Ramah, high, exalted Migdol, Tower of God. And with a teeming population that filled to the overflowing its countless cities, towns, villages and hamlets.

But in the very heyday of all this beauty and charm of natural scenery, its wondrous fertility of soil and prosperity of national life, there rings out the warning notes of the Lord's judgments to be visited upon the land and nation, should his chosen people turn their apostate backs upon him in disloyalty to his law and his service. "And the cities shall be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate" (Isaiah 6:11-13).

Palestine today answers vividly to this prophetic forewarning. The forests have largely disappeared, though here and there you may see a ghost-like, spectral tree. The picturesque terraces have disappeared from the mountain slopes the rich soil washed away, leaving the whole aspect bleak and dreary, as the yellow limestone rocks knob its surface on every side. Save in some rare portions of Galilee and Samaria, the numerous olive and fig orchards have largely vanished. And its former occupants, the Jews, as foretold and foredoomed, have been "sifted" throughout the earth. "Wanderers among the nations" (Amos 9:9; Hosea 9:17), "a race without a country."

And yet, withal, in its dreariness and desolation Palestine is a land of great possibilities. It is the wonderland of the world in the variety of its climate, soil, vegetation, in its grouping of mountain and plain, and wilderness.

SAUL IN TARSUS

Lesson Text: Acts 21:39; 3:27, 28; 26:4-7; Philippians 3:3-6; Golden Text: 2 Timothy 2:15

Saul Born in Tarsus. Acts 22:1-3, 27, 28

One's usefulness to the world or to the church of the living God is not dependent upon one's place of birth; but sometimes the place helps. You will remember the question was asked concerning the ministry of Jesus, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Though the place of the childhood of Jesus was spoken of with derision it did not really hinder his ministry, for his ministry rose about the circumstance of place or condition. But with Paul or Saul it was different, and he was greatly benefited and empowered by his geographical heritage, for in Tarsus he had privileges that would not have been his had he been born in some less advantageous city or village.

TUESDAY

Saul's Religious Training. Philippians 3:1-6

Saul's educational heritage gave him a decided advantage over many of his adversaries in his Christian ministry. First of all he had the advantage of imbibing early in life some of the learning that made Tarsus a rival of Athens and Alexandria. Then early in his teens he had the privilege of attending the most famous theological college of the period, the noted Hebrew school headed by the Gamaliel, perhaps the greatest teacher from a human standpoint the Jews ever produced. Under such teaching it is not to be considered strange that he became one of the most "orthodox" Jews of the day.

Hebrew Parents' Love for Children. Judges 13:8-14

Through all the history of the early development of the Hebrew race emphasis is placed upon their love for children. Especially is it pointed out that every prospective Hebrew mother cherished a hope in her bosom that her child might be a son and that he might be the "son of the woman who should bruise the serpent's head."

The story of the daily reading of today is the story of one such woman who was anxious to learn how to fulfill the requirements of motherhood, and to know just how to properly train and care for her prospective son.

THURSDAY

Religious Training Commanded. Deuteronomy 6:1-9

Such religious training as Hebrew parents, especially fathers, were instructed to give their children, may not be in harmony with some modern ideas concerning the individual development of the child, and the opportunity it should have to find itself through the development of "self expression," but we feel quite sure if Christian parents practiced only a fractional part of the teaching Moses gave to Hebrew parents in the portion of Scripture designated for today's reading a different attitude toward God and the church would be manifested by the youth of today.

FRIDAY

A Hebrew Boy Dedicated to God. 1 Samuel 1:21-28

We would not contend that the attempt made by a devoted mother to dedicate her child to God will result in a great and holy life for the one she has thus dedicated in every instance. There are so many things that may interfere with the fulfillment of her hopes. She may have been mistaken in her interpretation of her own motive in thus dedicating the child to God. Without her realizing the fact it may have been her own ambition she wished to further rather than the glory of God that should be the outcome of the dedication. But with Samuel all things worked out in a splendid manner, and we would suggest it would be a sacred thing for any devoted Christian mother to sincerely consider the possibilities that such a dedication of her children holds out to her and to them.

SATURDAY

The Lord Giveth Wisdom. Proverbs 2:1-10

"Wise in their own conceits" truthfully describes a vast number of men and women in the world today. But there is a wisdom that is really worth while.

It is important not to confuse learning, education, or knowledge with wisdom, for there are many learned in all the ways of the world, possessing all the highest degrees granted by the best universities of the land, who seem very much lacking in real wisdom. We would not discredit learning for one moment. There is too little of it in the world as it is, but we should not expect that to take the place of real wisdom that comes from an intelligent understanding of God and his relationship to the world, and a close fellowship with him.

SUNDAY

The Influence of God's Word. Psalm 119:9-16

The advantages of an acquaintance with God's word are clearly pointed out by the Psalmist in the reading for today.

According to the Psalmist it will cleanse a young man's way, providing it is laid up in his heart, that he may not sin against his Maker, and it will cause him to rejoice in the way of the Lord's testimonies, as MUCH as in all RICHES. What more striking claim than that can be made?

But, as the Psalmist says, this will be brought about through meditation upon the precepts of the Lord, and by not forgetting his Word.

The Rise and Progress of Christian Endeavor in Our Denomination

Evidences of Progress

Enthusiastic reports from many angles reveals progress, in our young people's work. Our California churches this year added to their Bible conference, a Bible conference for Endeavorers alone. It was a two day session, with every anticipation of making it a permanent gathering. Pennsylvania Endeavorers have conducted institutes and rallies among our churches. The past eight years, through the kind, charitable spirit of the Sunday school workers, your President has been teaching the principles of Christian Endeavor in the Shipshewana Training Camp. Classes have ranged from 20 in the beginning to 145. These students who complete the three years' course are recommended to the International society, as being worthy of the degree of C. E. E. (Christian Expert Endeavor). Aside from this, two years ago a class was conducted during our national conference, accommodating a number of older Endeavorers who could not get to a camp, or maintain a class in their own church. Also worthy of note is the fact that articles in the last number of the Christian Endeavor World appear over the names of two young lady Endeavorers of our church.

Workers and Leaders of the Brethren

Church! May I somehow appeal to you that we are a part of a vital, functioning organization for the direction of the souls of children and young people in our care. Our Brethren Union is linked with the International Society of Christian Endeavor. Dr. Yoder was the first trustee from our denomination to the International Society. Dr. Geo. C. Carpenter was the next trustee and upon the recommendation and efforts of this Endeavorer, your speaker has been trustee from our brotherhood for the past six years.

Dr. D. A. Poling in his mighty key-note address at Milwaukee in the International Convention asked the question, "Has Christian Endeavor come to the kingdom for a time like this?" Then he proceeded to tell his audience how Christian Endeavor is a child of the church, that it is within the church and has no purpose or plan apart from the church; that it is a youth movement, unique in spirit, activities, leadership and pre-eminently Christian. Then to quote his own answer Dr. Poling said, "Christian Endeavor has come, Christian Endeavor is here, to help youth say, and to show youth how to say, in all life's relationships, "I WILL BE CHRISTIAN."

Trite to say—that is easy, just simple. But my friend, isn't it enough? Do we not need consistent Christian living NOW if ever we needed it? Young People, I appeal to you in the name of Christ and his church, Be Christian. Parents and Leaders, I urge you to be Christian before those whom you lead. You cannot be an effective, helpful leader and be less than a Christian. Why minimize the fact that God has called you and permits you to serve him and be a co-laborer with his Son and even promises that you shall be an heir and yes, a joint-heir of Jesus in that day to come. Why attempt to serve two masters? God's offer to you is magnanimous. His love is abundant, his Grace IS sufficient. If Jesus shakes the hand of a stranger today, he does it through you. If Jesus rescues the perishing in your city or community, he does it through you or one like you. You will not want to be guilty of retarding or hindering the work commissioned unto the church and her forces by being anything less than a Christian.

The continued progress and life of our Endeavor work depends upon you and those whom you represent at home. The future responsibilities of our church are within your reach. You are preparing yourself to make it a great work and your church a finer, more effective institution for God or else you become intoxicated with indifference and lethargy, while somebody else assumes the responsibility.

A Godless, reckless life, most certainly will not be laying a good foundation for coming generations to tread upon, neither will it protect and safeguard these great institutions which have become so great a part of our life. Therefore, BE CHRISTIAN.

The Program. Dr. Poling offers for this year a Four-fold campaign, A Witnessing Program. Your societies may take it and use it and prosper or you may leave it, as some always do. I am constrained to say, a lot of our societies would be richer and more effective if you leaders should cooperate a bit more closely with us. It has been the policy of my staff to interpret and present a program for our denomination as nearly feasible and adaptable to our work as is possible.

In conclusion, I will present Dr. Poling's program.

- 1—Witnessing for Christ in my individual life.
- 2—Witnessing for Christ in my church.
- 3—Witnessing for Christ in Social Justice.
- 4—Witnessing for Christ in International Good-will and Peace.

Leaders, help your young people to apply this program. Be a councillor, a director to them. Teach folks to plan a service and carry it out. Study with young people the plan of New Testament Giving, with the tithe as a minimum. Show them how to study their Bible and teach them the great art of prayer. You will then have the joy and satisfaction of seeing the church prosper and grow, because you have sown the seed that shall in due time spring up and grow, bringing forth a harvest, some thirty, some sixty, and some a hundred-fold to the glory of God. July 11, 1933

Dear Evangelist Readers:

As a month has elapsed since I wrote you last, and as Mr. Foster and I are just on the eve of going to Bangui, I will write again concerning our doings.

We have now a new Station personnel. Mr. and Mrs. Foster are replacing Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway. Miss Tyson has gone to Bellevue to replace Miss Bickel and Miss Patterson has been re-appointed to Yalohe. The station activities are numerous. Mr. Foster, of course, has charge of the church and its activities, ably assisted by his wife. Mr. and Mrs. Foster have also taken charge of the station activities such as building, repairs, gardening, care of our herds, etc. Miss Emmert directs the French school and also has charge of the Bible school, assisted by other members of the missionary staff as well as by Andre Boybou. Miss Patterson teaches the women's department of the Bible school, and Mrs. Foster and I the Junior Bible school.

Since Miss Tyson's departure for Bellevue the medical work has continued with the assistance of the native nurse only. He, however, has several undiplomed helpers. God has signally answered prayer regarding the medical work in raising up a number of serious cases. We have had however one death in the hospital due to tuberculosis and complications.

Since the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway the work of translating the Sunday school lessons and other Bible lessons has necessarily fallen into my hands. This with the medical work and the housekeeping for our little family of three renders me sufficiently busy, which indeed is the case with every member of the staff.

Joseph Nguede, who accompanied the Hathaways to the coast, has not yet returned, and therefore we have no news of them since they left us one month ago. David Remy, the nurse who went with them to the coast to be married, has not yet returned.

We have not seen our fellow missionaries on the other stations since I last wrote you, but news from them, while infrequent and scanty, reports them in good health and happy in the Lord's service.

Miss Crawford was to have commenced her school the first of July and we have been much in prayer for her. Miss Tyson is extremely busy in the case of the heavy dispensary work at Bellevue. We are grateful for God's care and protection over the lives of our children, Kenneth and David Sheldon at Bellevue, who do not suffer as much from illness as do many children in the homeland.

We are grateful to you all for your continued prayers in behalf of the work and we are daily receiving many remarkable answers.

Faithfully yours,
 FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

NEWS FROM CHINA

"The severer the trials of the Church and the more the difficulties in the way of the Christians getting together, the more strongly do they and their leaders feel the need of 'not forsaking the assembling of themselves together' for Bible study and prayer, several times a year. These classes, sometimes held in the home or yard of some Christian, or in a room rented or donated as a church, bring together humble folk, both men and women, intent on knowing more about the Bible and how to live the Christian life. They come from nearby villages and pay their own food bills, pooling the common expenses. At one such class, from which I have just returned, there were about forty earnest men and women meeting in a home in an obscure village, some who attended the class from neighboring villages being accommodated at night in the homes of other Christian families in the village. When more commodious accommodations are available, as at one of our larger chapel centers, larger groups can meet, and these are led by one of more of the eight country pastors, with or without the missionary assisting. Recently some 150 Christians came together for such a class. I do not recall any previous occasion or class where there was so much prayer and spontaneous singing, including the singing of many Scripture verses generally set to tunes that were distinctly Chinese. These meetings have been characterized by earnest desire for a clearer understanding of the Word to appropriate it, and take it back home and put it into every-day practice. We feel that the influence of these meetings has been decidedly helpful in making the Christians more zealous, and in building up the body of Christ—the Church."—Rev. Charles S. Scott in The Presbyterian.

Because man was made of the dust is no reason why he should grovel in the dust.

A GLORIOUS YEAR AT FIRST BRETHREN, ALLENTOWN

A number of weeks ago I had the splendid opportunity of listening to a brilliant speaker. The gentleman to whom I refer began his speech with this expression: "Allow me to say something before I begin." This is somewhat the same position I am in, as I attempt to write about the activities of the First Brethren Church of Allentown during the past year. We have had such marvelous success that I wish to say something before I begin.

To my mind the best place to start is by telling, with great pleasure, that during the past year the membership of the church has increased by the enrollment of fifteen new members, which is a greater number by three than has been enrolled during the last four years. Besides this, one more confession was made and one baptism completed.

The beauty of the church was enhanced considerably by the American and Christian flags which were presented to the church, with new hymn books and bookcase, by the Christian Endeavor Society.

The church itself was considerably advertised with the thirty-fifth anniversary celebration, by the Rev. Bowman Prophetic Lectures, and the California Quartet programs which were sponsored in addition to the many other types of programs interspersed throughout the year. We must also mention at this point that greater numbers of people attend the services than have for a long while.

A mighty fact stares one in the eye when he realizes the force behind the young people of the church, those upon whom the responsibilities of church managing will rest in the future, in that they have a Christian Endeavor society of one hundred members, most of which are young people.

Even though recreation is a lesser field in which the church has been engaged, it must not be overlooked in that activities are sponsored for young and old for their mutual entertainment. The type of recreation furnished is such as to try to induce them to take Christ with them in all their activities.

We must not overlook the other organizations of the church which have grown considerably during the past year, such as the Sunday School, Infant Department of the Sunday school, Junior Christian Endeavor Society, Woman's Missionary Society and Sisterhood of Mary and Martha. These societies have started a series of plans which we hope will in a short time work out for the welfare of the church.

Much can be said as to what was accomplished but more about the enthusiasm which permeates the people and leaders must be mentioned. More people seem to have become interested in Christian work and are putting their shoulders to the wheel.

In back of all these movements stands a mighty dynamo, a man upon whom great responsibility is placed, a man who measures up to his responsibility, a man who is a leader, and while being a leader cooperates with others to the greatest extent. This man is on fire for the Lord and while he preaches with great force the Lord's word, and while he offers the best of advice in all matters, his greatest quality is that of seeking souls for his Master. This man to whom I refer is none other than Rev. S. E. Christiansen, pastor of the church. To him the church is greatly indebted.

This article, as you may have seen, has been written from the young people's angle by a young man who is desirous of seeing the church grow and who knows that it will so long as we keep that great beacon light, Jesus Christ, a guiding light for our paths through life.

Now that I have said something before I begin, it is too late to start, but I sincerely hope to again have the opportunity at some later date to express some of the things we will accomplish, the Lord permitting, during the coming year.

fied in his earthly living. This unity with Christ is the result of the partaking of the life which was in him. The purity of Christian faith is the result of true union with Christ. The true Christian doctrine cannot be enforced but it can be possessed by those who have the Spirit of Christ.

Christ Revealed God through Obedience

The obedience of Christ was necessary to the perfect revelation of the Father's will.
It was necessary that Christ know the Father in order to truly reveal him. The life of Christ in the world constitutes this revelation. What we have recorded in the Bible is the message Christ brought of the will of God to man. Our Lord demonstrated the importance of the revelation from God by his own obedience to the Divine order for this world. Christ accepted the symbol of Spiritual cleansing though he knew himself to be free from the uncleanness of the world. "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness" (Matt. 3:15). Christ truly walked the way with us. He was baptized. In the upper room our Lord stooped and washed the disciples' feet because he knew they were not all clean. He commanded them to wash one another's feet. The disciples were typical human beings. In his relations with them Christ demonstrated his program of cleansing and salvation. The Gospel Christ gave his disciples and commanded them to preach in all the world was indeed the Gospel Christ first offered them as the way of salvation. The Apostles declared to the people that the Gospel they were preaching was the same Gospel they had received from the Lord (Romans 15:19; 1 Thess. 2: 9). And St. Paul declares that if any one, even an angel, should preach any other Gospel than that which the apostles preached, he should be accursed (Gal. 1:8, 11). The least departure from the preaching of the apostles would constitute a perversion of the Gospel of Christ. The perfect obedience of Christ in the perfecting of God's plan of salvation calls for a perfect surrender of man's will to the will of God in Christ, which alone can enable us to become inher-itors of God's salvation.

The Sin Problem Hinges on Obedience

The sin problem rested upon the question of a perfect obedience. The conflict in the world is evidence of rebellion against the rule and authority of God. The sin-blinded eyes of man see glory in the way of the world. The Son of God came to earth in the form of man to reveal the true glory to the world. The Lord gave obedience as the first principle in his own submission to baptism by John. Our Lord also told his disciple that "I am the way . . . no man cometh unto the Father but by me" (John 14:6). The life of our Lord as Savior relates to our present need. He came to reveal us the way to life and that way is revealed in his ministry on earth. There is only one way of faith and that is to follow Jesus. "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness but shall have the light of life" (John 8:12). It was the earthly life of our Lord which the Father testified, "I am well pleased." God sent his Son to be the Savior of the world, and to do this Christ took upon himself human flesh, it follows therefore that man must enter into fellowship with Christ in order to possess eternal life. The way of Christ begins where the sinner really is. "He became sin for us Who knew no sin" (2 Cor.
5:21). God in Christ can make men righteous when men become subject to the grace of God. The sin-problem becomes solved when mankind elects to walk as Christ walked and obey as he obeyed.

God's Perfect Servant

3—Christ became God's Perfect Servant

in order to make perfect God's plan for the world. Jesus came to do for God what man failed to do. "Lo, I come in the volume of the Book that is written of me, to do thy will, O God" (Psa. 40:7; Heb. 10:7).
Again, Jesus said, "For I came down from Heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me" (John 6:38). The Apostle Paul tells us (Phil. 2), "He took the form of a Servant." These passages reveal to us the fact that God could not accomplish his purpose in the world with sinful men. He sent his own Son in the flesh that the Divine plan might be perfectly accomplished. The Lord Jesus appears in Scripture as the one elect of God.
In him and his work the Divine interest centers. The human race is not set to do the will of God, the Son of God alone comes to earth as the Perfect Obedient Servant.

The Prophet Isaiah speaks of Christ as the "elect" of God (Isa. 42:1). He is the chosen, the beloved; in whom the Father's soul is well pleased. The Divine glory of Christ was encased in human flesh. "And being found in fashion as a man he became obedient even unto death." The Son of God having accepted the role of a man was also obedient in contrast to the first man who became disobedient. The Gospel reveals to us the character of a man in whom God perfectly dwells. The miracles of Christ reveal the fact that the natural order is not in rebellion to the command of its Creator. The fish brings him the tax money (Mt. 17). The water becomes wine at his command (John 2). Darkened souls and saddened hearts turn to light at his word.
Every miracle is a gleam of Christ's Divine glory breaking through his human flesh.

The Indwelling God the Secret of Salvation

The Lord Jesus Christ did not need to come in the flesh to prove the truth and reality of a living, Personal God. The downfall of the human race under the Old Covenant was the trust in human strength rather than in the power of God. This terrible mistake was current in the time of Christ. "I am come in my Father's name and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive"
(John 5:43). The doctrine of the indwelling God is the secret of salvation. "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it" (Mark 8:35). It is stated of our Lord that "He made himself of no reputation, and took the form of a servant" (Phil. 2). He was the greatest Person though he became the most perfect servant of all. Jesus avoided every chance to reveal his own Person. The temptations of Satan for self-display were refused by him. Jesus Christ took the form of a servant and faithfully performed the role of a servant. Our Lord left the whole process of his earthly ministry entirely in the hands of the Father.
If this be true, then what we see in the life and ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ is not the expression of a character of history but the revelation of God the Father.
"If any man will to come after me, let him deny himself . . ." (Matt. 16:24). Jesus was wholly submissive to the Father and we are required to be wholly submissive to him in all things. The relation Christ sustained to the Father made possible human salvation and the relation the sinner sustains to Christ makes possible the saving effect of God's salvation.

Godliness Dependent on Sustained Relation

The richness of God's grace is expressed in the Person of his Son who came in the form of a servant. This unique manifestation of Deity reveals the fact that Godliness is not conditioned on the station which a person may have but upon a relation a person sustains. The first Adam was made a living soul, he lost the relation with God and became subject to death. The last Adam became a "quickening Spirit" and perfectly maintained the fellowship with God the Father. (See 1 Cor. 15:45). The work of God's grace appears in the miraculous preservation of Moses when all Hebrew male children had been decreed to die. The type of the preservation of the Israelitish nation appears in the bush that burns and is not consumed (Exod. 3:2). Israel burned but was not consumed. The three Hebrew children stand unscorched in the Babylonian furnace because the Son of God stands with them. The humble flesh of the Son of God is preserved from the wrath of men. Israel, God's chosen nation, is unsalable; the Son of God in the flesh is not destroyed by the wrath of sinful men. He lived and acted in his Father's name. He walked through the vicissitudes of this earthly life until God was ready for him to yield up his earthly living. Jesus was never the victim, he voluntarily yielded himself to do the will of the Father even unto the yielding of his Spirit on the cross. The richness of God's grace only becomes manifest to those who most completely let him have his way with them.

There is a rich lesson of God's protection for the redeemed sinner who fully yields himself to God. The will of God the Son was yielded to God the Father. The cross is the symbol of Christ's ministry as the Servant. The work of the Son of God was an eternal work. He was the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. 13:8). The historic death of Christ on the cross marks the ending of the Father's will for the Son as the Servant. The hosts of sin have always opposed the sovereign will of God. The perfect obedience of God the Son Incarnate is the only way of salvation and life. The Apostle Paul understood this to be the order for those who are saved. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice" (Romans 12:2). The message to the church at Smyrna was, "Be thou faithful unto death" (Rev. 2:10). Christ saved us by yielding himself for us. We are saved by believing on him to that degree in which we shall yield our bodies as a living sacrifice to do his will.

4—The perfecting of salvation required the obedience of Christ to the will of the Father; the perfecting of grace requires the obedience of the believer to the way of Christ. In the priestly prayer of John seventeen, Jesus says, "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do and now I come to thee, Holy Father, sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth" (Vs. 4, 11, 17). Our Lord claims the glory which was his through all eternity. The burden of Christ's prayer for his people is that they might be "sanctified through the truth" and be one in the Godhead. The sanctifying agent for the sinner is God's truth and all that it implies. When Jesus said, "I am the truth" (John 14:6), and when Jesus is said to be the "Word" (John 1), we have sanctification involved in the fellowship of the Divine Persons; not in one separate Divine act. The account in Hebrews 5:9, in its literal rendering is, "having perfected, he became the Author of eternal salvation." The truth we wish to discover is as to whether Jesus' ministry prior to the cross had any significance in the plan of salvation. The Scriptural teaching is that what is implied in the Gospel is the saving ministry of Christ. The Gospel is the expression of the Divine Person as related to man's present need. The whole Bible deals with the relation of God with man in time. The future is veiled in mystery, except for the promise that we shall be with God the Father and God the Son where they are. Salvation restores the fellowship of God's people with him.

Jesus' Complete Submission an Example to Us

The earthly ministry of Jesus was not of his own but of the Father. In Jesus of Nazareth mankind beholds God's Son occupying the place of a servant. The agony in the garden of Gethsemane (Mark 14:32), shows the completeness of Jesus' submission to the will of the Father. The Father preserved the Son from many enemy attempts to destroy his life. In the prayer of John seventeen, Jesus recognizes the completion of his work on earth and the hour of his delivery into the hands of sinners. Note please, the care with which Jesus waits upon the Father's will before he gives himself into the hands of men.

Jesus was set to do the Father's will and was subject to no other.

The life of Christ on earth was the expression of what St. Paul calls "the spirit of life" (Romans 8:2). The law of the spirit of life can make us free from the law of sin and death. Again St. Paul in speaking of the ministry of Jesus Christ says, "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will" (Ephesians 1:11). What Christ did on earth was according to the "counsel of God's will." The ordinances which Christ himself practiced and taught are according to the will of him who willet all things. We believe the ordinances which Christ gave to the apostles have been sanctified by the example of Jesus. They became sacred and holy acts when performed by those who sincerely love Christ and trust in his salvation. They become the most blasphemous mockery to those who love the world and practice the ordinances because they are a part of the practice of the church. If Christ must obey the will of God in order to effect a true and valid salvation, it is necessary for those who seek salvation to obey the will of God in order that they may obtain the blessing of Divine grace. The heart of Christian conduct is the obedience of the Gospel, believing the Gospel to be the expression of the Holy Will of God.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON

"I Shall See the King" was sung to announce the afternoon session of Conference. Wm. Clough read John 1:1-14, and offered the prayer. Conference was pleased to listen to the "Gospel Messengers" who sang several Gospel songs. Herman Koontz gave the Bible lecture on, "The Ministry of the Son of Man." Grant McDonald closed the hour with a word of prayer.

Fred Kinzie invoked God's guidance upon the business session to follow. The Credential Committee read its report which totaled 215 delegates. This report was accepted. Minutes of the previous session were read and approved. A carefully prepared report of the Committee on Boys Work was presented as follows:

The Boys' Council of The Brethren Church NAME. "The Boys' Council of the Brethren Church" shall be the name of the National Work for Boys in the Brethren Church. There shall also be State or District Council as the State or District Conferences shall desire and decide.

PURPOSES. It shall not be the purpose of the Boys' Council to establish any new organizations in the Local Churches, but shall on the application of any or all Boys' groups or classes, or troops of the local church, constitute such as Chapters in the Boys' Council.

The purpose of the National Council shall be to supply an Annual Council Program at the time and in connection with the National Conference of Brethren Churches, and whenever possible in conjunction with the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha. This National Council program is to be of such a character as shall be helpful to any of the affiliated boys' groups without promoting any one of such. The programs shall be definitely Christian.

The added purpose of the organization shall be that through the officers and committees of the National Council helpful advice and counsel shall be given to all boys' groups that are members of the Council in the solution of their problems; and that there may be goals or points of emphasis suggested by the National Council to all local chapters, i. e., "Christian Life Work," "Missions," "Christian Citizenship," etc.—such suggested goals not to conflict with the aims of the affiliated groups.

MEMBERSHIP. Any organized Boys' Group in connection with a Brethren church or Sunday School may be a member of the National Council. There may be as many of such Chapters in the local church as there are such organizations. Each shall be separate and distinct and shall be issued a Certificate of Membership after proper applications are received, and they may name their chapter locally, or may use the name that they had used before application was made. In no case do we suggest that they shall sever or diminish their loyalty to their existing organization.

Any Boy between the ages of 9 and 25 may be a member of the local Chapter of his church. It is urged that each boy shall be a member.

ORGANIZATION. There will be a National Organization called a National Council. There will be a State Organization called a State Council, according to the desire of the State or District Conference

There will be local chapters in connection with local churches.

There will be such organization within the different groups, local, state, and national as shall be in accord with good business practices.

MEETINGS. Locally there shall be such meetings as the organization shall determine. It is suggested that the meetings minister to the four-fold needs of life, physical, mental, social and spiritual.

National Council meetings shall be once each year, in conjunction with the National Conference of Brethren Churches.

State Council meetings shall be once each year, in conjunction with the State Conferences of the Brethren Churches.

Other meetings as the Organization desires may be arranged for.

REPRESENTATION. Each local Chapter shall be represented in the State or District and National Council meetings on the basis of one delegate for each Ten of the active members of the Chapter. There shall be credential blanks issued by the State and National Councils.

FINANCE.—Each Credential to State or National Council shall be accompanied with a fee of 25 cents.

A Plan of Finance shall be adopted which shall, through dues or otherwise, care for the finance of the Council. It is suggested that whatever plan is used, one-third be for the local chapter, one-third for the State Council, and one-third for the National Council.

The Boys' Council of the Brethren Church shall acknowledge a very definite stewardship to God for all things, and shall consistently teach Tithing as the evidence of this acknowledgement.

ADVISORY COMMITTEES. There shall be a National and State Advisory Committee. These shall be named by the respective Conferences for three years. These shall counsel with the Executive Committee in the respective fields of work.

In the local Chapter where there are no Advisory Committees already serving, a committee similar to that for the State and National Councils shall be constituted by the local church in which the Chapter is located. In cases where there are already Advisory Committees serving, no change should be made. The local Advisory Committee should serve for all the Chapters in the Church.

IN BEGINNING. This 1933 National Conference of Brethren Churches shall constitute a Committee of Ten, or enlarge the present "Boys' Work Committee" to Ten. This committee shall be instructed to prepare the Program for the 1934 Council Meeting, and do all the work necessary to promote such a meeting.

The National Conference of Brethren Churches (1933) shall devise ways of financing, that this First National Council meeting may be made possible.

Conference moved to adopt the report and that the Committee on Boys Work, having been increased to ten members, shall be instructed to complete and adjust the plan and put it in operation at next year's conference.

National C. E. Officers were elected as Supt., Homer Kent; Missionary Supt., Miles Tabor; Citizenship Supt., John Locke; Tract Promotion, H. W. Koontz.

The Committee on the Spiritual State of the churches reported as follows and was adopted by vote of Conference.

The following Resolution was received and voted by conference to be entrusted to the Committee on Organization and Administration,—“In order to forestall further unwise building propositions among the churches, and because many of these unfortunate deals finally fall upon the Home Mission Board for assistance, and thus unnecessarily call for funds greatly needed to establish new churches we therefore propose—That this Conference be asked to take steps toward establishing an effective control and oversight over all church erection in the Brethren Denomination. That this oversight cover location, field building plans and financial responsibilities. That any congregation proceeding without this approval and consultation be refused aid if it later develops financial difficulties.

Conference elected the following members to the Board of Benevolence: F. C. Vanator, G. L. Maus, L. V. King. Motion prevailed that the Committee on Committees present five names to augment the Boys' Work Committee and read them at the evening session. F. C. Vanator was elected to membership on the Brethren Home Board for a period of five years. Conference voted to print as many annuals as possible for as reasonable and practicable amount of money. These Annuals to be printed and sold by the Publication Board. Conference moved that the $400.00 held in endowment by the Board of Benevolence be used for the general fund. Following is the report of the treasurer for the Student's Aid fund which was adopted by Conference:

Christian living is best exemplified in constancy rather than in periodic ecstasy.

It is the hope of immortality that gives meaning to this life. Without it our existence here would be a riddle without an answer.

NOTICE

To all Ohio Pastors and The Board of Evangelists

In this issue and on a card of notification, you are made aware of a School for Evangelism to be held at Ashland, Monday, September 25th, beginning at 10:00 A. M. It was the need of a beginning and an awakening among ourselves that this was called very suddenly by the one most responsible, after advising with several of the men here.

During the week following, State Conferences will be held and later. other church doings will demand more serious attention and thus, it seemed imperative that I make this call for this date. I am sure that flaws could be picked about such a procedure, yet who else would have felt compelled to do it? We must get together and plans must be laid and projects must be started.

It is to be hoped that none will allow anything to prevent this meeting. Pastors will please announce it and urge their workers to attend this meeting. If sickness or death compels any one programmed to be absent, they will please inform the writer. If there is not a good response, it will be taken as a token that we are better at making resolutions than at executing them. Only three hours from Bryan and four, from Dayton, people could come and return the same day if necessary. Let us get started.

CHARLES A BAME, Chairman
Board of Evangelists of Ohio.

BRETHREN EVANGELIST

The Master Soul Winner and the Woman of Samaria

Trouble in the "Amen Corner"

'Twas a stylish congregation, that of Theophrastus Brown,
 And its organ was the finest and biggest in the town,
 And the chorus—all the papers favorably commented on it,
 For 'twas said each female member had a forty-dollar bonnet.

Now in the "amen corner" of the church sat Brother Eyer,
 Who persisted every Sabbath day in singing with the choir;
 He was poor, but genteel-looking, and his heart as snow was white,
 And his face beamed with sweetness when he sang with all his might.

His voice was cracked and broken, age had touched his vocal cords,
 And nearly every Sunday he would mispronounce the words
 Of the hymns, and 'twas no wonder, he was old and nearly blind,
 And the choir rattled onward, always left him far behind.

The chorus stormed and blustered, Brother Eyer sang too slow,
 And then he used the tunes in vogue a hundred years ago;
 At last the storm-cloud burst, and the church was told, in fine,
 That the brother must stop singing, or the choir would resign.

Then the pastor called together in the lecture room one day
 Seven influential members who subscribe more than they pay.
 And having asked God's guidance in a printed prayer or two
 They put their heads together to determine what to do.

They debated, thought, suggested, till at last "dear Brother York,"
 Who last winter made a million on a sudden rise in pork,
 Rose and moved that a committee wait at once on Brother Eyer,
 And proceed to raze him lively "for disturbin' of the choir."

Said he: "In that 'ere organ I've invested quite a pile,
 And we'll sell it if we can not worship in the latest style;
 Our Philadelphia tenor tells me 'tis the hardest thing
 To make God understand him when the brother tries to sing.

"We've got the biggest organ, the best-dressed choir in town,
 We pay the steepest sal'ry to our pastor, Brother Brown;
 But if we must humor ignorance because it's blind and old—
 If the choir's to be pestered, I will seek another fold."

Of course the motion carried, and one day a coach and four,
 With the latest style of driver, rattled up to Eyer's door
 And the sleek, well-dressed committee, Brother Sharkey, York and Lamb,
 As they crossed the humble portal took good care to miss the jamb.

They found the choir's great trouble sitting in his old armchair,
 And the summer's golden sunbeams lay upon his thin white hair.

He was singing "Rock of Ages" in a voice both cracked and low,
 But the angels understood him, 'twas all he cared to know.

Said York: "We're here, dear brother, with the vestry's approbation.
 To discuss a little matter that affects the congregation;"

"And the choir, too," said Sharkey, giving Brother York a nudge,
 "And the choir, too!" he echoed, with the graveness of a judge.

"It was the understanding when we bargained for the chorus
 That it was to relieve us, that is, do the singing for us;
 If we rupture the agreement, it is very plain, dear brother,
 It will leave our congregation and be gobbed by another.

"We don't want any singing except that what we've bought!
 The latest tunes are all the rage; the old ones stand for naught;
 And so we have decided—are you listening, Brother Eyer?—
 That you'll have to stop your singin', for it flurriyates the choir."

The old man slowly raised his head, a sign that he did hear,
 And on his cheek the trio caught the glitter of a tear;
 His feeble hands pushed back the locks, white as the silky snow,
 As he answered the committee in a voice both sweet and low:

"I've sung the Psalms of David for nearly eighty years,
 They've been my staff and comfort and calmed life's many fears;
 I'm sorry I disturb the choir, perhaps I'm doing wrong,
 But when my heart is filled with praise I can't keep back a song.

"I wonder if beyond the tide that's breaking at my feet,

In the far-off heavenly temple, where the Master I shall greet—
 Yes, I wonder when I try to sing the songs of God up higher
 If the angel band will chide me for disturbing Heaven's choir."

A silence filled the little room; the old man bowed his head;
 The carriage rattled on again, but Brother Eyer was dead!
 Yes, dead! His hand had raised the veil the future hangs before us,
 And the Master dear had called him to the everlasting chorus.

The choir missed him for a while, but he was soon forgot;
 A few church-goers watched the door; the old man entered not.
 Far away, his voice no longer cracked, he sings his heart's desires,
 Where there are no church committees and no fashionable choirs!

The First School of Evangelism Held at Ashland

Not merely the state of Ohio but the entire brotherhood has set itself to special effort in evangelism. Among the goals in both the Ohio District and the National Programs there is one calling for the conduct of Schools of Evangelism. The Ohio Conference machinery has gotten into operation and has begun to click smoothly and effectively. The first School of Evangelism was held at Ashland, Ohio, on September 25th, 1933 under the direction of Dr. Charles A. Bame, and it was attended by nearly all the ministers of the state and a goodly number of laymen, and the program was as satisfactory as the attendance. Because of the brotherhood's new interest in evangelism, and because we can think of no finer way of stirring up greater evangelistic zeal and preparing for a more intelligent approach to the task, we are attempting to pass on something of the benefit derived from the Ashland effort, hoping that at least one similar school will be conducted promptly in every district or among smaller groups of churches throughout the brotherhood.

It has been a long while since we have seen greater enthusiasm manifest on behalf of evangelism or heard a more comprehensive discussion of the theme than at the Ashland gathering. It was a great inspiration to listen to all those splendid addresses, and the exchange of ideas in the discussion periods proved to be very helpful indeed. Almost every phase of the evangelistic task was considered—the warrant of it, experience in it, the message, the method, the manner, the spirit, the type, and the very great necessity and urgency of it. Evangelism was acknowledged to be the supreme task of the church and laymen and ministers alike pledged themselves to cooperate in every possible way to make this year count big for the winning of souls to Christ. We cannot begin to report all the fine things said by the speakers, but it is planned that these addresses in condensed form shall be passed on to our readers in The Evangelist two weeks hence. But this week we are privileged to give a few echoes from some of the men who were there, illustrating how thoroughly this novel undertaking was appreciated. First we will hear from

PROF. M. A. STUCKEY

"A School of Evangelism! We have heard of schools of the prophets, schools of education, schools of every sort and nature, but to have a modern school of evangelism is a rare and real treat. That, the Brethren pastors of the state of Ohio have just enjoyed to the full. They have planned and prayed; they have prayed and planned; they have been inspired anew with heart to heart addresses and interesting open forum discussion. And now they go forth to lead the brotherhood in sacrificial service for our common cause. His is the work; His is the harvest, and ours is the privilege of sowing in His name. May the borders of the church be extended! May the stakes be set anew and the ropes lengthened. Today all of us have prayed this prayer. Tomorrow we shall answer it."

DR. W. H. BEACHLER

We are attempting to quote from memory words which Dr. Beachler said in open conference. Following is at least the substance of what he said: "It is one of the greatest events I have attended in years. I am thoroughly enjoying it. It is most inspiring and helpful. I am glad I am here. I am going back to my ministry with greater zeal for the winning of souls, and especially for house to house soul winning, which can be practiced the year round."

REV. DYOLL BELOTE

characterized the venture as it was being brought to a close in these words: 1. "An unusually large percentage of the ministers of the state present. 2. An intensely earnest and unanimous spirit of interest in the subject of evangelism. 3. An enthusiasm which worked itself out in practical plans and renewed consecration to the carrying out of these plans."

REV. RAY KLINGENSMITH

replied to our inquiry as to his impression in these enthusiastic words: "This conference at Ashland has been one of my richest and most inspirational experiences in Brethrenism."

REV. R. D. BARNARD

"The day spent in the School of Evangelism was one of the greatest in my experience. I trust that the considerations of this day may have wide publicity and be of great helpfulness. I so pray."

REV. NORMAN UPHOUSE

"This day has been a mountain-top experience in my life. I never saw so many men at one place so resigned to do the will of the Lord in the matter of evangelism. I believe we shall see great efforts toward evangelism this coming year all over the state of Ohio."

DR. CHARLES A. BAME

"Every active pastor in the state was present save three, two of whom had planned to come and were prevented. Every person on the program save one not only responded but in a most worthy manner. These were the two elements of inspiration that carried the meeting from climax to climax until nearly all of the fifty pastor workers after calm unimpassioned consideration, stood before the Lord and offered themselves to devoted and sacrificial service for the sake of progress in the Master's work this year in our state. This gave each of us one of the most exalted experiences of a lifetime. I have never seen a more impressive demonstration in thirty years of Christian work."

REV. A. E. WHITTED

"The hours spent in the School of Evangelism at Ashland on September 25th constituted one of the mountain-top experiences in my twenty-five years in the ministry. A coal was fanned into flame which the Lord will surely be pleased to spread in a mighty blaze throughout our beloved fraternity."

DR. G. C. CARPENTER

"The School of Evangelism was a marked success, and marked results ought to come throughout the year. Our regret was that many could not be present to share the inspiration, but we are glad that the addresses and actions will be available to the whole brotherhood through the Evangelist, and we recommend that every pastor and church order extra copies so that every family may benefit. It will pay."

These testimonies truly represent the attitude of all who attended this conference. Everybody felt good about the conference and all were enthusiastic about the winning of souls. We believe the Ohio leadership is much better prepared for the year's work, now that they have been together for this time of mutual inspiration. And what the Ohio Brethren experienced, we could wish might be made possible to the ministers and lay leadership throughout the brotherhood. And why not? Doubtless they shall have it. And when we have all been brought to feel thus keenly our responsibility, may we launch out with sacrificial devotion to the prosecution of our task, and having put our hands to the plow of responsibility, may we never turn back.

Can We Spend Our Way Back to Prosperity?

There are many and various plans being proposed for bringing our country back to prosperity. Some of these plans appeal to reason and to Christian conscience, and some do not. We believe Christian people ought to cooperate with every right and proper measure the government may devise for the common welfare. But toward those that violate conscience and Christian principle, we cannot but register our protest, and suggest that men ought to obey God rather than men.

The newspapers recently carried the announcement that a new feature of the NRA program to be given serious consideration by General Hugh S. Johnson is a proposed nation-wide "Buy Now" drive, during which the people of America will be asked to spend two million dollars. Such a drive can only mean the encouragement of extravagance, and at a time when most people cannot afford to spend money on luxuries. No doubt there are some people of wealth who have been hoarding, and who consequently need to be encouraged to spend, to release some of their funds and help to set money in circulation. But they are not the ones who will likely be influenced by this spending campaign, and spending can hardly be said to be the thing that the rank and file of our citizenship are needing. Rather they need to be encouraged to save their money to help themselves and their neighbors through the winter, if perchance their small income is more than enough to meet the bare necessities from day to day. Their trouble is not in hoarding, but in lacking opportunity of getting. And when some do succeed in getting a little surplus, they should not be subjected to high pressure methods of influence—which amount to practical coercion—to spend what they have saved. They cannot spend their money and have it in their time of need.

Effort to encourage a spending spree is sheer folly. We cannot buy our way back to prosperity. That is what brought us where we are. Extravagance is the chief economic sin of our age—extravagance all along the line, among high and low, rich and poor—and we are suffering from the consequences. Yet there are those who think the people should be urged back into their old lavish spending habits. They have apparently forgotten the thrift campaigns of a few years ago and how space was being sought in every printed page to bring the public mind to support greater industry and thrift. We were told then that "in American private life, extravagance is an evil with rich and poor. People do not conserve their earnings as they should." Now when the average earnings of the people are too small to maintain life on a proper standard, they foolishly tell us we should spend more—spend, SPEND.

But a spending campaign is not merely poor economy; it is poor religion also, and that is the principal reason for its being given attention here. If some one should express surprise that we should connect it in any way with religion, we would reply that such an objection suggests the secret to the trouble we are in—we have had our eyes so close to the economic muddle that we have not seen it in its relation to God. We have been leaving God out of the picture entirely, both in our getting and in our spending. And now in the proposed remedies, we are proceeding along lines that disregard God, or deny him a place in his world. It is not surprising that unregenerate men in their programs should do that, but that so many Christian people should take that attitude is deplorable. It indicates that they are blind to duty or too hardened to sense it. We need to be aroused from our pagan atti-

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Write immediately telling us how many extra copies of The Evangelist on "Evangelism" you want for distribution among your church members.

We are glad to have a word from Mrs. U. J. Shively, president of the National W. M. S. organization, regarding her appreciation of the recent conference at Winona Lake. The W. M. S. has had a large place in the life of our churches and of the brotherhood, and now that this splendid organization has agreed to merge their well-edited publication, The Woman's Outlook, into the Evangelist, as have also the two general missionary boards, we believe their work will be still more widely appreciated by the church at large. Such a merger we have long believed to be for the best interest of all the departments of our national work as well as for the best good of the individual congregations, and to that end we have been laboring and praying. Now that it has been agreed upon by the several boards concerned, we believe it will prove to be of great benefit if it is rightly consummated.

President E. E. Jacobs gives some items of interest regarding the beginning of the new college year. The new commercial department, which is proving quite popular, is under the direction of Prof. Dean Benschoff, who, judging by the impression he is making, is destined to prove a most satisfactory instructor. The college management is to be congratulated both on the launching of this new department and the selection of Prof. Benschoff as its head. Another new member of the college faculty is the new head of the Voice department, Miss Dorcas Bame. The selection of Miss Bame is a happy one. She brings to her new position a splendid mental equipment, experience in teaching public school and normal school music and a voice well trained and of unusual quality. We predict for her success in her new position. It is a satisfaction to note the good attendance of students from among the churches and California is to be congratulated for being in the lead in the number of Brethren students. Our readers will recall that one of the goals aimed at in the last Educational Day campaign by The Evangelist was an increase in the number of students in Ashland College. It is encouraging to note the response that has been given.

An interesting letter is received from Dr. G. C. Carpenter, pastor of the church at Smithville, Ohio, where four have recently been received into the membership by baptism. Brother Carpenter makes mention of a number of interesting items, among which is the report of Wayne County Brethren Day, held at Smithville, when Brother Paul Bauman was the preacher for the morning service and Dr. K. M. Monroe the speaker for the afternoon service. This annual event is of real worth as it brings together the Brethren of the nearby churches in splendid fellowship. It is a custom worth emulating in other localities where churches are closely situated. This inter-congregational fellowship is also being enjoyed by the Christian Endeavor and the W. M. S. organizations, as the report indicates. We cannot resist the comment that Dr. Carpenter's church is not only making use of Brethren publications in all departments of their work, but also attend in goodly numbers Brethren conferences and other institutions that make for loyalty and cooperation. Such a spirit deserves commendation wherever found.

Brother Willis E. Ronk, pastor of the Meyersdale and Summit Mills, Pennsylvania, churches, reports the work in those fields in a healthy condition. The Meyersdale church commands most of his time. Here seventeen were added to the membership as a result of their pre-Easter services. Another evidence of progress is to be seen in the re-decoration of the interior of the church, which was done at considerable cost. Churches that do not fail to keep their houses of worship in a state of good repair and attractiveness even in these depression times are to be commended. In this case some of the auxiliary organizations have proven to be of great financial help to the church. The work at Summit Mills is a thriving country church that goes on with good spirit and attendance in spite of the financial hardship which they are experiencing along with many other churches. Brother Ronk is one of that increasing number of our ministers who have been willing to put many years of hard work into their preparation for the service of Christ and his church, and after twelve years of study he has been honored with three degrees, A. B., B. D., and Th. M. We congratulate Brother Ronk on this attainment and covet for him an increasingly large field of usefulness in the church and the kingdom.

Where There Is No Vision, The People Perish Proverbs 19:18

Moderator's Address

By Louis S. Bauman, D. D.

Delivered at the Twenty-third Annual Bible Conference of Southern California convened July 21-30, 1933, in the First Church of Long Beach.

Men of Vision

Nothing in human experience is capable of more absolute proof than this: "Where there is no vision, the people perish"! Where there is vision, there is hope. Where there is hope, there is effort. Where there is effort, there is sacrifice. Where there is sacrifice, there is accomplishment. But no vision—then no hope, no effort, no sacrifice, and no accomplishment.

Once, in the long, long ago, a baby lay asleep in an ark of bulrushes, among the flags on the brink of the mighty Nile. Hermetis, the daughter of the monarch of the whole earth, found the baby there, took him into the palace, where he was adopted into the family royal, and reared to be the successor of the mighty Pharaoh himself. However, "when he was come to years," he did a most unheard-of thing—he "refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season" (Heb. 11:24, 25). Why should this youth deliberately spurn the world's most golden sceptre, and join himself to an ignoble race of slaves, to wait, and toil, and suffer and dwell in a desert for eighty years, and at last fill an unknown tomb somewhere on a lonely mountain summit? There is just one answer: Moses had a vision—he saw "him who is invisible" (Heb. 11:27). And, with a vision of the invisible, he endured, he struggled on and on through the years, freeing a race of slaves, and building the only imperishable nation that this earth has ever known—Israel! He conquered because of the vision!

About thirty-five years ago, it was my privilege to go to Dayton, Ohio, upon the invitation of the pastor of a little Brethren mission, so poor that it could only offer me in return for my services my railroad fare from my home in Indiana. The mission was located back on a narrow little street which was scarcely more than an alley. Well do we recall the enthusiasm of that pastor, and how once he took us to a commanding spot, and, pointing his finger in a northwesterly direction, said: "Do you see that big church yonder?" We peered along the line of that finger, only to say, "No, we do not see any big church. Where?" He said: "Why, right there it is—plain as day! See it? That big church there, with that big dome,—that great art window—that big wing running off to the left, and that big throng of folks going into it! Why, you must have poor eyesight if you can't see that!" I said: "Well, what church do you think you see?" He replied: "The Brethren Church to be!" I had to smile at the intensity of his enthusiasm. Some who knew him, and to whom I told the story, said, "O well he always was a wild-eyed enthusiast!" However, today there it stands—dome, windows, wing, and all—the church with the largest membership in our Brotherhood, and for years, we understand, the largest Sunday school in the great city of Dayton. It was conceived out of the enthusiasm of one who could plainly see the invisible!

Our Greatest Need—Vision!

Beyond all question, the greatest need of the Brethren

Church in the present hour is for a few "wild-eyed enthusiasts" who have visions,—who see domes, windows, wings, and throngs—men who endure as those who have the paradoxical faculty of seeing the invisible! Men of this sort are church-builders. They do not go around hunting for some other man's foundation on which to build. They go forth as did the early disciples of our Lord, "unlearned and ignorant men" perhaps. But, lo! they fill Jerusalem with their doctrine, and men take note of them, saying: "These that have turned the world upside down have come hither also" (Acts 17:6). Many, many great cities contain boundless opportunities for any Brethren minister who has seen the face of Jesus Christ—who, in the light of that vision, is filled with a holy enthusiasm for the will of God—who believes in the omnipotence of Jesus Christ and the impregnability of his Church. Vast fields are calling for the fullness of God's message. As the Brethren Church has that message, and a God who bestows the Spirit to give power to that message, nothing but a lack of men within her who have vision and who dare to follow the vision, can hold the Brethren Church back from making forward strides as tremendous as are her opportunities. An appalling apostasy has fallen like a pall upon the larger churches of the land. Tremendous opportunities await the Brethren Church in a day when famine is in the land, and we have bread. If we do not possess men with vision enough to see the need, and enthusiasm enough to grasp the opportunity to go forth and meet the need, then shall "enlargement and deliverance arise . . . from another place" and the house of the Brethren "shall be destroyed" through lack of vision. (Cf. Esther 4:14). The Church does not exist which has a purer message. But sometimes our hearts despair when we see the lack of vision. God cannot longer wait. We must respond to the cries coming forth out of the modernistic night, or God will remove the candlestick from our hands.

Our Field in the Vision

This Conference has its field—a wonderful field, a fruitful field, a ripe field,—Southern California. Let us not ask, "Have our brethren in the far east lost their vision?" Let us ask, rather, "Have we lost our vision?" We do not need to go ten miles from any one of our churches to find a place where there is a famine—"not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord" (Amos 8:11). They are weary of chewing slippery-elm and sucking empty bones. There is a growing feeling among them that "all churches are alike." If we have anything better than they are getting, it is our business to peddle our wares, and give them a sample of our goods. Nothing is more compelling than the sense of taste. We have a vision of Brethren Missions or Brethren churches in scores of these gospelless communities within the next few years, if our Lord shall tarry yet a little while. If we have any of the fervent old-time apostolic enthusiasm for Christ and his Church left in us, we will not be "disobedient to the heavenly vision." We will set ourselves to the task with a determination that will brook no defeat. We want to suggest that each church in our Southern California District shall bring forth a child this coming year, furnish it with plenty of pure rich "milk"—"the sincere milk of the Word"—and joyfully watch it grow. It can be done, unless we have lost our vision. We are not suggesting that each church shall attempt to buy a lot and erect a material building, and call it a church. True, churches are not built of wood, and stone, and mortar. Is it not written: "Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood"? (1 Peter 2:5 R. V.) We are too often concerned about our inability to secure enough material stone to erect a church in a spiritually destitute community, seemingly unmindful of the fact that churches are really built of "living stones", rather than of material stones. Of "living stones" there are enough. Go, gather them in!

"But," you say, "you can't do much until you can secure a material place into which to gather and cement together these "living stones." Once again, let us say, our modern methods have departed from the apostolic. Priscilla and Aquila are famous in New Testament story, highly spoken of by Paul for their Christian work. And in what material house did they assemble for worship, communion and fellowship? Listen: "Greet Priscilla and Aquila, my helpers in Christ Jesus, who have for my life laid down their own necks: unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles. Likewise, greet the church that is in their house" (Rom. 16: 3-5). Again, to the Colossians the great apostle wrote: "Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church which is in his house" (Col. 4:15).

Undoubtedly, in the early Christian Church, when nine out of ten were slaves, not in possession of their own bodies, much less their substance, a majority of the churches, for want of better quarters, assembled in the homes of the Christians themselves. Why not?

Of the apostles, we read: "And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem. And so were the churches established in the faith and increased in number daily" (Acts 16:4, 5). Where in all the records of the early Church do we read of the erection of a material edifice, or of its dedication—as if that were a thing absolutely necessary—not that none were built but that the building of such edifices was quite a secondary matter. Churches were continually organized, and elders and deacons ordained and given oversight—churches in homes, churches meeting even on the seashore—anywhere where the saints could assemble and hear "the gospel of Christ which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew Jew first, and also to the Gentile" (Rom. 1:16).

And what church among us cannot take to its breast, to feed and to nurse, some little group of believers, "living stones" composing a house of God? Let us have more humble, and at the same time, more apostolic ideas of what really composes a Church. If we do, we can build dozens of real churches, while, with our present ideas, we sit and pine and wonder when the good old times will again return, when we can go into a community and plunk down four or five thousand dollars for a material house of God. May we really not have gotten "the cart before the horse" when we built first the material house, then sought a soul for it—the "living stones"? We do not say that that method was without success. May it not be better, however, to build first the house of "living stones," in the confidence that "living stones" will soon find their own proper habitation? Anyhow, in times like these, when most pocketbooks are flatter than the proverbial pancake, it may be that we must either return to the apostolic method, or soon be without the vision—ready to perish.

Are We In Danger of Having a Ministerial-Over-production?

We are compelled to wearily smile when some of our Brethren express a fear of a danger that we are sending too many boys to school to prepare themselves for the Christian ministry—that these boys are going to be bitterly disappointed when it comes to securing "jobs." Such an expression can only come from one who has completely lost his vision. Let the schools give us young men and women of the right stuff—of vision, and of obedience to the vision—give us young men who are ambitious to build upon their own foundations—and famine-stricken communities will instantly absorb them all—and the "deserts"—the spiritual deserts—shall "blossom as a rose"! We need more young men for the ministry—not less. No minister need look askance at these young men as they walk forth from the Seminary of the Church. They will not supplant a single pastor who has not lost his vision. If he has lost his vision, he ought to be supplanted—"the better the sooner." No, the danger of a ministerial over-production is one danger we do not face?

Progress in Our District

We are very happy to be able to report that in all our Southern California churches, things temporal and things spiritual seem to be in a healthier condition than they were a year ago. While the past year has been financially one of the most difficult that our country, and, for that matter, the whole world, has ever known, yet our churches have weathered the storm, though in several cases, budgets were balanced at heavy cost to the pastors themselves. But, that has always been true—pastors have had to be the shining example in the matter of sacrifice. Why it should be so, we do not know. But, the temporal and the eternal reward also are theirs, so no pity need be offered them.

One thing worthy of mention here is the fact that every one of our churches, save one, went "over the top" (comparing with last year) in the matter of the Foreign Missionary Offering. This is ever a sign of genuine spiritual life and power, for carrying the gospel to the whole world is the supreme business of the church of Christ. While the offering in the brotherhood again fell down from the previous year—this time to the amount of nearly $1300.00—yet our own Southern California churches exceeded last year's amount by $740.28. We cannot but believe that God, while he may permit us to be tested and tried, will not permit those to unduly suffer, financially or spiritually, who have so freely, yea, even hilariously, divided their substance with OTHERS!

Our Financial Problems and Their Solution

Most of our pastors feel that any financial difficulties which they have had to meet, are due in large measure to the unwillingness of their members to tithe their substance. Doubtless, they are right. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me," saith the Lord; "But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee?" And God replies: "In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me. . . . Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will

The Man John the Baptist

By Delbert B. Flora

Digest of Sermon Preached at First Brethren Church of Muncie, Indiana, Sunday Evening, July 16, 1933, and Broadcast over WLBC of Muncie, August 7, 1933

"What then shall this child be?" was the universal exclamation of the whole hill-country of Judea over the birth of John the Baptist. And well might they ask such a question, for consider the age of Zachariah and Elizabeth at the time of his birth, consider the errand from heaven of Gabriel who announced his coming; think of the dumbness which came in judgment upon Zachariah when he could not believe, and, too, we must not forget the strange things that he wrote on his writing table. The whole manner and character and service of John's childhood and youth and manhood turned out to be wonderful enough to satisfy the most wonder-loving of Elizabeth's neighbors, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea.

Turning to the study of John's character and life, we note him as a devout desert man.

John had good religious training. As long as his parents lived he heard daily something like, "The Lord shall lay on him the iniquity of us all. He shall be stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. His soul shall be made an offering for sin." He was taught that he was "to make ready for the Lord a people prepared for him." Consequently he had a very lively conscience. His appetites of body and affections of mind were drunk up and drained dry by the all-consuming fires of his unquenchable conscience. Sight and sense and conscience of sin raged like the bottomless pit itself in the heart of John.

Like his predecessor, Elijah, John was the man of desert and wilderness solitude. He was "in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel." Up and down the Dead Sea where once were Sodom and Gomorrah—up and down the Jordan valley, a wilderness of undergrowth inhabited by wild boars and serpents, clothed with camel's hair and a leathern girdle and eating the simple fare which the wilderness afforded. A rugged, honest, fearless man. Here was no trencher chaplain; no soft thing of gown and bands and lawn sleeves; no candidate for manse and stipend.

We see him, too, as a drastically dogmatic man. All feared this desert roamer and eater of locusts and wild honey. Even the hardened bitumen miners around the Dead Sea were afraid when he came to their squalid huts. He had too much insight of character and his visits made them sober. The very robbers ran and hid in the hills when they saw that man standing over against the city and crying out, "Oh, Jerusalem! How shalt thou abide the day of his coming?" He was no respecter of persons in his preaching. "O generation of vipers! Who hath warned you to flee the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore, fruits meet for repentance. And now the axe is already laid at the root of the trees. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire."

Next we see John as a decreasing and disappointed man. One of his disciples came to him one day and said, "Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou hast born witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come to him." John's reply was essentially this, "I am not the Christ, but am sent before him. He must increase, but I must decrease." He and the Messiah had met and passed. John's work was done, but the Messiah's work must go on. But John's expectation of the Messiah's work was not fulfilled. He is imprisoned by Herod because he had the stamina and courage to rebuke him for his sins. Like Elijah, John is despondent and fearful. He sends a delegation to Jesus making inquiry, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another? Why do you eat and drink with Scribes and Pharisees, and leave me here in Herod's prison-house? Why do you eat and drink and make wine out of water at weddings? Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" Elijah said long before, I have been very zealous for the Lord; I only am left, and they seek my life."

Not long after he accomplished by the hand of Herod's executioner his dark departure. Before he went, was his disappointment relieved? We cannot be sure. We know that Jesus sent back word by John's messengers thus, "Go and tell John the things which ye have seen and heard; the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, the poor have good tidings preached to them. And blessed is he, whosoever shall find no occasion of stumbling in me." Not long afterward, at the bidding of Herodias, his head was taken from his shoulders and presented upon a platter to the king and in turn to his step-daughter.

Finally, let us consider the deliberate dignity of this man. He could be deliberate and dogmatic in his preaching, for he was chosen to prepare God's people for the coming of the Messiah, and that soon as well as unexpectedly and suddenly. He could exercise his ministry in such a way, for all were looking for Elijah or one like him who should come in his name.

His terrible and accusing dignity arose from his close communion with God, a clear conscience, a knowledge of a clear and distinct call from God for this special work. Thus he could stand before Herod the king, and rebuke him. For these reasons he could stand before Scribes and Pharisees and call them a generation of vipers.

Such knowledge on the part of any servant of Jesus Christ should give him the courage to stand before the world and proclaim his Master.

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus—
Stand in his strength alone;
The arm of flesh will fail you—
Ye dare not trust your own;
Put on the gospel armor,
And, watching unto prayer,
Where duty calls, or danger,
Be never wanting there."

It matters not how faith comes, whether through the heart, as in the case of John, or through the intellect, as in the case of Thomas, or as the result of long education, as in the case of Peter . . . that blessed thing which the Bible calls faith is a state of the soul.—Frederick W. Robertson.

Where There Is No Vision, The People Perish

not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground" (Mal. 3: 8-11).

Either God's Word does not stand, or many a man complaining of the "curse" of financial depression, and of the devouring tax-gatherer, or the devouring drouth, or the devouring failure due to lack of discernment as to when to buy and when to sell,—many such a complainer, we say, can attribute his trouble to his own failure to be on the square with God. Is it possible that a just God would require more of the Jew who trembled beneath the lightning flashes of Sinai, than of the Christian who stands beneath the blood-drip of the Cross, in the full assurance of the riches of his grace? If the Jew gave the honest tenth, dare we, as Christians, give less? We recommend that this Conference shall appoint a Tithing Commission, whose duty it shall be, during the coming year, to assist the pastors in every way possible to carry on a Tithing Campaign in all the churches. This Commission should study the problem, and be ready to give practical information and help in this all-important matter. If even the major part of our members would give to the God of their hope and their salvation, his honest due, financial depression, even in times such as we have just passed through, would soon be only a memory.

The Problem of the Deeper Spiritual Experience

Every pastor of our Conference District readily admits that one of his major problems is to find a way whereby he may lead his people into a deeper spiritual experience—a more vital contact with the Lord Jesus Christ—through which will come a more complete separation from the world and all that is of the world. This is an old problem. Inasmuch as all our pastors strongly favor special Conferences in the churches during the mid-winter season, we recommend the holding of such Conferences this coming Winter in every church, and make the subject of a more complete separation from the world, of victorious Christian living, the special theme. At such a conference, the all-important subject of tithing could be agitated—also, the difficult problem of a Christian's relation to human government. The Christian's domestic relations, especially involving a question troubling many pastors—the subject of divorce—would be in order at such a conference. Again, every pastor's heart is grieved again and again by the "Diotrephes" of his congregation. You will recall that the Apostle John wrote: "I wrote somewhat unto the church: but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the preeminence, receiveth us not"—(3 John 9).

The peace of many a congregation has been seriously disturbed through too many fair sisters wanting to sit on the piano stool at the same time. Christ's thought of men and women who love the uppermost seats in the synagogue needs to be impressed forcibly upon all those who would inherit the best things God has to give. Something is seriously wrong with the spiritual machinery of the soul who cannot be happy so long as some one else sits on the uppermost seat. That machine needs fixing! We can conceive that such a conference, properly held, giving our people a clearer vision of the face of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, increasing the prayer life and increasing the spiritual pulse of the church, may furnish a revival most needed in our churches in the present hour.

On several occasions recently the modernistic parasites upon the Christian body have unctuously asserted their belief in heaven and hell—and proceeded to explain that they mean the heaven of reward which the good soul reaps here, and the hell of remorse that is suffered by the selfish, unsocial soul as he sees the damage done to himself and others through his sins.

There are possibly some thirteen or fourteen arguments against that description of heaven and hell. Argument number one is that it is simply not so; the righteous do not, in this life reap the rewards of their goodness, and the wicked are not punished in this life for their wickedness. In a few cases remorse does overtake the wicked; if they live long enough, they do in some instances see the result of their wicked conduct, even as it injures themselves. But millions of wicked persons have died and thousands of them are dying today who have reaped nothing but a worldly happiness from their sowing of selfishness and sinfulness. Meantime multiplied thousands go out of this life the unsung heroes of unselfish and heroic loyalty to high ideals. They have no reward but the clear conscience. Is that all the reward they are ever to have?

If that is the end of the matter, if that is all the heaven and hell there is to be, then what becomes of the morality of God? Is there an ethical background to the universe?

The sort of argument that offers no better heaven and no worse hell than we have here on earth is on no higher mental plane than the argument of Job's friends. Job put up with it for a while, but he finally tired of the sophistry and pierced it through with very tongues of fire. "The wicked," said he, "do live and prosper and bear prosperous children. The righteous languish." Is it not about time that these highbrows offered us something without moss on it?—Christian Standard.

tude toward wealth and awakened to the Christian conception and Scriptural teaching. We have been robbing God and we have been exercised not a bit about it. We seem to grasp neither the seriousness of our sin nor the greatness of our loss. We have ignored God's claims and practically denied his ownership, and by so doing have barred the windows of heaven against the outpouring of divine blessing. And more than that, God is saying to us, "Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation." We have ourselves to blame for the trouble into which we have fallen. We treated God dishonestly, refused to give heed to his warning message and filled our hearts with selfishness and greed and unrighteousness. Now we are reaping the fruit of evil sowing in a harvest of godlessness, sin and suffering.

We cannot do away with the effect of our folly by launching upon a spending debacle. Such a suggestion is wholly superficial and gets nowhere near the heart of the trouble. The way out is back to God and to a recognition of his ownership and our stewardship. We must return to God and to fidelity to our divine obligations. That is the Christian way, and there is no other way that will be really effective. And if this seems too visionary and impractical, just remember that about half the population of the country is professedly Christian, and that the bulk of the country's wealth is in Christian hands. If the entire church constituency could be made really Christian, the problem would be solved. The government may be right in its claim that much wealth is being hoarded and so kept out of active service at a time of great need. There may be hoarding even among Christian people, who more than others ought to recognize their responsibility for helping the social order with their wealth. But far more serious in consequences and more widely practiced is the hoarding of God's gold. All over the land, in every denomination and every worshipping group, are to be found men and women who are keeping back that which belongs to God and which ought to be put to work building up the kingdom of God. There is need of launching a campaign calling for a return of this hoarded wealth to God's service and a return of the hearts of the hoarders to the eternal Lordship of Christ. In such an effort, and not a mere spending drive, we call upon Christian people to cooperate.

Ephesians

"I love Thy Church, O God!
Her walls before Thee stand,
Dear as the apple of Thine eye,
And graven on Thy Hand.

Beyond my highest joy
I prize her heav'nly ways.
Her sweet communion, solemn vows,
Her hymns of love and praise."

Timothy Dwight.

Introduction

The epistle of St. Paul to the Ephesians, a circular letter to the mother and daughter churches in and around Ephesus, was written in Rome while the apostle was confined in a lonely prison sometime during the early sixties. (62-63 A. D.). Although the writer was one of the most notorious jail-birds in all history, he never allowed the harrowing experiences of prison life to spoil his mind and spirit. Certainly this letter betrays a singing spirit, one that rises and soars, like the skylark, to heights known and unknown. Paul's song is the love song of the church. It is the music of the promoted saints which he hymns.

Diverse Opinions

Dr. A. T. Pierson designated the message to the Ephesian church as "Paul's third heaven epistle," because "he soars from the depths of ruin to the heights of redemption." Alford labels it "the most heavenly work of one whose very imagination is peopled with things in the heavens and even his fancy rapt into the visions of God." Coleridge looked upon it as "the divinest composition of man." By another it has been referred to as "the Alps of the New Testament, for here we are bidden by God to mount, step by step, until we reach the highest possible point where man can stand, even the presence of God himself."

The Cardinal Words and Phrases

The leading words of the Ephesian epistle—more than some of the others—declare its fundamental message remarkably well. Consider the following:

1. "God's Will" (1:5, 9, 11; 5:17; 6:6).
2. "In Christ Jesus" (1:11, 13; 2:21, 22; 4:21).
3. "Grace." (The most prominent word in point of meaning) (3:8; 4:32; 6:24).
4. "Walk" (2:2; 4:1; 5:2).
5. "The Heavens." (3:10; 6:12).
6. "Therefore." (2:19; 4:17; 5:24).
7. "Wherefore." (1:15; 5:17; 6:13).
8. "Glory." (1:6, 12, 14, 17, 18).
9. "Love." (1:4; 3:17; 4:15, 16; 5:2).

Ephesians and Colossians Compared

Many scholars have noticed the obvious similarity between the writings of Paul to Ephesus and to Colossae. In language and in exhortation they are alike; while in doctrinal method they are different. Ephesians is dogmatic and catholic; Colossians is polemic and particular in its refutation of heresy. Godet suggests: "The central idea of the epistle to the Colossians is this: Christ the Head, from whom the body derives its nourishment; while the central idea of what we call the Epistle to the Ephesians is the church, the body of Christ which fills with his divine fullness, and raised to sit with him in heavenly places. Of these two thoughts, which supplement each other, the second was suggested by the first. The first note struck woke the vibrations of the next; then followed a paean of Divine harmonies. What could be more natural than that two strains thus suggested, should have many tones in common, though each set in a different key."

DeWette's arrangement, cited by Gloag, is interesting and quite full of first class information:

At best this epistle is a theological compendium of song and short sentences, of highly meaningful instructions, and of love and the heavenly life.

The Paramount Texts

(Selected to Portray the Divine Angle)

- "In whom also we were made a heritage ... foreordained ... after the counsel of his will" (1:11).
- "But God, being rich in mercy, ... made us alive ... and made us to sit with him in heavenly places, etc." (2:6).
- "Rooted and grounded in love ... strong to apprehend the breadth and length and height and depth ... filled unto all the fullness of God" (3:18:19).
- "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God (Complete Title) (4:30).
- "Be filled with the Spirit" (5:18).
- "Take ... the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God" (6:19).

The Leading Ideas

1. God's Universal Church, foreordained dispensationally, is for Gentile and Jew alike.
2. Its Central Person is Christ, risen and ascended.
3. It was founded by one who possesses everlasting grace and inexhaustible love—his love reaches from the vanishing point to the vanishing point, that is, from everlasting to everlasting.
4. The Church is conceived of in a threefold way:
 - (1) As a House (2:20-28).
 - (2) As the Body (4:12-16).
 - (3) As the Bride of Christ (5:25-27).
5. Saints are born and made after the heavenly pattern; they are to walk in the heavenly life on the earth. To be other worldly is far better than be this worldly.
6. The purchase of redemption was through "His own blood." Our blood has been "the seed of the church," while Christ's was the life of heaven poured out freely and fully.

Conclusion

The Apostle Paul could have rejoiced with Trench:

"I say to thee, do thou repeat
To the first man thou mayest meet
In lane, highway, or open street,—
That he, and we, and all men, move
Under a canopy of love
As broad as the blue sky above."

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

By Rev. Milton Bennett Lambdin

with capabilities to sustain a teeming population. Its perennial brooks are alive with fishes, that are common to those found in the Nile, Lake Tanganyika, the mountain streams of Ceylon, Malabar, and Assam.

Palestine is rich in its undeveloped mineral resources. Petroleum abounds in the Jordan valley, asphalt deposits are found at the Dead Sea, its mountains contain brass and iron, coal lies buried in the Lebanon mountains near Beirut. The land is rapidly becoming modernized. One of the first things to impress the traveler and the tourists is the easy mode of travel and its up-to-date conveniences of living conditions.

Several lines of railroads are in operation. You leave Cairo in the late afternoon, eat your dinner on the train—or perhaps you call it supper—drop into your comfortable sleeping berth for the night, then wake up in the early morning in Palestine to look out of the car window upon the varying panorama of the famous Maratime plain, as you are enjoying your breakfast of tea, rolls (hard), eggs, porridge, marmalade, orange. You pass Gaza within misty sight of possibly a mile or so towards the seacoast, with a keen regret that it was not one of the way stations where you could hop off for a little run-around.

You change cars at Lud, ancient Lydda, and in reverent imagination you listen to the voice of Peter, "Aneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole." While you are stretching your legs in a stride up and down the platform, as the cars are being prepared for their steep climb through the narrow defiles of the rugged Judean mountains for Jerusalem, you are suddenly brought to a dead stop face to face before a signboard in the bold lettering, both in Hebrew and English—"Sorek." And here you are in the very territory of Samson and his memory-disfiguring escapades. And where the actual or more likely mythical, cave can be pointed out where the designing flapper of eupheneous name, Delilah, wove a deadly net to entrap the weak-strong man to his moral undoing and tragic death.

At noon you step off your coach at Jerusalem, to be whisked quickly by motor car to your hotel or stopping place. After "doing" Jerusalem with its long namesteering of aliases, you can "do" the many other appealing places at your comfortable leisure. The ubiquitous "Ford" is at your command, with well graded macadamized roads that crisscross the country. Within half a day, or even less, if under pressure for time, you make the run from Jerusalem to Bethany, Jericho, the Jordan, the Dead Sea, and return, as you safely pass over the "Bloody Road" of Christ's parable, when "a certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves."

And you can also, in a comfortable and never-to-be-forgotten couple of days, make the trip from Jerusalem to the Sea of Galilee and return, taking in, en route, the Biblical historic mountain scenery of Galilee and Samaria, including Gerizim and Ebal Schechem, Jacob's Well, Cana.

Think, too, of a record run, easily made within the day, over a good road from Jerusalem to Beersheba, between fifty and sixty miles in distance, the long ago home of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Taking in, on the way, Bethlehem, with Rachel's tomb near at hand, and Hebron, where the remains of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Sarah and Leah are buried in the Cave of Machpelah.

You can now cover Palestine in an informational run-around within a few weeks, where it took, and not so very long ago, several months or more, by tiresome camel, horse, and donkey, with a necessary and expensive camping outfit.

Startling Changes Are Taking Place in the land. It would blink the eyes of some ancient Rip Van Winkle Hebrew were he to awake from his long centuries' sleep, to stand in stupefied amazement at the sight of present day rapid transit in travel by land and sea and air. To see the telephone, the telegraph, the radio, the myriad "press the button" methods of now-a-days familiar conventional life.

Within the walls of Jerusalem, near the Damascus Gate, within, possibly, one hundred yards of the Hill of Calvary and the reputed tomb of the Savior, there is a movie show place, with its revolting "wild west" reproduction of supposed reckless American life.

There are other modern features, however of a more pleasing nature. An American archaeological institution, a Y. M. C. A., Hebrew university, and so on; also "Health Week," with lectures on hygiene in schools and synagogues and churches, with the aid of motion pictures, leaflets, and articles in the Hebrew and Arabic native press.

The American salesman is abroad in the land, equipped with the same volubility and plausible persuasiveness of approach, as in the home land. In consequence, agricultural machinery from the United States is supplementing and supplanting the archaic instruments of farming operations, with reaping machines and steam threshers in evidence while oil motor flour mills are now grinding wheat in the Lebanon mountains.

Various elaborate schemes are under projection for the material development of Palestine. One is a ship canal, starting at Haifa, a seaport base, at the foot of Mount Carmel, passing within a short distance of Nazareth, striking the Jordan near the lower end of the Sea of Galilee, and then down the Jordan valley to the Dead Sea. To continue on from its southern end to the Gulf of Akabah, the eastern arm of the Red Sea, to tap the great world beyond.

Another ambitious project is the electrification of the Sea of Galilee in harnessing its practically unlimited supply of latent dynamic energy in the interest of its industrial plants and future trolley systems.

It is a far reaching cry from Field Marshal Joshua in 1451 B. C., to Field Marshal Allenby in 1917 A. D.

During that long stretch of centuries, more than 3,360 years, Palestine has passed through numberless tragic experiences. Besides the Hebrews, the country has been ruled over in whole or in part by the Assyrians, Babylonians, Persians, Syrians, Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Saracens, Crusaders, Turks, Arabs; and at present, by the English, under the mandate of the League of Nations.

After a short and silent siege by the English forces, with not a single shell fired into the city, on November 9, 1917, Jerusalem was surrendered to General Allenby, and on the eleventh of the same month he made his triumphant entry into the city; not in pomp and military circumstance as a conqueror, but as a devout pilgrim on foot, in his ordinary service uniform, and attended by a few of his staff officers. The city was put under martial law, but every one was assured of personal freedom to pursue his lawful business without disturbance.

Under the mandate the city is governed by an English high commissioner, with the assistance of an "Advisory Council" composed of representatives from the Christian, Hebrew, and Moslem population.

At the same time, regardless of these attempted safeguards, the city is a veritable cauldron of racial, sectarian, and political animosities and rivalries, that break out from time to time in riots and massacres between the passionate divergent elements.

The deliverance of Palestine from the Turkish rule, following the termination of the World War, has given a new impetus to Zionism, with the incoming of Jewish colonists in the repopulation of the land. Right here it may be in point to reproduce the text of the famous put forth by the English government in the furtherance of this movement. It is in the form of a letter to Lord Rothschild, the noted Jewish financier:

Foreign Office, 2nd November, 1917.

"Dear Lord Rothschild: I have much pleasure in conveying to you, on behalf of H. M.'s Government, the following Declaration of sympathy with Jewish Zionist aspirations, which has been submitted to and approved by the Cabinet.

"His Majesty's government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object.

"It being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country.

"I shall be grateful if you would bring this Declaration to the knowledge of the Zionist Federation.

"Yours sincerely,

"(Signed) Arthur James Balfour."

As a state paper it has run the gauntlet of varied interpretations as wise or otherwise. Some view it as a modern replica of the proclamation of Cyrus, authorizing the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity in 536 B. C.; while others label it as a shrewd stroke of political statecraft, or war measure, to win over the backing of the many millions of Jews in Germany and the other hostile nations of Europe and throughout the world to the side of the Allies. Not to speak of it as an astute device to tap the Jewish money chests for allied purposes.

As an often and possibly unlooked for matter of fact, it has stirred up a veritable hornet's nest of deadly animosity from that time to the present between the Jews and the native population, which has lived in Palestine for a longer length of time than ever the Jews did during their occupancy as a nation. Naturally the Arabs of Palestine look upon the country as their beloved king, and he failed to follow the light of God until after he had been taken captive by the Assyrians and was carried away in chains, which broke his rebellious spirit, and in his distress he humbled himself before his God and cried for mercy which was granted him.

THURSDAY

Prayer for Pardon. Luke 18:9-14

The attitude of the petitioner who approaches God in the act or form of prayer has much to do with the efficacy of the prayer. When Jesus spoke the parable to his disciples concerning the two men who went up to the temple to pray he illustrated this statement.

One man's prayer brought justification to his life while the other failed entirely. The attitude and spirit of the petitioners accounted for the results of each petition. It is not self-righteousness but self-abasement that gets an answer to a prayer.

FRIDAY

Born from Above. John 3:1-8

The doctrine of the new birth may be as difficult to comprehend by men and women of today as it was to Nicodemus on that memorable night in which he made that dramatic entrance into Jesus' abode that he might learn something more about the way of life.

As was explained to Nicodemus the new birth is not a birth of the flesh, but of the Spirit, and it is just as essential to one who seeks admission to the kingdom of God as the physical birth is essential to the coming of a new life into the world.

SATURDAY

Saved by Grace. Ephesians 2:1-10

What can a man do toward working out his own salvation? Not much at the most, but he at least can bring himself into line to receive the grace of God; because, as the apostle says, "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God."

While salvation is of faith rather than of works, yet it is difficult to convince the onlooking world that salvation is ours, unless we show it in some manner by our works, or by our manner of living.

SUNDAY

A NEW Creature. 2nd Corinthians 5:11-21

When one professes to have been converted to Christ, and is claiming salvation in him, observers have a right to expect some changes in the manner of his life.

Paul says such a one is a "new" creature, "old things have passed away; behold, all things are become new."

Men and women are anxious to secure new clothes, or new cars or new houses. Why not be more spiritual in one's wants, and while seeking after worldly things add to this a seeking after "a new creature", or a new life?

The Conversion of Saul. Acts 9:1-12

There have been many notable conversions in the world such as Samuel Hadley, Jerry McAuley, etc.; but nowhere has there occurred a more notable conversion than the one that was brought about at noon-day on the Damascus road when the most rabid hater of Christianity of his day was brought to a realization of his own sins, and who in his humility was led in his physical blindness to the one man in Damascus who could point out to him the Savior he so much needed to free him, not from physical blindness alone, but from spiritual blindness as well.

TUESDAY

Paul's Testimony. Acts 26:12-20

Not every newly converted Christian is able to give a clear, ringing testimony as to just how his conversion was brought about, and he knew the steps in his own life that led up to it; and he was able to bear witness to this great experience.

And since Saul knew all this, as he faced the people whom he had come to persecute, he rejoiced because he was given an opportunity to undo some of the mischief he had instituted long before this.

WEDNESDAY

Manasseh Converted. 2 Chronicles 33:10-17

God does not use the same method in every instance to bring about the conversion of men. Not only in everyday experience is this variety of methods observed, but the Word itself describes a number of conversions that have been brought about by different methods.

The conversion that is the theme of today's reading is that of an Old Testament character and king. Manasseh ruled a long time in Jerusalem, but he was a wicked

Mission Work Among the Navajos in These Times

"I Need This New Faith"

"No Navajo has died for want of food during the depression," said Rev. F. G. Mitchell, as he spoke of conditions among this tribe with which he has been associated as a national missions worker for over a quarter of a century. "Many have lacked variety, some have lived for days on nothing but mutton, waiting for a rug or a piece of silver to be sold, but not one death has occurred which can be directly attributed to the depression."

I asked Mr. Mitchell just how severely the economic situation of the country has touched the Navajos.

"The chief industry of the tribe is sheep-raising and rug-weaving," he said. "Wool, which two years ago brought twenty-five cents a pound, today brings five cents; choice lambs which were $5.00 each, today sell for $1.75. Navajo rugs are one-third less than their regular price. You can see how they have been affected. They are often inclined to feel that the trader is not dealing fairly with them but, with the return of normal conditions, this suspicion will, of course, be cleared up."

I asked of the difficulties that beset the Navajo when he had no cash to buy food.

"You know most Indians have a 'bank account' in the way of the beads, silver turquoise, and wampum which they wear about their persons. They hate to part with any item, but in especially hard times they pawn it at the trading post to get credit for food. Immediately they are in position to do so, every article is redeemed."

Mr. Mitchell remarked that there was under consideration a plan to do for the Navajos something similar to what has been done for the Pimas.

"The hope is entertained," he said, "that water can be developed on this reservation so that they can be led into further agricultural pursuits. But the latter must be accomplished, or water will prove a menace as the range would be flooded, washed out and destroyed."

I asked Mr. Mitchell whether or not health conditions among the Navajos had improved.

"Since the Meriam investigation," he said, "Congress has been more generous in appropriations for the Indians, and a definite campaign is now being waged against the spread of tuberculosis, which affects from twelve to fifteen per cent of the Navajos, and against trachoma, with which thirty per cent are afflicted."

"What progress have missions made in this field?" I asked.

"Not much, you may think, in terms of actual conversions. Only some two or three per cent are Christians today, after thirty-five years of missionary work among them. For many years there was not a single convert. But there is a difference in changed attitudes, and we plan an intensive evangelistic campaign next summer for the whole tribe. We expect something of the efforts of the years to show in the general response during this campaign. The Presbyterian Church has today fifteen stations at strategic centers, from which workers go out to spread the gospel; eight native churches have been organized."

Mr. Mitchell spoke of the success of several natives who are assisting in the evangelization of their people. One of the most consecrated workers he said, was Wilson Nez, an educated Navajo, married to a young woman member of the native church at Indian Wells. This is Wilson's story as Mr. Mitchell told it:

"When Wilson was a little boy, his grandfather used to tell him that, when old enough, he would be sent away to school to get a white man's learning. 'Then when you return,' the old man would say, 'I'll teach you Navajo medicine, and you will be the greatest man in the country.' In due

I GAVE MY LIFE

*I gave my life for thee,
 My precious blood I shed.
 That thou might'st ransom'd be,
 And quicken'd from the dead.
 I gave my life for thee:
 What hast thou given for Me?*

*My Father's house of light,
 My glory-circled throne,
 I left for earthly night,
 For wanderings sad and lone.
 I left it all for thee;
 Hast thou left ought for me?*

*I suffered for thee,
 More than thy tongue can tell,
 Of bitterest agony,
 To rescue thee from hell:
 I've borne it all for thee:
 What hast thou borne for me?*

*And I have brought to thee,
 Down from my home above,
 Salvation full and free,
 My pardon and my love:
 I bring rich gifts to thee?
 What hast thou brought to Me?*

*Oh, let thy life be given,
 Thy years that yet remain,
 World fetters all be riven,
 Give me thy joy and pain:
 Give thou thyself to me,
 And I will welcome thee.*

—Frances R. Havergal.

time Wilson was sent to Sherman Institute, at Riverside, California, where there are now 1,200 Indian pupils of sixty different tribes.

"When he left home, he believed, as he had been taught, that the earth was flat; that the sky, like an inverted bowl, came down on the east and the west oceans; and that where the sky met the sea on the Pacific Coast, lived a goddess, As-dzan-i-Na-a-dleh-i, the woman who renewed youth. He also believed, as he had been taught, that the Navajos were the great people of the earth, and that on the fringe of their reservation lived a few whites; and that history dated back only about two hundred years, when the Navajos came up out of a hole in the ground near the La Plata Mountains in Colorado. At the Institute he learned that the earth was round; that the Navajos were but a handful compared with the almost numberless whites; and that instead of the existence of many gods, as the Navajos, there was but one, the true God.

"He learned to believe in the Bible, and that Christ died for him, and he consented to being baptized. But when he came back to his own people and plunged into a life of sin, he began to realize that he had had after all but a mental grasp of these things, including the gospel.

"Some time later he was taken seriously ill, and was cared for by the missionary workers at Indian Wells. When he recovered, he began to attend church services there. At a Sabbath afternoon meeting he heard a message which touched him deeply, and at the close he rose and told the story here written, added earnestly: 'What I need is this new faith, and I want it.' From that day on he was a changed man, and has ever since walked the way of the Lord, helping to lead others in the same path."

"These," concluded Mr. Mitchell, "are things which bespeak the results of missionary effort."—The Presbyterian.

Thinking Black Can Help White Thinking

In World Dominion, G. Edwin Tilsey tells of a meeting of thirty-three African Christian young men, seeking to know the freedom of truth. For two days they discussed Jonah and what it was that put him so out of tune with God's will and ways.

In quite a long speech, Kapaso reminded us that in our tribal life the good of the whole community is the spring of advice and the criterion of command. The word of decision lies with the Chief, who seeks the maximum prosperity, not of the individual, but of the corporate tribe. It is always permissible in conclave to voice a private opinion, but once the Chief has spoken, individual will is merged, and the personality that acts is that of the whole tribe including the Chief. For a solitary, a rebel, a masterless man there is no place. Such an one must leave the tribe.

"And is it not so?" Kapaso asked, "with the Vena Kristu? (the Tribesmen of Christ). Are not all one body, one tribe? Do we not bring our views to the Chief in prayer? When once his Voice is heard is not all discussion ended? Ought not the whole tribe then to busy itself in effecting the Word of the Chief? Should any man of God's Tribe take thought for his own separate good? In fact can anything be good that is for private benefit only? Is not all good the work of All? Should not all bear their allotted parts, workers together with the Chief, in the aims and acts of the Tribe? Is it not, for instance, the declared purpose of the Chief that the Good News of Salvation should be proclaimed to all men everywhere? Ought any tribesman to do less than throw himself wholeheartedly into effecting that purpose of mercy? The man who is . . .

off on his lonesome whate'r betide; What suffices for others he can't abide . . . is no loyal tribesman of the Congregation of God."

And one of us wondered whether such a doctrine of subordination would have met with so understanding an assent in the lands of western civilization. Perhaps, he thought, here is one of the gifts and graces that Bantu Christians are to bring afresh into the treasury of the Tribe, the Church of God.

Ere we scattered to our huts we bowed our heads before the Unseen Chief. Munanga prayed that the One Spirit might fashion us to be such tribesmen of God as look not upon our own things only, but, being members one of another, such as seek to do on earth, as it is done in heaven by the Greater Company of tribesmen already passed into the Presence, the Undivided Will of the Chief.—The Presbyterian.

Camp at Canton. The total attendance of 76 besides the faculty was a surprise to all. The good influence of those happy days in camp can be measured only in eternity. Two of the girls from our church made the great decision while in camp and on the Wednesday evening following we baptized them and two others and received the four into church membership.

Our church was well represented at the District Conference at Dayton and again at the General Conference at Winona. After each conference those attending reported at our monthly "Church Night," bringing inspiration and information to the whole church.

Our annual Picnic Sunday was on July 16 at Rice's Dam with Sunday school and preaching services out of doors. The weather was ideal and the attendance large. And what a feast of good things to eat! About 150 were present. All agreed that it was a profitable event.

On the first Sunday in September, Editor George S. Baer and J. C. McBride were with us, the former preaching an able sermon on "The Cross" at the morning service, and the latter showing his set of interesting California stereopticon pictures in the evening. They were welcome guests at a picnic dinner given that day by two of our Sunday school classes. These representatives of our Publishing House found our Sunday school loyal to Brethren literature, which condition ought to exist in every Brethren church. Somebody said that if it does not, then the wrong crank must be operating the machinery.

While we were at the Winona Bible Conference and our own church Conference the church here was well cared for. Our young people had charge of one Sunday morning service and they acquitted themselves well, and on the other Sunday morning the Marvin Stouffer family, parents and seven children, all singers, presented a program of sacred songs, which received much praise. One of the daughters in this family was a member of the 1933 graduating class of Ashland College.

The Bible Conference at Winona was one of the best we ever attended. Surely it would be very profitable for all Brethren ministers to attend the Winona Bible Conference every year. They might have a few distinctively Brethren hours during the ten days.

We spent a few days in Chicago after our conference but could not become very enthusiastic over the fair. Of course there were some very interesting features but on the whole it seemed to be a private money-making enterprise based largely on advertising. It has been called a "County Fair on an international scale." Being built on newly formed earth, and being lighted and colored so attractively, and then being staged successfully in the midst of a world depression—these facts give cause for all people to stop and consider.

The Annual Wayne County Brethren Day was observed on Sunday, September 17 at Smithville and was a real success. The four churches, Fair Haven, Sterling, Rittman and Smithville were well represented. Each church held its Sunday school at home and then came to Smithville for the eleven o'clock service. Rev. Paul Bauman was the speaker, his sermon subject being "Christian Living." Dr. Kenneth Monroe, a member of the faculty of Ashland College and Seminary, brought the afternoon message on the subject, "The Church." Both messages

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The College opened September 12th with everything in readiness. Several improvements had been made both in the physical equipment and also in the courses.

Mr. Dean Benschoff, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, came a few days before school opened and began to familiarize himself with the work of the Bursar's office. He also teaches two courses, which have large enrollments, bearing out my belief for some years that a department of commerce would be popular here.

All other teachers remain the same as last year, except that Miss Dorcas Bame, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. A. Bame, takes the place of Miss Norma Hurdle, in the Department of Voice.

The Enrollment. It is too early at this writing to announce the final enrollment, but it looks now as if we would have a few less students than last year. The first semester last year the enrollment was 272 and it will hardly reach that number this semester. However, the Freshman class will be approximately 100, which is the number we should have.

The Saturday enrollment which last year passed the 110 mark for the first term, will not take place until two weeks later; hence we must wait on that before final figures can be given.

Last night on Redwood Field, Ashland defeated Holbrook College, 28 to 0. Holbrook is a revival of the old Lebanon Normal College, at Lebanon, Ohio, near Cincinnati. It is Ohio's newest college.

The first issue of the new College Bulletin ought to reach its readers within a week or ten days.

It is a pleasure to record the fact that we have many new students from various churches, California leading the list. With these young people in school, the various churches ought to be more closely tied to the College.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

MANY BROTHERS AND SISTERS, TWO PAIRS OF TWINS IN COLLEGE HERE

(In connection with President Jacobs' notes, we are running the following clipping from the Ashland Times-Gazette, which may prove to be of interest to some of our readers—Editor).

If signs mean anything, the depression's over, for nine families have sent at least two and in one case, three sons and daughters to Ashland College this year.

One dad declares that it means the depression is just starting in his family, but Ashland College officials regard it as encouraging, to say the least.

The registration so far shows two pairs of twins, a trio of two brothers and one sister, two pairs of sisters, one pair of brother-sister duos.

Twins at the college this year include Robert and Mary Keener of West Salem. Robert is a sophomore and Mary is a member of the Junior class. Willis and William Krumlaw of the city, who have kept the college faculty all mixed up trying to tell them apart since they entered school, are enrolling again this year.

Three Ashmans

The Ashman family of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, is attending almost in a body, as it were, three members being enrolled, Robert and Mary in the seminary school and Kenneth in the junior class.

The Bechtel sisters, Arlene, a freshman and Thelma, a sophomore, have come from their home in Canton to be together in school this year. Then there are the Tisserand sisters of Greer, Sarah Ellen and Mary Alice, both members of the sophomore class.

One pair of brothers enrolled is made up of Richard Bear of this city, a member of the senior class, joined in college this year by his brother, Robert, a freshman.

Robert Ferguson, a sophomore from this city, is sharing college this year with his sister Rosemary, a member of the freshman class.

Nine Smiths

And if twins and brothers and sisters aren't enough to keep professors confused as to identities, there are nine "Smiths" for the professors to worry about. There are more Smiths than any other single name on the school roster.

SMITHVILLE, OHIO

There has been continued activity throughout the summer. Eleven of our young people were privileged to attend the Training were helpful and instructive to all. The young people were given the four o'clock hour when the Rittman young people were in charge. The session was very interesting. Miss Floy Hoover was the leader. About 260 enjoyed the bountiful picnic dinner at the noon hour. Delegations of 22 from Ellet, led by their pastor Grant McDonald, and 4 from Cleveland were present.

Brother Percy Yett was with us before conference and his visit was inspirational to our whole church. Come again.

The Smithville W. M. S. entertained the Rittman W. M. S. recently and conference reports were given.

Our Endeavorers went to Rittman for a joint campfire service on an August Sunday evening. The program was conducted by Smithville, Kenneth Oldman being in charge. All enjoyed the program, the campfire, the setting of the sun and the rising of the moon.

A county rally of Brethren young people is scheduled for Friday evening, October 6 at 6:30 at the Wooster City Park. This is the first effort of this sort and should challenge all our young people to be present. Those outside Wayne county will be welcome.

Plans are being made for a great Rally Day on Sunday, October 8. Our communion service will be held on Sunday evening, October 15, 7:30 P. M.

Two of our youth enrolled last week as students in Ashland College. They are Miss Marjorie Dintaman and John Erb, the former a Junior and the latter a Freshman.

May this year be marked in all our churches by earnest and persistent and prayerful efforts in evangelism. May thousands be won to Christ and his church and may the whole church be greatly revived.
G. C. CARPENTER.

THE W. M. S. PRESIDENT SAYS OF THE RECENT CONFERENCE

There Has Been None Better

The 1933 Conference is history. It was very noticeable how faithfully the women attended all the sessions, and when the time came for our W. M. S. meetings the women were there. Faithful in attendance.

With three exceptions those who were on the program were present and brought their messages which were helpful to the listeners. The exceptions were those who were to furnish special music and could not be present.

I was impressed with the unity of purpose. "Not my desires but what is best for the woman's Missionary Society" seemed to be the thought of the women and many personal desires were swept aside in deciding for the larger group.

Last year several of the goals required patience, time and perseverance, and in a way perhaps were difficult. It was very gratifying to know how our W. M. S. had put themselves to the task of accomplishing. Not so many "Banner Societies" as other years, but all effort put forth in the service of our King brings its own reward and the women were blessed in their endeavoring.

Our Feast of Ingathering was very commendable, being over $625.00 and that in the face of this year's need. The total money brought into the treasury was not as much as some other years, but it meant sacrifices. Our Heavenly Father will use what we bring to him.

I believe this has been one of the best conferences in the history of the Woman's Missionary Society.

MRS. U. J. SHIVELY, Nappanee, Indiana.

HERE AND THERE

Meyersdale

We are glad to report that the work at Meyersdale is in a healthy condition. This church, as other churches, has suffered financially because of the depression. It has been necessary to curtail operating expenses, and the offerings for outside work have not been as large as we might desire. Our county has not suffered the effects of the depression, as much as other sections of our own state, and consequently the church finances have not suffered so severely. The pastor and the Official Board have exercised care to keep the expenses within the income, and the members have been as faithful in their giving as one might expect.

The church building was completely redecorated on the inside during the summer. With the new coat of paint on the walls and the newly varnished floors, the building appears clean and attractive. This work was paid for by the Berean Sunday school class, the Woman's Missionary Society, and (some of the floor work) the Sunday school. At the same time a new furnace was installed in the parsonage by the women with some help from the men's Bible class. These expenditures total about nine hundred dollars all of which is paid. This seemed to be a large undertaking for these times but the need was great, and the cost was low.

As to the membership of the church, a goodly number are being received into the church from time to time. Seventeen were received at the time of the Pre-Easter services, and we are now looking forward to a brief service preceding our fall communion. The attendance for the year past is slightly above that of the year preceding, but not all that we could expect. These are trying days for the church everywhere; but we know whence our help. Our great problem here, as most places, is to get Christians to put "the Kingdom of God first" and material blessings second.

Summit Mills

This continues to be a thriving little church. The membership is slightly over a hundred and thirty, and in spite of the fact that some of these members live at a distance, the Sunday school continues around an even hundred. Many of the people of this community have been severely tried by the depression, but they have been faithful. Because of the depression, the financial problem has been somewhat acute, but these good people carry on. The attendance on the whole has been good, and in many respects this church equals other churches of a much larger membership. The pastor gives these people a morning service, every other Sunday, cares for the visitation and holds the special services twice each year with the communion services.

Pittsburgh-Xenia

The writer graduated from this school last May with the M.Th. degree. This in a way marks the completion of work long in process. I had gone to school when and where opportunity afforded, and had completed much work, but had received no degrees. In 1931 the college work was brought to completion at Juniata College, and the A. B. degree was received in the field of education. This carries with it the right to teach in high schools of Pennsylvania under four majors. The same month (June) the degree of B. D. was granted by Bonebrake, at Dayton, and now the degree of Master of Theology, after two part time years at Pittsburgh. There were no overlapping of hours, but about twelve hours above the total requirements. This work has involved twelve years of school work since the age of nineteen. It has not been easy, but the Lord has been faithful. The work at Pittsburgh was greatly enjoyed, and was a real help in my preaching. Our hearts were saddened at the very close of the year, by the death of two of the teachers, Drs. Webster and Kyle. These were both men of God, and it was a real privilege to have known them. I shall always treasure some of the commendations of Dr. Kyle.

Conference

The late General Conference was a good conference, and the indications are that we are making real progress, in spite of the problems of the various Boards brought about by the depression, in spite of the great sacrifices many of the pastors are making in regard to their salaries, and in spite of criticisms pointing otherwise. One of the handicaps of the Conference, was the long hours of sessions required by the various boards to complete their work. If our conferences are to be the best possible, ways must be found to complete much of this work outside of conference hours. The conferences should be times of spiritual renewal, and not nerve exhausting Board meetings. I am glad to note that two of these Boards will meet early next year, even at a great deal of personal expense. This ought to be a general rule. We ought to make this year a time of deepening our own spiritual lives, and those of our churches. May we trust the Lord for all; his grace is sufficient.

FRIDAY EVENING

The usual spirited song service opened the evening session which was devoted to Ashland College interests. Kenneth Monroe presented the audience before the Throne of Grace. "Educational Ideals" were stressed by Martin Shively while J. A. Miller spoke on, "The Place of the Word in Christian Education." Conference elected the following persons to augment the Boys' Work Committee: R. D. Barnard, Wm. Steffler, Paul Bauman, Ray Haun, Fred Frank.

The Committee on program on Evangelism was next elected: C. A. Bame, R. Paul Miller, J. C. Beal, Ray Klingensmith, A. V. Kimmel.

Conference received the second offering of the Conference amounting to $43.25. The evening sermon was preached by C. L. Anspach on the theme, "The Touch of Christ." Delbert Flora pronounced the benediction.

SATURDAY MORNING

Conference assembled with the singing of song, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus."

Robert Creese read 1 Cor. 2:9-16 and prayed for Divine guidance upon the final business session of Conference.

The final report of the Credential Committee made one more lay credential. The grand total number of delegates for the Conference was 216 delegates as compared with 282 for last year. The report was accepted. Minutes of the former business session were read and approved. Ashland College financial report was read by the bursar and was received by conference as follows:

Resolutions of the Forty-Fifth Annual Conference of the Brethren Church assembled at Winona Lake, Indiana, Aug. 21 to 27, 1933

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to permit us to assemble together in this the 45th Annual Conference of Our Beloved Church, and

Whereas, His abundant blessings and abiding presence have been our portion during all the sessions of this conference, and

Whereas, the teachings of His Holy Word are eternally true and righteous,

- Be it sincerely resolved:
1. That we lift our hearts unto him in profound thanksgiving and appreciation;
 2. That we express our approval of the constructive, devotional, and well-planned program provided for us by the Executive Committee;
 3. That we shall also express our gratitude for the high type of Bible lectures delivered at this Conference wholly by men of our own denomination.

4. That we commend W. C. Benhoff, the retiring moderator, for his comprehensive and challenging moderator's address and that we take seriously our action relative to its disposition.

5. That we commend the Publication Board in their endeavor to give our church a more distinctively Brethren literature for the purpose of indoctrinating our people in our beloved faith.

6. That we urge each church of our denomination to take more seriously the ministry of prayer and intercession committed unto us by our Lord;

7. That in view of the distressing financial conditions through which we are going and the crises with which we are faced in the various Boards and institutions of our church that we be willing to give ourselves more unstintedly in self-sacrifice toward the financial support of these interests;

8. That we go back to our churches with greater enthusiasm for active, personal evangelism;

9. That we foster the growing interest in the support of our young people's work in the form of S. M. M. Boys' Council, Vesper services which activities have come to the fore at this Conference.

10. That we deplore the action of the federal government in legalizing the sale of beer and the desire of the public for repeal of the 18th Amendment.

11. That we deplore the report of the recent Laymen's Appraisal Commission with respect to the value and purpose of Foreign Missions and go on record as being wholeheartedly in accord with the stand of our Foreign Mission Board with respect to the sentiment expressed by the Commission.

12. That the Brethren Church, whose creed is "The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, shall continue to stress the Bible as the first and all sufficient book for faith and practice in home, school and church.

Respectfully submitted,

H. A. Kent,

D. B. Flora,

J. C. Beal, chairman.

Minutes of the final business were read and accepted as correct. The Moderator declared the business of conference adjourned.

The next hour was devoted to fraternal relations. "Blest Be the Tie that Binds" was sung as a fitting selection. J. L. Gingrich referred to the welcome accorded to C. H. Ashman and himself while at Hershey Annual Meeting of the Church of the Brethren. In well selected words Martin Shively presented and introduced Otho Winger, president of N. Manchester College, who brought the message from the Church of the Brethren. Chas. Ashman, who represented the Brethren Church at Hershey, spoke briefly regarding the congenial working plans now existing in some parts of the Brotherhood.

Motion was made and passed that Conference expresses appreciation to R. R. Teeter and Geo. Baer who graciously agreed to yield their positions on the program for publications. Mrs. Kenneth Monroe favored Conference with a vocal solo as Conference prepared for the Bible lecture, "The Plagues of Egypt" by W. E. Ronk. Benediction was pronounced by George S. Baer.

home land, and they resent any outside, alien power, in an arbitrary offhand manner, without so much as asking their consent, to turn their fatherland over to another race. Particularly when that race had expatriated themselves from it, or been exiled from it, for nearly two thousand years.

Palestine is thus a seething pot of racial rancor against the English government on the part of the Arab population. When Lord Balfour made a visit to Jerusalem in April, 1925, to assist in the dedication of the Jewish University on Mount Scopus, the authorities found it prudent to provide eight armored cars and a like number of machine guns for his protection in the trip from Cairo to Jerusalem. And when he made a dip into Damascus in leaving Jerusalem, a hostile mob gathered before his hotel, and in the ensuing riot several persons were killed and wounded. The feeling of hatred ran so high against the author of the Declaration, on the part of the populace in sympathy with the Palestinian Arabs, that he found it healthy to be attended by a strong military escort as he crossed the danger-infested territory to the Lebanon mountains, in order to take his steamer at Beirut for his return to England.

Why England's Control of Palestine

That England will continue to maintain her grasp on Palestine goes without the saying, "Necessity knows no law." And Palestine is an essential factor to England in her control of the Suez Canal. No Suez Canal, no India. Your map will show you that this waterway from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea is the life-breathing jugular vein of the world-wide British imperialistic empire.

"Hands off Palestine, Egypt, the Suez Canal!" is the chorus sung by England's leading statesmen, regardless of party affiliations. "The security of the canal is of vital interest to us, both in peace and in war," says Premier MacDonald. "Palestine is the military bridge-head indispensable to the defense of Egypt," as Earl Cromer puts it with entire frankness. And the Earl of Brinkenhed with equal openness says, "Palestine is strategically necessary to the defense of Egypt."

And thus the situation as to Palestine stands with England and the world. But within the shadows of international diplomacy stands the unseen Omnipotent King of Kings and Lord of Lords, in whose sight the nations of earth are but "the small dust of the balance," "Who shutteth and no man openeth," and who holds the key of his almighty will and power to open the door to marvelous events possibly, in the near at hand advancement of the interests of his Kingdom in the world, and in which Palestine may have a dominant share.

Who knows? Neither you, nor I, nor mortal man. Until then, faith, patience, hope, as we look upon "Palestine, the Glory of all Lands," and as the rapidly fleeting centuries flight their way.—Christian Observer.

Preparation For An Evangelistic Campaign

Successful evangelistic effort must be prepared for. This is so universally true that one scarcely needs to make an exception, and so evident that there is scarcely need of argument. If now and then an evangelist launches upon a campaign with little or no preparation and succeeds in winning many souls to Christ, it is a pretty sure sign that that field had been under preparation for many months, and the harvest was just ready for the gathering when the reaper came. But even under such circumstances the reaping might have been very much greater if a definite and intensive preparation had been made just preceding the campaign.

Insisting thus strongly on the need of preparation does not imply a leaning to the theory that revivals can be "worked up" rather than "prayed down," but merely that the human element in such work invariably needs to be put in readiness for the operation of divine power. The only hindrances that ever exist to the salvation of lost souls are human hindrances. The trouble is invariably with man and not with God. His love is ever yearning; his power is ever sufficient; his will is ever ready and receptive; his mercy is ever extended. But men—there is where failure rests. Men are indifferent, careless, cold, unyielding, selfish, lacking in urge, in sacrifice, in power, in perseverance, in faith. These hindrances must be overcome or reduced to a minimum, and conditions and attitudes developed that are conducive to evangelism. That is the task of preparation, and he who is wise will not neglect it.

Must Discover the Field

One of the first things necessary in preparing for an evangelistic campaign is the discovery of the field. The entire church ought to know something of its field. A certain amount of understanding of the possibilities is necessary to the maintenance of faith in the field and zeal in the conflict. And most of all it is important that the director for the campaign shall have an intimate knowledge of the field. He ought to know the name and residence of every unsaved person and every backslidden and unconverted member in the community. It will be helpful to know the general characteristics of the people, their habits, their prejudices, their attitudes toward church and religion, the prevalent sins peculiar to the community, the dominant hindrances and the forces that militate against the church and the kingdom. To know the people collectively and individually, and to have the data collected and ready for reference and daily guidance is an important achievement in preparation.

The Forces Mobilized and Organized

There must be a mobilizing of the forces, a discovery of their qualifications and an organizing into groups for definite service. This is absolutely necessary if there is to be a real campaign and not a one man combat. It is very desirable that all the forces shall be enlisted. If ever the entire church is needed it is now. Moreover, all should be induced to put the campaign first. Everything else should be made secondary, and all other engagements and activities reduced to the minimum that the success of the church and the saving of souls be not hindered. Every member should be made to feel a personal responsibility for bringing the campaign to a successful conclusion. The entire church should click like a well-adjusted machine, every part in its place and doing its part.

The director of the campaign should know his forces, be acquainted with the talents and qualifications and characteristics of each worker, and have them teamed up and organized in such a way that they shall supplement and strengthen each other. Jesus well understood the characteristics of his disciples and wisely directed their activities by sending the aggressive, dashing Peter with the cautious, far-sighted Andrew and the slow-witted Philip with the keen-minded Nathaniel. In a similar manner he wisely paired the other disciples so that each was a help to the other by supplying something the other lacked. In organizing teams for carrying the message of the Gospel to the homes, shops, streets and countrysides, the matter of fitting workers together properly should not be overlooked. Moreover, the work of the entire campaign should be so outlined and organized that everybody will have something to do and everybody assigned to the particular task for which he is fitted or in which he takes special delight. This will contribute to success.

Equipped for the Task

Above everything else in importance in preparing for the campaign is getting the church and the individual members thereof equipped for the task of soul-saving. Many things might be said here but we merely mention a few: (a) All the people ought to be equipped with a sense of responsibility for saving men. If Christian people are brought to see that they are "saved to serve" and that saving men is the supreme duty and the highest privilege of every child of God, not all the powers of Satan can prevent success. (b) There should also be strong faith in God, in the power of his might and the truthfulness of his Word. Without faith it is impossible to please God or to save men. Special steps should be taken to encourage and strengthen faith. (c) Purity of heart is important. He who would be crowned with power must be clean and upright in his relations with men. Compromising with sin is fatal to high spirituality and soul-saving. Consequently the membership ought to be called to a high personal consecration. (d) There must be the equipment of prayer; that is of first importance. Prayer gives confidence and power and courage and patience and perseverance, and every other needed grace. Until one has learned how really to pray, he has not gotten the first lesson in soul-winning. The members in groups and in private ought to give much time to prayer. (e) To be equipped one must know and love and be able to use the Word of God. The Bible is the sword of the Spirit and it is vital that the soul-winning Christian should be able to use it skillfully. Bible study is a great preparation to evangelism. (f) And with all this preparation there must be tact. There is no blue-print or set of rules that will solve every problem that may arise in dealing with men. One must endeavor to read human nature and to handle each individual according to his own peculiarities. Insight into character, a lively sympathy for every person and wisdom from on high are necessary to enable one to deal wisely with the souls of men. These and other much needed types of equipment may be secured or greatly improved upon, if we will but seek them by faithful study and earnest prayer. And a church that will thus seek to be equipped will be a church prepared for a campaign in evangelism, and is warranted in expecting great victories in the name of Christ.

An Observation on "Recovery"

We are not criticizing the NRA, but rather urge our readers to cooperate with its aims insofar as they do not conflict with the teachings and spirit of the Word of God. That is every Christian citizen's duty. However, we do feel justified in expressing our conviction that neither the NRA nor any other scheme that may be devised for the economic recovery of our land will accomplish the desired end so long as God and righteousness are left out of account. Morality, obedience to law and godliness have been flouted at every turn, and now sobriety and honesty are being cast to the winds by the wide-spread return of the liquor traffic and gambling. Political leaders and legislators of high and low degree seem to be willing to permit the return of almost any sort of iniquitous business if only they can squeeze out of it a few dollars in taxes.

We shall reap what we sow, let us not be deceived about that. God is not mocked,—though men may mock themselves. Already the first fruits of the evil harvest are beginning to appear. Crime is increasing; gambling is multiplying; drunkenness is growing worse and worse, even on the so-called non-intoxicating beer. Statistics for Washington, D. C., furnished by the superintendent of police of that city show that every one of the last seven months suffered a marked increase in the number of arrests for alcoholic intoxication over the corresponding months for the preceding year. It is reported that the month of August, 1933 tops all previous records in the city's history for public drunkenness. In fact, the Evening Star (Washington, D. C.) under date of September 4, made a demand for a new and bigger jail because "prisoners overflow cell blocks and are herded like cattle in the yard" and stating that the "majority of week-end arrests were for intoxication and disorderly conduct."

When a country sells its honor and sobriety for a price, it need not expect the dollars received therefrom to lift it out of a de-

EDITORIAL REVIEW

From the bulletin of the First church of Long Beach, California, we learn that nineteen new members were recently added to the church by baptism, sixteen on September 10th and three on the following Sunday.

Dr. K. M. Monroe, secretary of the Seminary faculty, gives some news items this week, reporting the number enrolled in the three Seminary classes, which total eighteen, if we are not mistaken. These do not include the pre-seminary students. The seminary library, which is steadily growing, is being catalogued, and a new relief map of Palestine is being purchased. Some money for this purpose has been contributed, but not enough to cover the cost. Any one wishing to help in some definite project, will find here an opportunity.

In view of the effort being made to get our pastors and lay workers together in groups to study evangelism and to envision the field, it may be of interest to know that the biggest family of Brethren recently had a Pastors' Conference at Bethany Biblical Seminary, Chicago, where 102 ministers were registered and a goodly number of ministers' wives. They continued in session several days studying methods and means for greater kingdom progress and being mutually inspired for their task. Brother M. R. Zigler, secretary of the General Ministerial Board, in a recent communication, said the interest was fine and the conference a great success.

Prof. M. A. Stuckey returned home from the Pennsylvania district conference before the editor had closed these columns and reported a most successful gathering at Berlin. The number of registered delegates was only five less than last year, in spite of the fact that Pennsylvania, at least certain parts of it where our constituency is most numerous, is in a very bad plight industrially. The spirit of the conference was fine, and plans were laid to cooperate with the national program on Evangelism. The new national Boys' Work program also received attention and arrangements were made whereby the Boys' Work and the Evangelistic program should be pressed home to the local church simultaneously.

A clipping from the Wisconsin State Journal informs us that on October first, Dr. J. L. Gillin of the Sociology Department of the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, began his twenty-second year as teacher of what is known as the Gillin Bible Class of the First Baptist church of that city. The class is said not to be denominational, however, and is largely attended and has become widely known for its discussions and interpretations of practical Christianity. Prof. Gillin, a member of the Waterloo, Iowa Brethren church and a former president of Ashland College, has become a widely recognized authority on social problems and particularly those dealing with penal institutions.

The work in our African mission continues to go forward under the leadership of God and our faithful missionaries. Progress is being realized on all three stations and their outlying points. Daily souls are being saved, schools are being conducted and the medical work is being carried on. Dr. Gribble remarks about handling from 120 to 140 patients in a single morning. That certainly would try a physician's nerve as well as his wisdom and sympathy in the homeland. Besides this there is time for teaching, preaching and prayer. Most of us think we are too busy to take all the time we really need for prayer. Maybe if we would pray more, we should be able to accomplish more, and it might be that less time would be wasted. Dr. Gribble reports forty-five having been led into the baptismal waters at Yaloke station.

The Winchester Brethren in Virginia, have recently enjoyed a successful tent meeting under the evangelistic leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller, general secretary of the Home Mission Board. There were twenty-one confessions and reconsecrations, and the splendid attendance and enthusiasm generated would indicate that the church had been well advertised and the community greatly benefited by the meetings. Brother E. J. Rohart is the faithful pastor, and his hard work and consecration are being rewarded by the growth of the church. His ministry among the children is especially commendable. Brother Miller considers the Winchester field to be big with promise and that every encouragement possible ought to be given to this mission church to take possession of its field before it is lost. That stands for other fields as well as for this one, and it means that the brotherhood must come to the place where it will give generously to Home Missions.

Last week we gave brief notice to the retirement of Dr. A. D. Gnagey from his pastorate at Altoona, Pennsylvania, where he has served for ten years. We are glad this week to be able to give a more detailed account of the closing events as recorded in the Altoona Mirror, to whom we are also indebted for the pictures of Dr. and Mrs. Gnagey. After the preaching of his farewell sermon on October 1st. Brother Gnagey went to the hospital for a minor operation, after which he and Mrs. Gnagey will return to Ashland where they will make their home with their daughter, Mrs. Ed. Mayner. After reading the account of his farewell reception, no one needs be told that Brother Gnagey was greatly appreciated by his church and community. Ten years ago, after resigning from his editorial work, and when many men would have thought of retiring from active service, Brother Gnagey went back into the pastorate and remained all these years in the service of one church, and it was a church he had formerly served as pastor, then when he retires, at the demand of his physician, it is with the universal love and appreciation of his people. This is an argument against the all too prevalent tendency to shelve ministers when grey begins to streak their hair, but when their ministry is becoming richer and more vital, if less spectacular. We of course appreciate the enthusiasm and the dash of the young ministers, but we also highly value the rich experience and the spiritual penetration of those older grown. Brother Gnagey's active service of fifty-five years in the church has not been spectacular, as he himself is not spectacular, but it has been one of immense worth and great importance, as many can testify. And we take this occasion, while he is here to appreciate the flowers, to pay tribute to his ministry to the brotherhood. We can think of no one from whom we have personally profited more by counsel and inspiration than from Dr. Gnagey. While we join his many friends in wishing him the full enjoyment of his well-earned retirement, yet we dare say he will still be found rendering service to his church as opportunity and health permit. Brother M. L. Sands is Dr. Gnagey's successor and preached his first sermon on October 8th.

OUR NATIONAL PROGRAM OF EVANGELISM

This program shall give chief prominence to promote aggressively the winning of men to the church through New Testament Evangelism by fostering:

- 1—An Evangelistic Meeting in each congregation this year.
- 2—A Bible Institute in each church or group of churches properly situated.
- 3—A Lay-Visitation Campaign. (To be done by the Deacons or a group like the Seventy).
- 4—A School for Evangelism for all pastors and others who desire to carry forward a successful campaign.
- 5—Definite efforts to establish preaching places or Bible Study Classes in at least TEN new Communities in each District.
- 6—All the churches supporting loyally and faithfully, the program of their own Mission Boards.
- 7—Promotion Day in each congregation; setting forth the program and receiving an offering to promote the work herein offered.
- 8—The Board of Evangelists shall be charged with the formulations of plans they shall make for the execution of this program.

The Biblical Background of Evangelism.

By Alva J. McClain

On such a program as this, dealing with many phases and aspects of a single theme, the speakers having had little or no opportunity to consult one another about precise limitations, there is always danger that one may transgress into the field properly belonging to another. I shall try to avoid this. As I understand the assignment committed to me by the Chairman, my task is to outline in a general way the Biblical Background of Evangelism, leaving the development of details to those who shall follow. I shall discuss the subject under three main heads.

I. THE BIBLICAL ORIGIN OF CHRISTIAN EVANGELISM.

It may surprise the ordinary reader to learn that the English word "evangelism" does not occur once in the Authorized Version. And even its related term "evangelist" occurs but three times (Acts 21:28, Eph. 4:11, 2 Tim. 4:5). But these passages do not convey a fraction of the large place given in the New Testament to the thing which we have named Evangelism. To discover this we must examine the Greek term.

It is a compound word made of "eu", meaning good or well, and "angelos", meaning messenger. In the New Testament the word occurs in three forms: 1. Euangelion, which means "good news" and is uniformly translated "Gospel." 2. Euangelizo, which means "to tell good news" and is translated "preach" or "preach the Gospel." 3. Euangelistes, which means "one who tells good news" and is translated "evangelist." The close relation between these Greek words, which occur altogether 130 times in the New Testament, would have been more apparent to the English reader if they were rendered respectively "Evangel," "Evangelize," and "Evangelist."

An examination of the New Testament passage reveals that the work which we call "Evangelism" arises directly out of the Christian "Evangel" or Gospel. There were evangelists in the early church because there was an evangel to preach. The evangelists did not produce the evangel. The evangel produced the evangelists! Because this is so, all discussions of the work of Evangelism should begin with its Message.

What is the Evangel of New Testament Evangelism? The full answer belongs to a later speaker on our program. I shall suggest only three general characteristics.

1. It is a message of Good News, and therefore cannot be any mere system of law or ethics.
2. It is a message from God; a divine revelation, not a human philosophy.
3. It is a message concerning Christ. What he is and what he did is our only Gospel (compare Romans 1:1-3).

II. THE BIBLICAL PROVISION FOR THE WORK OF EVANGELISM.

Viewed from one standpoint God himself is an Evangelist, for in the Scriptures, we are told, he preached beforehand the Gospel to Abraham (Gal. 3:8). And Christ was an Evangelist, for he came preaching the Evangel of the Kingdom. But the work of evangelism during the present age has been committed wholly to men. If you ask, What men? the answer is found in Ephesians 4:11-12, a very important passage on the subject of evangelism. It reads as follows in the American Revised Version:

"And he gave some to be Apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the Body of Christ." The entire program of Christian Evangelism is here. Notice several things:

1. These names in the passage describe Gifts to the Church, not Offices in the Church. What is the difference? The Offices are elective, wholly within the power of the church to confer or to withhold; and there are but two, the Eldership and the Deaconate. The Gifts are spiritual endowments, directly bestowed by a sovereign Christ. They may and should be recognized by the church, but cannot be conferred by any church. The church by election may create elders and deacons, but no church can make an evangelist or a pastor or teacher. Only God can do this.

2. Each one of the Gifts mentioned in the Ephesians passage describes a distinctive function in the Church. The Apostles were eyewitnesses to the facts of the Gospel and founded the Church. The Apostles and Prophets interpreted these facts under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, first orally and finally in the New Testament writings. The Evangelists spread the Good News contained in the New Testament, planting churches in new places. The Pastors and Teachers took over the new churches as shepherds of the flock.

3. Not all these Gifts were intended to be permanent. Once the Church was founded and equipped with the New Testament records, there was no further need of apostles and prophets. These gifts then passed away. The apostles have no successors. But the work of enlarging the church, of pastoring and teaching it, must go on. Hence, down through the centuries and now we have the remaining Gifts as a permanent possession.

4. The final purpose of these Gifts is to build up the Body of Christ through the ministry of its own membership. Notice the language of the Revised Version. The pastors and teachers exist "for the perfecting of the saints." And this perfecting of the saints is "unto the work of ministering." And this work of ministering by the saints results in the "building up of the Body of Christ." God's purpose in giving evangelists and pastors and teachers to the Church was not to build up a closed clerical order which would monopolize the ministry of soul-winning, but rather to exercise this ministry with and through a trained membership.

Thus, I conclude, the responsibility of Evangelism rests upon every member of the church of God as a general duty. No one can escape it. But in a special sense this responsibility rests upon that select group of men who have the divine gift of evangelism. A study of the New Testament conveys the impression that the Evangelist was an itinerant, going to new places, starting new churches. Once the church was started, the pastor was to teach the membership and working with and through them to extend the work of evangelism in that locality, while the evangelist moved on to a new place.

The modern church has departed from the program of the Word in two serious respects: First, many pastors have failed to teach their people to become a self-propagating body. (Perhaps there are too many elected to the eldership who have not the divine gift of pastoring and teaching.) And this first blunder has led to the second: Because the average church has not become self-propagating, it has turned this task over to the evangelist, thus hindering his wider ministry of preaching in new places. And the evangelist, in turn, has too often become satisfied to confine his ministry to already existing churches, to the neglect of the unevangelized fields.

III. THE BIBLICAL ASSUMPTIONS WHICH UNDERLIE THE WORK OF EVANGELISM.

Certain presuppositions stand behind all true New Testament evangelism. They may not be dealt with in any formal way, yet they are always present in the background. For lack of time these assumptions can only be stated briefly.

The first is the reality of sin and its doom. Tell me the attitude toward evangelism. The cult of Eddyism, which attituded toward evangelism. The cult of Eddyism, which denies the reality of sin, has lecturers, but no evangelists. And Modernism, which weakens the sense of sin, creates an atmosphere which stifles evangelism.

The second assumption is Salvation by Free Grace, the work of God, not men. Since evangelism is the heralding of Good News, it cannot live in the dead sea of legalism. It is no good news to tell men they must save themselves. It is good news to know that the work is done. The preaching of law and commandments may produce proselytes, but not converts. It may change our opinions, but it will not change our hearts.

The third assumption of evangelism is the fact of Human Responsibility. Man is not responsible to save himself. He cannot save himself. But man is responsible for his choices. He is not required to climb the steep ascent to heaven, but he is responsible to choose the Way of Life when set before him. Wherever the sense of personal responsibility is dulled, whether by a hyper-Calvinistic theology or a Behaviouristic psychology, true evangelism ceases.

The fourth assumption is the Absolute Lordship of Christ. Before our Lord gave his great commission to evangelize the nations, he reminded the disciples that "All authority" was given him both in heaven and on earth. If this be true, then every human soul must deal at last with Christ, either for salvation or for judgment. There is no other Savior. There is no other Judge. This is what Paul had in mind when he wrote "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." Again, if Christ has all authority, then he has the right to command me as a Christian, my life, my talent, my substance, in the work of evangelism. This is what Paul meant when he said, "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel."

The Present NECESSITY of New Testament Evangelism

By Charles A. Bame

It is too apparent for argument. Here is a plain presentation of the truth. The Brethren have gone on record. Our National Conference unanimously resolved that aggressive evangelism that reaches new points, saves old ones and looks ahead to future advance is a great necessity and adopted one of the most sweeping plans possible to conceive.

COUNTERFEITS

But there is a discrimination made: it must be New Testament evangelism. Doubtless this distinction was made because there are counterfeit methods which are not of New Testament order. Note some of them:

(1) Buchmanism. This is the new, and perhaps the most advertised of the many kinds of evangelism lately in vogue. It has no sermon and it would seem, a good many banquets. It attracts people who can afford much eliteness, calls for communion with God and practicing his presence without the emphasis on the Gospel as a background which Brethren people demand. It would not suit Brethren people.

(2) Kernanism. Probably this should not be dignified by calling it an "ism" but it amounts to that and is not according to Brethren standards because it also leaves out the sermon and is entirely too much, to a card-signing campaign without an experience of salvation.

(3) Dollar Evangelism. This is the antithesis of our new program. The most damnable form of evangelism and the one I blame for the present dearth of the whole evangelistic program generally, is this method that made the dollar the measure and the chief end of the meeting. I have heard the big (?) evangelists talk of their meetings as $5,000 and $10,000 meetings. Away with that!

Ours must be the opposite of that. There are various other counterfeits.

I—THE NEW TESTAMENT EVANGELISM

New Testament Evangelism is that sort of evangelism that is copied from the methods of our Lord himself. Pentecost is a fine example. It had a great doctrinal sermon which brought a deep conviction of sin; the cry for salvation; the presence of the Holy Spirit, followed by baptism "unto the remission of sins". No better pattern has ever been given.

New Testament Evangelism was patterned by Christ Jesus himself. The Great Commission (Mathew 28:19) has never been repealed, nor improved as to method; it has the four important and necessary steps:

1.—"Go Ye". Too many interpret this to mean build a nice church, have a fine formal service, or construct a big tabernacle and get a specialized "party" and let them come to us. Not so; the command is "Go ye".

2.—Make Disciples. To shake the hand of the evangelist, to "hit the saw-dust trail", to go through the repeating of the creed or catechism, or to study the "dogmas and traditions" of a hierarchy—to do these things is not necessarily making disciples. Disciples are learners and the work of soul-winning has too often stopped without the finishing touches of instruction, to go to the end with the Lord.

3.—Baptize Them. This is the seal of pardon and the "answer of a good conscience toward God". Evangelism that never asks nor insists on the baptism in water is that kind from which too many of the churches suffer. Without this confirmational service "converts" very frequently turn back. "That same hour of the night," as Paul did, is the best method, as to baptism.

4.—Teach them all things. Of course, the professional evangelist will protest that this is more than evangelism but I answer that anything less is not New Testament Evangelism. Indeed, our Master and our forbears taught us to "Count the Cost" and without that due consideration of complete surrender and the tremendous cost to the Lord as well as to the "convert", of the salvation that comes with conversion, he will probably be unconverted. New Testament Evangelism is a tremendous task.

II—THE NEED

But what is the need of this urge and importunate drive?

1.—Because of the apathy of many ministers, official boards and the laity. The dearth of efforts and more still of results in the past few years is pathetic compared with ten or fifteen years ago, even in our own group. Any sort of make-shift formality is called a revival when it is anything else but that, and has become too much the vogue in these times of moral and religious slump. Let us measure our effort by Pentecost or try again, my brethren! This sort of thing began very early in the church: 2 Tim. 3:8; Acts 13:7, 8; 1 Tim. 6:5; 1 Tim. 4:2. Only space forbids quoting. This paragraph can not be understood without reading the references. Let none of us be guilty of resisting the truth or becoming "reprobate to the faith".

2.—Because many have been so ready to accept subterfuges for evangelism, pastors must hold a meeting when they are not evangelists; they must exchange pulpits which too often is just another formality, or we join in a Union campaign which almost always net converts to the church which demands least of their members and thus our camouflage is our undoing. Evangelism needs the Evangel by the Evangelist.

3.—We need Evangelism because we have lost the Eighteenth Amendment. Churches have a relation to government. Caesar has his dues. We owe respect and taxes but I object to my President and Governor using my temperance tax-money to see how to control liquor when we all know that story by heart. I am sure that had it not been for the work of Billy Sunday and Wm. J. Bryan and a thousand evangelists the 18th Amendment would have never been adopted, and without evangelists and Prohibition we shall be fiddling away the remainder of our lives fighting against an unbeatable foe. What an inexcusable blunder was made in that loss! Pastors and pastoral exchanges are too mild to beat the Devil thus entrenched.

4.—We need Evangelism to obtain a new sense of the Power and Presence of the Holy Spirit. Of schemes, organizations, feasts, banquets and conventions we have had enough and now, see what we have for it! From the stress of only the experience of religion on one hand, to the extreme legalism of accepting the Word without the baptism and power of the Holy Spirit we must learn again the lessons of Pentecost and 1 Cor. 12.

Pride of face, place, race and grace followed by consequent neglect of prayer, neglect of the Word, loose notions about sin, selfish and indulgent allowance of worldliness in the lives of preachers and officials have left too few "temples" for the Holy Spirit" and there is no power. 1 Cor. 6:19.

5.—We need Evangelism because the Brethren organization will disintegrate without it. "Where there is no vision, the people perish". "If the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet and the people be not warned, his blood will I require at the watchman's hand" (Ezek. 33:1-6).

THERE IS A PRESENT NEED FOR NEW TESTAMENT EVANGELISM.

THE BRETHREN HAVE RESOLVED TO FOSTER IT.

THE NEXT MOVE IS TO PROVE THAT WE MEAN IT.

Incidents in My Experience as An Evangelist

By J. Allen Miller

To many people now members of the Brethren Church it may be a surprise to learn that I spent some time in Evangelism. During the years of my early ministry I spent from two to four months each year in special evangelistic efforts. I had no training for this. I was quite uneducated, for my school work was done in "pieces" and strung through eleven years. My first evangelistic meeting continued four weeks, just twice as long as I had originally planned. I was quite distracted by the prospects as the first two weeks drew to a close and I saw that I could not quit. But my sermons were all. However, I learned that once a meeting gets going the preaching cares for itself. For the second half of the meeting I prepared a sermon each forenoon for that evening and in the afternoon did the personal work. God graciously blessed this meeting and the number of accessions almost doubled the membership of the church.

The meeting just referred to was reported in the Evangelist and as a result many calls came for my services.

Thereafter I had far more invitations to hold evangelistic services than I could accept. It must be remembered that during these years I was also serving as pastor of a church. I was thoroughly committed to my Church and her demands upon me for what talent I had, and all my time I freely gave. I believed the Word of God from beginning to end. I believed the Brethren had a message for a lost world. I believed myself charged by my Lord to be a messenger of the Gospel to lost men. God graciously and oftentimes wonderfully poured out his Spirit in power and in demonstration of saving grace upon these services. I could narrate some of these for they stand out vividly before me to this hour. I fear I might be misunderstood. What I shall now give I pray may be to the glory of God's praise and that I may be forgotten as having had any part in it.

I shall recite briefly three outstanding experiences. First. A meeting in progress almost three weeks; only a few responses to the invitation to accept Christ; a community strongly swayed by numerous antagonistic and atheistic influences; leaders among the young people avowedly infidels. What was to be done? A prayer meeting was called at the church on a Saturday morning at nine. About a dozen people came. Before we knew it the time had passed beyond midday. When we assembled the church bell was rung. WE PRAYED. On Sunday morning we had a crowded house. The feeling was intense. There was no response. In the evening long before the hour for the services to begin the house was filled. At the conclusion of the sermon as I gave the invitation men began to answer the call. A man who was then, as a young man, a leader, was among the first to respond. The ringing of the old bell had stirred his heart the day before though he was two miles away. This man was a leader of the church for many years. Infidelity, spiritualism and unbelief in that community received their death-blow in that prayer meeting.

Second. I was in the midst of a meeting in which many had confessed Christ. Night after night the crowds swelled in the house far beyond its normal capacity. It was in a community of some fifteen hundred people in the town and a rather thickly populated country-side. On more than one occasion mighty power seemed to come down upon us and deep conviction fell upon the people. In the course of one of the sermons a man present interrupted by crying to God for mercy. I immediately gave the invitation. THE WORD OF GOD POSITIVELY PREACHED CARRIES CONVICTION TO THE HEARTS OF SINFUL MEN.

Third. This incident is very vividly before my mind even now though it occurred so long ago. When I was quite young Brother W. C. Perry invited me to be present at the dedication of the new church just built at Mexico, Indiana, and of which church he was pastor. I accepted the invitation. Through that service I received another invitation to dedicate a new church and to hold a revival. This was in a new field comparatively. During this meeting I was asked to preach upon the distinctive doctrines and practices of the Brethren Church. It was on Sunday morning and my discourse was on Apostolic Baptism. I was just in the midst of my sermon when a very fine, middle aged man in the audience arose and started down the main aisle of the church. As he did so he said in a loud voice, "I can wait no longer for the invitation." Here I learned that one could so present the claims of the Word of God that men would be constrained to yield obedience to the same.

Thus through three very striking experiences in my very early ministry I found the secret of God's favor upon my ministry. I found that PRAYER was power with God and over men. I found that the faithful preaching of the Word of God brought CONVICTION to sinners and impelled men to yield full obedience to their Lord. I look back over those experiences with gratitude and great joy.

My Greatest Disappointment in Evangelism.

By G. C. Carpenter

"Jesus Christ is our great model and standard and example in this, the finest of the fine arts, the art of winning souls, but the Master Evangelist of High Heaven did not always succeed." He sometimes suffered disappointment.

He must have been disappointed in his attempted ministry at Nazareth where he failed because of the unbelief of his homefolks. He must have been disappointed when he failed to win the rich young ruler. Of course Jesus did not fail. The homefolks at Nazareth failed. The rich young man failed. However, Jesus must have been disappointed.

Doubtless, all who have had to do with evangelism have suffered many disappointments. It is difficult to name the greatest, but please permit me to name seven disappointments in evangelism.

1. When the egoism of the soul-winner overshadows the Christ he presents. Satan brings this subtle temptation to every wideawake Christian. May we be like the preacher who dropped behind his pulpit and said to his large congregation, "I do not want you to see me, but I do want you to see my Christ."

2. When prayer is neglected and there is more dependence upon man and machinery than upon God. When the disciples failed to heal the demon-possessed son, Jesus said, "This kind comes forth by nothing but by prayer and fasting." And the father's prayer of belief won the victory. May the burden of prayer rest heavily upon the church.

3. When indifference freezes the whole church and hinders the work of the Spirit. When the unsaved are made to feel that "Nobody cares for my soul." One church was made over by one whole night of prayer, and became a most virile, evangelistic, missionary, doctrinally-sound, loyal church, with more tithers and more soul-winners than most churches. Prayer and power are holy twins.

4. When gossip and schism and bickering and devilish meanness and inconsistency on the part of the church members drive the unsaved away from the church. What is the remedy? Perhaps nothing but prayer and fasting on the part of the saints, though they be few.

5. When the officials of the church place greater value on the dollar than on the lost soul. Some give their lives to the winning of dollars for themselves but never seek to win lost souls. O for strong men and noble women to cooperate with ministers and evangelists in the Lord's work!

6. When parents by precept and example hinder their children from accepting Christ and uniting with the church. How often parents say of their children, "They do not know what they are doing." Who? Parents or children? Often parents thus prevent their children and then in after years weep hot tears because their children are prodigal.

7. When the end of the evangelistic campaign comes

Thereafter I had far more invitations to hold evangelistic and lost souls, almost persuaded, choose to continue their rejection of Christ. Like the rich young man! Like the man who heard Rowland Hill preach Christ but rejected the Savior. The preacher wrote one word, "Christ," on a piece of paper and asked the man, "Do you see that word, 'Christ?'" "Yes." Then the preacher covered the word with a gold coin, and asked, "Do you see it now?" "No." "Why?" "Because the gold is in the way." If not the god of gold then some of the other gods of this world take the place of Christ and souls are plunged into an eternity of darkness and death.

May ministry and laity be on fire with a PERMANENT PASSION FOR SOULS. After all the entire task of the church rests upon the foundation of evangelism. Foreign missions is evangelism. Home missions is evangelism. The task of the Sunday school and other church auxiliaries is evangelism, primarily.

One of the best ways to serve our church the coming year would be to lay upon the altar a sacrificial Thank-giving offering of $25,000 for Home Missions.

May the love of Christ constrain us to do our best this year in the winning of souls, according to his appointment. And while many disappointments come in this world it is well for us to remember that "There'll be no disappointment in heaven." And may the Holy Spirit make all men realize that for those who do not keep HIS APPOINTMENTS HERE only disappointments will await them there.

The Message of Evangelism

By M. A. Stuckey

It is written of the early disciples: "And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following" (Mark 16:20).

Of the Seventy it is recorded: "And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel and healing everywhere" (Luke 9:6).

From the earliest times, as the above Scriptures indicate, the Church was evangelistic in its proclamation of the Gospel. The workers went "everywhere" preaching and teaching. The what of their preaching or doctrinal message is what the assigned subject at hand demands. The why, where, when, how, etc., of apostolic preaching is not to be treated in this discussion. The Whom of that preaching is so closely linked up with the what of the preaching that the two cannot be separated. Consequently, reference will be made to Christ as the central theme of the earliest Gospel preaching.

I—THE MESSAGE OF THE SCRIPTURES

The message of the disciples of the Lord from the very beginning was doctrinal in content. They had lived with Jesus, received his teaching, and then they preached about the facts which they knew to be true. To them they were so true that they were simply overwhelmed by them. That explains why they preached so courageously and enthusiastically and effectively the Gospel.

The life, death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus were the primary considerations with the apostolic preachers. They of course linked up with the completion of the Lord's work on the earth, his deity, Sonship, miracles, kingdom teachings, and all the other major or incidental teachings concerning the Church.

The message of the oral teachings of Jesus was the message of evangelism in the early church. It was not a message of legalism, of works, of the secular sciences of the day, but simply a doctrinal one based upon the work of the Savior. Wherever the earliest evangelists went they preached that message. That, too, is the message of true evangelism in every age and the Brethren Church holds to that belief. We preach what they preached, that and nothing more. That is sufficient for all redemptive purposes.

II—THE MESSAGE OF THE BRETHREN MINISTRY

The Brethren Church, significantly it seems to me, has stated for the world our doctrinal and evangelistic message. It is also our teaching message. It is certainly safe to say that that Message contains the major features of the Gospel truth. It is lacking in two points of importance in evangelism, however. It says nothing about the Devil, and leaves Hell out of the picture. The careful evangelist will include these two items in his sermon subjects. They are just as important as other major themes in evangelism.

One word is necessary in this connection. Let us preach all of the doctrines in the theological system of the church. Let us not select some out of the list, and then politely ignore others. Let us not unduly emphasize one doctrine above another, but rather let us give to each phase of the whole truth its proper place. Let us not, for instance, preach the eternal security of the saints to death. The writer accepts that fact as a true and precious one, but he knows that some earnest, sincere godly men down through the ages have made that belief a rock of offense and a stumbling block to believers. Our moderation should be known to all men in Gospel preaching. And, furthermore, our love ought to abound in our preaching, so that men may see that the truth dwells in us. We may preach dogmatically if we preach in love. But beware of the evangelist who hammers, drives, forces the truth down the intellectual throats of people. Nine chances out of ten it will be regurgitated.

Doctrinal preaching is an offense to hearers if the truth is preached offensively. Sugar coat the truth somewhat, rather than give it in its powdered and raw form. It will be more readily taken and accomplish the same end. What the older Protestant divines used to say was this: "Doctrines must be preached practically, and duties doctrinally." Brooks has added a wise word: "Preach doctrine—preach all the doctrine that you know, and learn forever more and more; but preach it always, not that men may believe it, but that they may be saved by believing it." How true! How effective!

Then, too, the Brethren evangelist must not forget the message of our ordinances. Our special contribution as a church lies in our special, but Gospel beliefs. The church of the past has gleamed, widely by preaching trine baptism, the Lord's Supper, etc., and the church of the future should profit by that experience. Let us preach "God's means of Grace" everywhere.

III—THE MESSAGE OF THE GREAT EVANGELISTS

The great evangelists of Christian history—ancient, mediæval, and modern—have been among those who have interpreted the Scriptures properly for the masses. To understand their methods of sermonic preparation and delivery one needs to turn to the biographies and printed sermons of these illustrious diviners. Men like Luther, Wesley, Whitefield, Moody, Torrey, Sunday, Masee, and others, are worth studying. Their works enable modern evangelists and preachers to function more efficiently than they possibly could were they not at hand. We ought to read widely the literature of evangelism.

In order that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works as an evangelist, the following bibliography of worthwhile books of evangelism will be added to this article. There are books here—general and particular—which should prove to be of great help to pastors who intend to do evangelistic work. The list is only suggestive, not exhaustive.

Plans for Sunday School Evangelism—Brown.

The message of the preachers of all ages and all times is the message of the Brethren. They strive to know the Word of God perfectly. They endeavor to interpret it to mankind in a sane and reasonable fashion. They earnestly work as under-shepherds of the Great Shepherd, going in and out—feeding and enlarging the flocks and the fold. May it please the great and good Spirit to honor our work as we honor him.

Prayer in Evangelism

By K. M. Monroe

A hunter and his guide in the Ozarks were sitting at their tent door in the dusk. They heard a footstep and saw a little girl approaching. "What are you doing so late?" asked the guide. "I have been working with father and I finished and walked down here. Papa said, 'if you are in any trouble and need me, wave the lantern and I will come at once.'"

Dr. A. J. Gordon defines regeneration as "the communication of the divine nature to man by the operation of the Holy Spirit through the Word."

In Evangelism we are working with our father and must have his help. Often we need to wave the lantern of prayer he has given us. Without a doubt we will all agree that successful evangelistic meetings are prayed down rather than worked up. The outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon those who would do personal work and the Holy Spirit working with men convicting them of sin, of righteousness and judgment (John 16:7-11) is essential and comes through definite prayer on the part of God's children.

I. THE PASTOR WORKING IN PERSONAL PRAYER

Brethren, prayer is hard work. That is why so few of us pray. We might as well admit it. We are lazy.

It is easier to organize the forces of our church than to pray.

It is easier to plan our evangelistic campaign than to pray.

It is easier to organize the forces of our church than to pray.

However, no duty is more earnestly impressed upon us in the Word of God than the duty of definite prayer.

The diary of Dr. Andrew Bonar is probably the best treatise on a minister's prayer life which we possess. Shortly after his settlement in Glasgow, he wrote, "For nearly ten days past have been much hindered in prayer, and feel strength much weakened thereby. I must at once return, through the Lord's strength, to not less than three hours a day spent in prayer and meditation upon the Word." On his first anniversary, he wrote, "Tomorrow I propose to spend the most of the day in prayer in the church. Lord, help me." Later we find him setting apart one whole day a month for prayer and fasting.

II. PASTOR'S MUTUAL INTERCESSORY PRAYER

In discussing this part of our subject we call your attention to the fact that the pastor often needs help and advice for which he can only call upon God. Here is a goodly man, who is heavily burdened for the work of evangelism in his church, and realizing the value of prayer calls upon a nearby pastor to spend a day or a part of a day in quiet meditation and prayer with him. No big dinner is involved, no baseball game after it is over, no special meeting at the church, only a pastor needing help in prayer. How wonderful it is to have an Aaron or Hur in a nearby congregation upon whom one can call to steady his uplifted hands. (Ex. 17:12) Brethren, I make this personal. How many of you will be an Aaron or Hur for some brother pastor? How many of you will invite another or others to help you carry the burden of prayer? What wonderful fellowship and understanding could be developed among our ministers if this were of more common practice?

Suppose a brother is burdened in prayer for his people, but does not know exactly for what he should pray, should he hesitate to call on someone to pray with him? Absolutely not! for he can claim the promise of Rom. 8:26-27. "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit himself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." From this passage two things are evident. First, the inability of people to pray as they ought and second, the ability and willingness of the Spirit to plan our praying.

III. PRAYER IN THE CHURCH

We are all acquainted with the usual plan of cottage prayer meetings, special prayer seasons and prayer messages on the part of the pastor, which comes before the special protracted effort of evangelism. A dependence on God and a spirit of God should permeate the congregation, and most certainly the people should gain a consciousness of the distinction between church work and the work of the church. The great Commission (Matt. 28:18-20) certainly indicates that soul winning constitutes the major work of the Church.

If the church is to succeed evangelistically we must do more praying. Church officers must spend more time in this holy exercise. Sunday school and Christian endeavor workers and all Church workers must devote energy to this sacred occupation. The rank and file of the church membership must more often gather around the mercy seat.

During the regular evangelistic services, prayer should be kept to the front and herein is found a special service for shut-ins and others interested in the meetings, but unable to attend. A praying Church is a working Church, and a working Church is a soul-winning Church, and a soul-winning Church is a growing Church.

We conclude with the words of Dr. Cortland Myers: "The church on its knees paralyzes the enemy, employs angels and saves men."

The Ideal Evangelist

By R. D. Barnard

I have been asked to speak on the theme of "The Ideal Evangelist." This is a hard theme, and will appear differently to different people. I am using as a Scripture basis for the theme, 2 Timothy 4:5, "But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." Although we may not be evangelists professionally, still as workers in the Lord's vineyard we must surely do "the work of an evangelist". As such we are interested in those qualities and attainments, or gifts that will make us to be best fitted to do our work. I ask you to consider with me the following items.

1. The Ideal Evangelist will be an IDEAL MAN. "Keep thyself pure" is a fitting Scripture here. Any one doing the work of a Christian minister should keep himself unspotted from the world. He should be honest, fair, trustworthy, industrious, serious, and pleasant. No man of the world should be able to point a finger of scorn or criticism at him so far as honorable manliness is concerned.

2. The Ideal Evangelist will KNOW THE LORD. Knowing the Lord is more than just knowing ABOUT HIM. Knowing the way of Salvation is more than knowing ABOUT the way of Salvation. He must have experience. I refer to an experience with Jesus Christ that is a good juicy salvation. He will be capable of emotion, but not emotional.

3. The Ideal Evangelist will KNOW THE LORD'S BOOK. He is a specialist with souls and the manual for the specialist with souls is the Bible. The Ideal Evangelist will know only one way of salvation. That way—the way to be saved, and the way to live after you are saved—is clearly given in the Bible.

4. The Ideal Evangelist will KNOW MEN. He will be a psychologist although he may not claim to be. In his study of men he will be learning from the MASTER of whom it was said, "needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man." Like his Master, he will need to know what men's problems are, their joys, how they suffer, he will need to fellowship with men in the inner things of life.

5. The Ideal Evangelist will know SOMETHING BE-

SIDES RELIGION. I have indicated this, but I refer here to Education. Education is not the primary thing, but it is intensely valuable. Especially is this true when the evangelist is presenting the Message of God to the educated. Education keeps one from being an emotional fanatic. We are Bible specialists, but we should not be ignorant in other common fields of thought.

6. The Ideal Evangelist will know something of the PROBLEMS OF THE PASTORATE. He can't cooperate with the pastor and the pastor can't work with him until he does. If he does not know something in this field he will probably cause the pastor to have difficulties that it will take a year or years to clear away. They must speak with the SAME VOICE.

7. The Ideal Evangelist will HATE SIN and evaluate righteousness. He will be invited to compromise. He dare not compromise. He will feel an urge to speak only of Love, but the power that loves the good, hates sin. Men must be convicted of their sin, and possibly no messenger can be so used of the Holy Spirit in this work as the evangelist.

8. The Ideal Evangelist will be an EVANGELIST AT HEART, and not a pastorate hunter. In my pastorate I have never suffered from an evangelist who is a pastorate hunter, but I have heard (of course from other denominations) of those who did. Those, who, coming into the field will, in private conversations with members of the church preface his remarks with the sly phrase, "Now, if I were your pastor . . .".

9. The Ideal Evangelist will have a LIKABLE PERSONALITY. He will inspire things that are lovely. He will not be cynical, caustic, and critical. He will have the ability to take criticism kindly. He will love all mankind—men and women, but because of criticism that so often arises he will be careful how he expresses that love to the women with whom he may be in any way associated.

10. The Ideal Evangelist will know SIMPLE GRATITUDE. He received entertainment while on the field, remuneration for his services, words of praise and commendation, and the best of everything. He receives, too, the best of the harvest. There is a temptation to feel or say "See what I did." Simple gratitude will acknowledge the people, the long-suffering pastor, and all who have helped.

11. The Ideal Evangelist will know the Joy of ANTICIPATING THE COMING OF THE LORD. He need not be fanatical, in fact, should not be. The people, however, should receive from his message and bearing that there is a certain optimism having its springs in this joyous faith.

12. The Ideal Evangelist will have the NORMAL POWERS OF EXPRESSION. He will need this that he may unburden himself of his message, and still not be burdensome to others. In other words, his should be GOOD PREACHING.

The Ideal Plan for the Evangelistic Meeting.

By W. S. Crick

INTRODUCTION.

Discussion of the "ideal" and "plans is more for the classroom, the theorist and the dreamer. But making the ideal practical, and the plans workable may require the contribution of the practical type. In a pastorate in the mountains of Pennsylvania, which I greatly enjoyed, the friends had the habit of remarking when the roads were muddy and discouraging: "Well, it's a nice day overhead, but no one's going that way!"

Likewise, in discussing "The Ideal Plan for the Evangelistic Meeting", one has first of all to acknowledge no one is able to participate in an "ideal" meeting. The "plan" must be made up of details which it is reasonably certain one can apply. IF pastors were capable and enthusiastic evangelists, and IF churches were spiritually "hot", and contained a working nucleus of soul-winning laymen and laywomen, the ideal plan would be for the church to hold its own campaign, and assuming the responsibilities for the declaration of the messages, the providing of special features in music, and for the promotion of personal evangelism.

THE "HOME-TALENT" PLAN.

While this self-promoted plan is not practical in many cases, some of which we shall note later, it does have a number of considerations which eloquently commend it. Among them are the following:

1. Evangelism should be a "year-around" program in every church, and the promoting of such a meeting would serve as a climax of the entire fifty-two weeks of soul-winning effort, and earnest proclaiming of the message; and not represent to many minds a substitute and "by-proxy" method of taking care of the church's recruiting work.

2. There will be less tendency to delegate the duty and privilege of personal work to the evangelist and pastor, if the pastor is the leader. Church leaders will realize that it is "up to them" to do the work of soul-winning.

3. There will be less possibility of a misplaced allegiance of "joining-the-evangelist" instead of "joining the Lord Jesus Christ."

4. The liabilities of "high-tension" mass evangelism, viz., the early back-sliders and the protracted babyhood due to a change in the formula of nourishment and cooling of spiritual atmosphere, are less likely to occur.

5. There need be no distraction of some of the leading workers from the work of soul-winning to the kitchen for the work of "entertaining", and there is less possibility of a disagreeable "hang-over" due to a misunderstanding as to emolument.

6. The church can hold its "evangelistic meeting" if and when there is promise of harvest—there need be no jockeying with visiting preachers for preferential dates. The special meeting can be held at the season of the year when local conditions are most favorable, and the "fields are ripe unto harvest".

7. Finally, when a church and pastor promote their own evangelistic meeting, capacity for leadership is developed in the church, which offsets the popular idea of "professionalism". Soul-winning is the work of every saved person, and every member of the body of Christ should be eager to develop his "gifts", which latent ability can be developed only by use. The reciprocal benefits of soul winning are not nearly so great when a faithful member contributed to the "fund" as when he comes into vital, personal, sympathetic contact with the unsaved, and "wins" him! Of course there are those magnificent souls who both contribute liberally and also enter enthusiastically into the "work"—but their number is not legion in the average church.

THE SPECIAL EVANGELIST PLAN

But we are not unaware that there are many cases—possibly the majority—where the above-lauded "ideal plan" is neither ideal nor workable. In such case, it is not only preferable but absolutely necessary to enlist the leadership of a "professional evangelist" for the "evangelistic meeting". Among such cases are the following:

1. A church cannot promote its own evangelistic meeting successfully if the pastor is not evangelistic in his preaching, and deeply concerned about the lost. If through lack of interest, ability, enthusiasm, or spirituality, the pastor cannot "do the work of an evangelist" (2 Tim. 4:5) by all means, the "ideal plan" would be to secure other leadership.

2. Again, when the church itself is not deeply spiritual, and when it lacks laymen and women who are both "spiritual" and capable, a "home-talent" evangelistic meeting is doomed to be a disappointment. In such a case, the leadership of a "specialist" is required "for the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministering" (Eph. 4:12 R. V.) To be sure, pastors that are not evangelistic are not "ideal", and churches—church members—that are not spiritually equipped are not "ideal". Our contention for the "ideal plan" presupposes ideal conditions, at least approximately.

3. When spiritual non-conductors are present in a church, such as lack of harmony between the pastor and the church—or a clique in it—or a compromising with sin on the part of church members it may be impossible and even fatal for the pastor to try to lead the church in evangelism, first by trying to "perfect the saints" by diagnosing their ailments. A "specialist", a "professional evangelist" would prove more "ideal".

4. Finally, a church—and pastor—may have lost their popularity in their community, and may have become strangely isolated from their "field" and constituency. In which case, the "ideal plan" possibly would be to enlist outside leadership that would challenge and attract the community. A "strange preacher" should prove an advertisement, at least.

CONCLUSION

Any "ideal plan" must have at least three qualifications: It must comply with the specifications of God's Word; it must be promoted by the "right kind" of workers; and it must have the endorsement—the dynamic, the empowering—of the Holy Spirit. Earnestly seek to ascertain his will, and remember "it is not the will of the Lord that one should perish, but that ALL should come to repentance" (2 Peter 3:9), and then be unwilling yourself that any should perish!

House to House Evangelism

By W. H. Beachler

There is little of the spectacular in house to house evangelism. It is simple, quiet, effective, economical, just as it is at once Scriptural. There is little doubt that the first form of evangelism we discover in the New Testament was of a house to house nature.

House to house evangelism is coming back to the place of prominence it deserves. There is much encouragement in the thought. The marked tendency of modern Christianity to centralize so very largely its activities in a building called a church has brought serious loss to the cause of Christ. In the beginning Christ and his followers found frequent use for homes. How fine that was for the homes!

Jesus was a house to house worker. Mary and Martha, and Lazarus were the fruits of house to house evangelism—we must certainly believe. The disciples and St. Paul likewise were house to house evangelists. Indeed the Scriptural sanction and precedent for house to house evangelism is abundantly sufficient; nor has it, in the course of the centuries lost a whit of its merit.

We shall endeavor to indicate some of the points which stand in favor of house to house evangelism.

For instance, first, house to house evangelism puts into action the "Go" in Matthew 28:19-20. There must be "GO" in such a form of evangelism. In this day unsaved folks stay away from special evangelistic efforts. They have so many other places to go, where they will not be disturbed about the matter of their salvation. Our "come, come, come, to church", fails with multitudes. But the "GO" of Jesus represents his command to us, and in multiplied instances it does not fail.

I shall be compelled to indicate other advantages in mere sentences. House to house evangelism is not a thing of times and seasons. It can be carried on throughout the year.

Moreover, any consecrated child of God can share in this type of evangelism even in the absence of a college degree. Indeed it is just possible that college degrees have proven to be hindrances rather than helps in this form of work. At all events they are not indispensable.

Again, in house to house evangelism, there is privacy which permits of frankness and directness, and which enables the worker to proceed with understanding. I simply mean that when an individual is approached in the home that soul knows you mean the one into whose eyes you are looking. And that individual will be far more frank to divulge the problems or difficulties in the way than in any public gathering. And indeed it may be, the biggest difficulty links right up with the home and home-life, as is often true.

And finally, I incline to the idea that after all, everything else being equal, a soul that makes the greatest of all decisions in the quiet and privacy of his or her home, and in the absence of anything that would make for self-consciousness, or divert one's mind and thought, has some very decided advantages in his or her favor. I am not pushing this unduly, but it does seem to me there is something here deserving of thought.

God bless all types and forms of evangelism, so that "by all means some might be saved." But let us see the great Scriptural sanction which rests upon house to house evangelism. Let us see in it a great, golden link with which to link up the home with the church and the church with the home. If folks will not come, we must "Go." Our Lord was a "going" Lord. If we will follow in his gracious steps we must go too. Together let us resolve to be more active in the superb ministry of house to house evangelism.

pression, but rather to involve it all the more deeply in conflict and discord. And there are indications that increased trouble is near at hand. The coal strike situation is becoming serious in Pennsylvania. All mines in western Pennsylvania are down. No coal is available, and that affects many industries. The Bethlehem Steel Plant in Johnstown is almost shut down, having dropped from 70 per cent production to 25 per cent in a fortnight. Admittedly this situation is not laid to the sale of beer directly, but it is related to it in several ways. Most of all it indicates that we are not getting started very far on our way out. And the big difficulty with the whole scheme is not an economic one, but moral and spiritual.

We are suffering a moral collapse the like of which we have not seen for a long time, and we cannot get any real relief economically until we begin to build up morally and spiritually. We will have to learn anew that "righteousness exalteth a nation" and that sin is both a reproach to, and the undoing of, any people. No economic scheme, however well laid it may be, will succeed when built into a policy that ignores righteousness and makes profit of iniquity. Let us pray that our leaders in state and nation, and all the people with them, may get a new sense of the supremacy and indispensability of those values that are not taken into account by the NRA, but for the recovery of which there is far greater necessity than for material prosperity, much as we need the latter.

How much anxiety we humans would escape if, in looking at the frightful things which so often confront us in the moral or spiritual world, we should take account of the element of time, just as we have learned to do when we are confronted by frightful things in the physical world!

When I was a little fellow, a big, black storm cloud would now and then come up out of the west and rush at me like a devouring monster. Its fury would almost throw me into a spasm. By and by it dawned upon me that in half an hour God would be painting a rainbow on the monster's back and no one would be hurt. After that when I began to get nervous at an approaching storm cloud, I would think of what would happen in half an hour. The moment that I thus took account of the element of time, all my fears would pass away. But it took me a long time to learn that, whenever I saw a frightful storm cloud boil up above the horizon on the moral or spiritual side of life, especially in youth, it was a good time to remind myself that there are some things in this world that can pass away only with time, and that we may as well possess our souls in patience and give them time to pass.

When I was a young father, I suffered a

The Teacher and His Worries

By Edward Leigh Pell

Not long ago I was thinking of the wretched state of mind that we developed concerning our young people just after the World War, when we could not decide whether they were turning to Bolshevism or only trying to turn their lives into a perpetual joy ride. If there was ever a time when teachers and parents had a right to throw up their hands in despair, surely it was then. Never before had youth indulged in such terrific volcanic eruptions of radical ideas, such open gestures of contempt for parental authority, such derisive laughter at religion, morality, and everything else that had made life worth while. And yet, when I turned from thinking of that distressful time and looked around to see what had become of those frightful youngsters, about all that I could find was a group of people in their early thirties who bore those youngsters' names—all of them calm, sober, conservative-thinking men and women, and all going quietly on their way trying to make a living for their families and to teach their children to obey their parents, keep God's Commandments, and love their neighbors as themselves.

And I smiled at myself and my incredible folly in worrying myself sick over something that I would not have worried over at all had I only remembered that youth has a habit of growing older.

great deal of anxiety at every approach of measles. By and by I learned that when a child catches measles no power on earth can stop it, and that about all that we can do is to keep him in a warm place, give him plenty of flaxseed tea to make him warmer, and wait as patiently as possible for the attack to pass. After that I could watch measles come and go without worrying. A little later I began to worry over boys and girls when they were threatened with an attack of doubt, which is a sort of moral measles to which even the best boys and girls are not immune. But by and by I learned that about all that anyone can do when a youth has an attack of doubt is to keep him in a warm place in your heart (instead of giving him the cold shoulder and calling him a fool, as so many do), give him plenty of warming evidences of your friendship for him and your faith in him, and wait as patiently as possible for the attack to pass. (Yes, I would pray for him also, but I would be careful not to let him know it— not while the attack continued.)

Then, too, many a teacher worries over his pupils for no other reason than that he takes everything they say as if it came from the lips of sober, mature people like himself. He forgets that they are at the

The World Need. Romans 1:8-17

John 3:16 tells us that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son." It is not that he so loved the Jews or that he so loved the Gentiles, but that he so loved the WORLD. And the religion of Jesus is a world religion, established in order to meet a world need. Paul understood this need, and he also understood that it was his task as a servant of the Lord who had brought salvation to his own life to carry the message to others who needed this salvation, even as he had needed it.

The Great Commission. Matthew 28:16-20

There seems to be no passage of Scripture in the entire Bible that is any more familiar to Brethren than the last two verses of the selection for today's reading. But we are quite sure that, at least in past years, emphasis was placed so emphatically upon the "baptizing" that the importance of "going" especially "into all the world" was largely overlooked.

On the other hand it is quite possible that one may become so zealously affected by the "going" that the importance of the "doing" may be forgotten.

FRIDAY

The Universal Call. Isaiah 55:1-7

When the kingdom of Israel was first established it seemed a difficult thing for the people to realize that Jehovah was anything more than a tribal god or a national god, like the gods of the other tribes or nations surrounding them.

They seemed unable to grasp the broad idea that he was the God of all the world, and that there was none other beside him. Isaiah had a better understanding than that, which finds expression in the universal call of this chapter.

SATURDAY

The Triumph of Missions. Psalm 22:23-31

We realize there are people who hold to the idea that active endeavors to extend Christian missions to all the world is a mistake, and that efforts to make Christianity as we understand it a world-wide religion are futile; and the ultimate success of such endeavors is questioned. But the verses of the twenty-second Psalm designated for today's reading tell of the ultimate triumph of the Christian faith, when "All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto Jehovah." Why? Because "The kingdom is Jehovah's; and he is ruler over the nations."

SUNDAY

United in Christ. Ephesians 2:13-22

Paul writes to the Ephesians and reminds them that as Gentiles they were formerly separated from Christ and were alienated from the commonwealth of Israel.

Then how could they become a part of the true family of God? Only in one way, through Jesus Christ. Not simply through his teaching, because there had been other great teachers in the world who had failed in bringing the world together; but by "the cross" the enmity between God and ALL mankind had been slain, and now all men may be united in the one who voluntarily went to the cross.

The First Foreign Missionaries. Acts 13:1-7

Antioch stood first among the early churches in two things. Here the followers of Jesus were first called Christians, and here was the first home base for foreign missions. Here the disciples caught the vision of a world conquering Christ, and in response to that vision the Holy Spirit came unto them and said, "Separate unto me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."

Note that these first missionaries were definitely and specifically called by the Holy Spirit before they were "separated" by the church. Man-planned and man-organized missionary work has no assurance of success.

TUESDAY

Persecution for the Gospel's Sake. Acts 14:19-28

Many Brethren find comfort in singing that old hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers," but we question the thought that they always understand what they sing. When it comes to "Dungeon, fire and sword," surely some would halt and make the conflict another "Battle of Bull Run." We feel pretty sure of this because there are altogether too many who will not even sacrifice "one tank of gasoline" required for a week-end pleasure trip, for the sake of a contribution to missions or to their local church, or even for a subscription to their church paper.

But Paul was willing to endure any persecution for the sake of the gospel he was set to preach.

An Epistle of Experiences and Progress in Our African Mission

Yaloke, August 12, 1933.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Just one month ago I wrote you last on the eve of our departure for Bangui. En route we visited a number of chapels where we were able to pray with and encourage the evangelists and Bible teachers. Joseph Nguede not having yet returned from his trip to Berberati, Mr. Foster drove me to Bangui in order to transact the necessary business for the missionaries. It was necessary to remain two nights at the Hotel Fossat. We were busy shopping both morning and afternoon, but the 5 P. M. hour was reserved for an evangelistic meeting. Mr. Foster preached a very able sermon in Sango to the assembled natives in the Boulo district of Bangui. After a heart to heart talk with some individuals, whose lives we have touched before, we returned to the hotel for dinner and to make our final preparations for departure. It was necessary to arise very early in order to leave Bangui at 7 A. M. An earlier hour is hardly possible and a later hour would be unwise. We were protected both going and coming and although it was necessary to make many stops both at Boali and at the various chapels en route, we arrived at Yaloke at four o'clock on the afternoon of July 14th. This being the French National Holiday we had missed most of the celebration at Bangui in which we had not cared to participate. The evening, however, was spent together by the reunited missionaries in prayer and conversation as we reviewed God's goodness to us.

Since then there have been no missionary arrivals or departures at Yaloke except a few trips to the villages in the work of evangelization and medical care. The part of July of which we have been speaking has been replete with anniversaries. July 9th was the anniversary of the last Sunday that I spent with Marguerite. I can never forget the songs of that Sunday evening. It was then in the midst of sadness it was given us to write a little hymn "Forget Him?" to the popular tune "Forgotten." On such anniversaries one's mind reviews the past, and I could not only hear my daughter's voice, but it seemed that I could hear again the majestic baritone of Mr. Ed Colburn, as he sang not only at Long Beach Conference, but also at Winona Lake, those words so fraught with meaning to my soul. That anniversary Sunday would have been a day of sadness had it not been for the presence of the Lord. In his goodness he gave a special burden of prayer that the one from whom I have separated for his sake might be filled with the Holy Spirit. This burden of prayer was not alone for my child in the flesh, but my spiritual children whom God has given me in the years of my work in this field. The filling of the Holy Spirit, what it would mean to our service!

July 11th, the first night at Bangui was the anniversary of separation from Marguerite. My mind went back that night, in the hotel room, to the night in Portland after I had left her perhaps for the last time—and I recalled the wonderful sustaining power of God as he enabled me that evening to fulfill my appointment in addressing the Portland Doctors' Association on "Medical Missions in Africa."

Speaking of anniversaries, on this day as I write, my mind goes back twenty years. For it was twenty years ago today that Mr. Gribble and I stood under a bamboo arch in the simple mission house at Kasengou, Congo Belge, and plighted our troth until death. That little word "until" covered the space of ten years only, but God has been faithful, not only until—but after.

Referring to the various departments of our work, we may consider first the Sunday school. Since last writing you our attendance has continued averaging 500. My own department since the departure of Miss Tyson is the children. In this Junior department we have an enrollment of 224 with an almost perfect attendance. We divide these children for their classes among sixteen young monitors, four of whom are girls. Since we have no Sunday school rooms for the children, each little monitor or monitor takes his or her little class of twelve or thirteen children to some suitable and picturesque place upon the lawn where he or she discusses the lesson with a degree of eloquence which only an African can muster. Since May our lessons have been in the book of Daniel. As this book had not yet been translated into Banou I have had the privilege of undertaking this difficult task. Miss Emmert very devotedly and faithfully teaches the Sunday school lesson to the native teachers of all departments, two and three hours weekly. Thus every one hears the Word of God on Sunday morning "In that tongue in which he was born" (Acts 2:8).

The adult men's department is superintended by Mr. Foster, with Mrs. Foster as an able assistant. Miss Patterson assists Miss Emmert in superintending the women, which is always the most difficult department in an African Sunday school. Many of the women come dressed in leaves only. Some of the wives of our Christians have packed away in their little wooden box under lock and key a very special treasure, that is to say, a Sunday dress, which dress they don in all its glory for the weekly visit to Sunday school. You may be assured the color is never black, for African taste is exuberant in the tropics, like African flowers, and seeing a group of women sitting upon the grass presents a variegated aspect, the hues predominating being red, blue, yellow and purple.

The daily chapel services in the morning continue through this time of testing and lack of funds and the attendance has not diminished. Mr. Foster preaches on Monday morning in Sango, I preach on Tuesday morning in Banou. Wednesday morning is the weekly prayer meeting. Thursday morning Mrs. Foster preaches, also in Sango, and Friday morning a choice is made among our numerous eloquent native preachers, who of course (unless otherwise requested because of the presence of strangers) preach in their own tongue. Each morning service is followed by the class for inquirers.

The Bible school of which we wrote last month continues to flourish. The number of teachers has been augmented by the return of Joseph Nguede, who assists both in the adult and junior departments. These classes are held at 8 and 9 o'clock A. M., and from 1 to 4 P. M. with additional choir practice from 5 to 6 on Mondays and Wednesdays.

The French school with its junior and adult departments continues steadily.

Because there have been no funds with which to pay the workmen, very little work has been done on the station since last writing except the actual necessary repairs and upkeep of the station. The funds to pay these necessary workmen is largely donated by individual missionaries from the slender remnants of their allowances.

The medical work being my own special department, is of course dear to my heart. Statistics can easily be given, but no one can write of the heartaches and the sorrows, nor indeed of the over weights of joy which are the daily portion of the medical missionary. To handle in the course of a single morning from 120 to 140 patients, many of them in the direst suffering, is in itself a tremendous appeal on the heart-strings. To keep up the morale of the native nurses and assistants to such a point that all this work shall be done well and scientifically, and beyond all that, in a spirit that manifests the compassion of a loving Saviour and the glory of God, means not only days, but nights of prayer.

Daily souls are yielding to the Saviour, and in the midst of the busy morning all wheels are stopped and an evangelistic service is held. Monday and Friday morning it is Andre Bernard who preaches. Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday mornings Elie Boy and Thursday morning our young probationer, Maurice Poke. The medical missionary is there to suggest, correct, encourage and pray. The results we leave with "him who loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood," and who longs to cleanse the heart of each of our suffering ones even as we touch their bodies for him.

In the current number of the Brethren Missionary we have tried to give a little sketch of the way God provides for our hospital work. You may read it there under the caption "The Lord Will Provide." Should the number be delayed and you are asking "how?" let us say providentially, through the loving hands and hearts of his chosen ones with whom he cooperates although he is not dependent upon them.

Two baptismal services have been held this month. At these two services forty-five followed our Lord in baptism. It is Volongou who performs the rite of baptism. Recently he has been wearing Mr. Hathaway's big rubber boots which engulf him almost completely. Someone has said it is but a step from the third heaven to the thorn in the flesh. Someone also has said it is but a step from the sublime to the ridiculous. We would confess humbly that even while our hearts are deeply enraptured with the joy of seeing our friends follow our Lord in baptism, that humorous circumstances are not lacking. This is the heart of the rainy season, the water is very deep, the degree of displacement intense, and our native pastor in his zeal that all should be immersed the proper number of times, has been known to complete what he thought to be an incomplete action, so that recently one of our nervous women converts was actually immersed five times! I am sure no one will accuse us of being single immersionists on this field.

One of the pleasant features of the work of the Oubangui-Chari Mission has been the depth and extent of the prayer life. At the beginning of our busy day each family unites in prayer in their respective homes, and in the evening at 6:30 we gather alternately at the Foster's home or our own, for an hour of prayer before we settle down to our other duties. God is daily answering these prayers for us. Upon him we depend. Without prayer we could not continue in our labors.

The tentative translation of the book of Daniel now being completed, Joseph Nguede and I have commenced on the book of Acts. We are now in the midst of the wonderful second chapter. We can only pray that as these lessons shall be followed in the Sunday school, their truths may thrill the hearts of the auditors as they have thrilled our own.

We praise God for the degree of health that we have enjoyed during the month. One or two of us have spent a day in bed during the month, and our nurse, Andre Bernard, has had a serious illness but God has been gracious in sparing life and in keeping us in a degree of health above all that we could have asked or thought.

Before closing this somewhat lengthy letter may we mention the very sweet and close fellowship that we have with our other stations in spite of our geographical situation. Runners with letters are not infrequent and we rejoice to know that our fellow missionaries on the other stations are also being kept in health. Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon are being blessed in preparing their Beya translation of the Gospel of Mark for the printers. Miss Tyson is being singularly blessed as she is assuming the new and difficult duties of the Bellevue hospital. Miss Crawford is being greatly helped in the school which she started at Bellevue the first of July, and Kenneth and David are being kept in better health than many children in the homeland. So much for Bellevue.

As to Bassai, Brother and Sister Jobson are working side by side in the French school and the Bible school, ably assisted in the latter by Miss Byron, who until recently has been teaching five classes daily, as well as caring for the native hospital in the absence of Miss Myers. Miss Myers has had a most wonderful experience at Baidi. I will leave this for her to write. Suffice it to say that ever since our June conference at Yaloke she has spent the time alone in this remote Tarre village with only native helpers. Mrs. Kennedy too has been valiantly holding the fort at Bozoum, where a temporary building was recently erected by Mr. Foster on the side of Mr. Gribble's original rendezvous, and so the romance of Bozoum (of which we have written before) continues, as a lonely widow (separated not only from her beloved husband by death, but also by distance from her darling children) teaches, preaches, prays and translates that this section of the Baya tribe may have the Gospel.

If our hearts are sometimes sad, we would say to the praise of his glory that they are more often GLAD! We labor on in the blessed hope of the soon Coming of our Lord and Saviour. We would not stand idly gazing into that heaven whence he vanished from our view, but we would hasten his Coming, as in Oubangui-Chari in these last days, we endeavor to give to the world an object lesson, that the Great Commission in these days of depression is still binding, and that the promise of our Lord "Lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world" but shines the brighter in these dark days.

We thank you dear readers, who have had and are having your share in this great work through your prayers and your gifts. We praise God for the prospects of reinforcements. Let us follow the admonition that Miss Myers gave us at our last conference and "SAIL ON!"

FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

The church choir sang an appropriate and favorite selection of the pastor and Rev. A. F. Heltman, pastor of the Broad Avenue Presbyterian church, was introduced and paid tribute to the flowers which has likened as a symbol of the life of Brother Gnagey.

Rev. Heltman said the best that any man could say of Rev. Gnagey was that he behaved himself. He went about doing good at all times and devoted his life to his work, speaking only good of all men and preaching the whole gospel, and great, indeed, is the man who can put his own life into his sermons.

Rev. Edgar A. Henry, pastor of the Broad Avenue Methodist church, although only a resident of the city less than six months, and not coming in very close personal contact, yet felt that, through the influence of the beloved pastor, he had known him all his life. He stressed cooperation as a leading factor for good, and Rev. Gnagey was in accord at all times with every movement for good.

Miss Florence Fyock, representing the young people of the church, lauded his helpfulness in the work of the young people, his work in the Christian Endeavor society, the Sisterhood and kindred organizations. The presence of Rev. and Mrs. Gnagey was always appreciated, she said.

Rev. B. F. Waltz, pastor of the Twenty-eighth Street Church of the Brethren, expressed the thought that Rev. Gnagey had the happy faculty of blending soul with spirit. He said, "We need more vim and new energy to change our present conditions." He cited prayer as a cure for the present difficulties and "we can express ourselves best through a real experience," he said. Mr. Gnagey stands as a witness of the goodness of the Lord Jesus Christ.

A pleasing part of the program was a number of selections by the Rescue Mission chorus, which had kindly consented to add to the pleasure of the evening. B. F. Henderson, a member of the chorus, expressed his and the members' pleasure in being present and able to take part in the program.

Rev. E. H. Dougherty, superintendent of the Rescue Mission, who dropped in later in the evening, was called upon and expressed his pleasure at being present. He said that, while this is a glorious occasion, there will be one greater, "when we all get up there and receive the rewards for our service." Rev. Dougherty then joined with the chorus in singing the closing numbers.

Several members of the congregation added words of testimony and then Miss Louise Stambaugh called Rev. and Mrs. Gnagey to the front of the church and presented them with a well filled purse and a beautiful bouquet of choice flowers.

In response, Mrs. Gnagey said there was nothing but love in her heart for everybody. "We love them all alike and it has been a joy to us to work and live in Altoona," she said. She asked God's choicest blessings on all.

Rev. Gnagey responded briefly. He said he had learned a few things at this affair. He said he did not know that he was all of which had been said and that there was no better way to express it than in the words of the little Negro boy who had been reviled by another, "All dem tings you say I am, you is."

Rev. Gnagey expressed his thanks for what had been said. He expressed the

PASTOR AND WIFE GIVEN RECEPTION

Congregation of First Brethren Church and a Host of Friends Extend Farewell Greetings to Dr. and Mrs. A. D. Gnagey as They Leave the Altoona Pastorate

The following is taken from THE ALTOONA MIRROR.

Amid the members of the congregation of the First Brethren church at Maple Avenue and Thirtieth Street and a host of friends and neighbors and brother ministers of the gospel, Rev. and Mrs. A. D. Gnagey were tendered a farewell reception in the church last evening.

Happy in the thought that fifty-five years of labor for the Master in a public way will terminate on Sunday, October 1, just ten years after assuming the pastorate of the Altoona congregation, Rev. Gnagey, with his wife will return to their old home in Ashland, Ohio, to spend the remaining years of a well earned retirement.

The altar and platform surrounding the pulpit was profusely adorned with choice flowers and, as one speaker suggested, was a fitting tribute to the living, rather than to the dead, so conspicuous in many sadder occasions.

The church was filled with members of the congregation and friends and neighbors as Simon F. King, in charge of the program, introduced the singing of a favorite hymn by the congregation followed by devotions by Rev. Hubert Hammond, who read a portion of the Scriptures and offered prayer.

In announcing the program, Mr. King stated that every number was rather informal and that no one knew just when he or she would be called upon. He then recounted briefly the pastorate of Rev. Gnagey and introduced George Caswell who sang "Lillies of Lorraine" and later on the program sang "A Closer Walk with God," after he spoke briefly of Rev. and Mrs. Gnagey as neighbors and expressed his regrets but joined in best wishes and then sang with much feeling the appropriate song.

Rev. John W. Barnes, pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran church, paid tribute to the retiring pastor. His influence, not counting individuals, will be seen by God. Residing and working within sight of each other, Rev. Barnes said he was happy to work with such a fine man of God and that his daily walk in life was a Divine benediction. The fruits of Rev. Gnagey's ten years of labor in Altoona will be seen in the many years to come, he said.

If Rev. Gnagey had a hobby, it was the young people. As a testimony, Roland Sorge and Clifford Mock, in clear boyish voices, sang in duet form "Kind Words Can Never Die," which expressed better than any other way the spirit of the pastor toward the boys and girls of his congregation and of the community.

REV. A. D. GNAGEY

thought that the job of being pastor is no lazy man's task and that, if he had the entire fifty years to do over again, he would do the same thing in the same way.

The meeting closed with a selection by the chorus and then the congregation joined in singing "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," followed by the benediction of a member of the chorus.

Rev. Gnagey will deliver his farewell sermon Sunday morning and Sunday evening there will be another fellowship meeting in the church, to which the public is cordially invited. Rev. and Mrs. Gnagey will leave next week for their new home in Ashland, Ohio.

SEMINARY NOTES

Our Seminary opened this Fall with a fine number of students returning to work, and others beginning their Seminary career. All of the Seniors, seven in number, returned and will be graduated in the Spring, having consummated seven years of work, four years in College and three in the Seminary. Seven returned for their second year's work, which is all but one, who for financial reasons is postponing his continued work for one year. Four College graduates matriculated in the Seminary for the first year's work. We also have several special part-time and auditing students.

The Seminary Convocation was held in the Ashland church with Brother M. A. Stuckey delivering the message.

The Seminary faculty entertained the members of the Graduate School at the Annual Reception, in the home of Dr. and Mrs. Monroe.

The Seminary Library this year is in charge of Miss Mary Ashman, a graduate of Ashland College of last Spring, who is a special student in our Seminary. The work of cataloging our library, of over 3,000 volumes, will shortly be undertaken by her. We have received a number of gift books for our Library and still are glad to receive any you may care to have used by our Seminary men.

In response to a request made last year, for money with which to purchase a large raised map of Palestine, we have received the following amounts: Miss Alice Longaker, Long Beach, California, $45.00; The National S. M. M., $25.00; and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Johansen of Cleveland, $20.00. Although this will not quite pay for the map it has been ordered on faith. Thank you for your splendid gifts. The map should be here in December.

WINCHESTER NEWS, VIRGINIA

The First Brethren church of Winchester, Virginia, reports a happy time in fellowship and service with Brother R. Paul Miller who conducted the evangelistic services this fall in the Gospel Tent. It was indeed a blessed privilege for pastor and people to have this renewal of fellowship and joyful edification, after an absence of about four years.

The Brethren are to be commended for the fine support they gave to the success of the meeting by their faithfulness in attendance and in personal service.

The absorbing content of Brother Miller's messages backed up a life that practiced what he preached, brought many listeners from near and far. He preached fearlessly the whole Gospel. His timely messages on prophecy brought joy and comfort to many. The attendance was large from beginning to the end. There were only a few nights of damp rainy weather when the crowds decreased but on those nights when least expected delegations came from Washington, D. C., Hagerstown, Maryland, and Cumberland. We enjoyed the presence of these visiting churches. Thank you, Brother Wakeman for the fine selections of the Quartet. All of you come again. We admire courage that launches out into the deep and fears no storms, rain, or fog.

Many from other denominations came regularly. It was not unusual to hear frequent testimonies like this from members and leaders of other churches: "Thank God for sending Brother Miller at this time." "He is one of the greatest preachers I ever heard." "His messages burn within my soul." "His preaching makes me love the Old Book." "I marvel how he got all those little sermons out of the question box. They were just wonderful."

Brother Miller deserves much credit not only for the helpful instruction he gave out through the question box, but also for the judicious way he handled and answered them.

The visible results of the meeting were 21 confessions and reconsecrations. We hope to see other real evidences of these services hereafter.

The church and pastor thank God and Brother Miller for his ministry here and commend him to the brotherhood as a man of God, who not only fearlessly preaches an uncompromising Gospel, but also one who does constructive work in the field of evangelism. May God cause him to abound in grace and use him to win many to Christ, is our prayer.

E. J. ROHART, Pastor.

THE REVIVAL AT WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

This was the first meeting of the season. Four years ago we were here in a campaign and it was with real pleasure that we returned to seek souls again in this field. We found the whole community ready for the meeting. The attendance was simply fine from the start. The meetings were held in a tent erected on the church grounds. The numbers who attended could never have been accommodated in the church building.

The interest in the meetings was all that could be expected. The local newspaper was most courteous and generous in giving front page space for the meetings. Some folks drove from Harrisonburg, Washington, D. C., Hagerstown, Maryland, and other towns where we have churches. It was a great pleasure to see the fine spirit of interest and friendship that such concern revealed.

We had a great opportunity in this campaign but seemed unable to make the most of it. People would come, ask questions, take part in the services heartily, and yet we seemed unable to get them to enter the church. Seldom have we met such difficulty. But those who did step out gave us great joy.

The Pastor, E. J. Rohart, is a hard worker and tirelessly took us around to see friendly people in the community. He is a great worker with children and performs wonders with them, and they like him. He is a young man, was just beginning his work when I was there before, and he has tremendously grown since that time in his ministerial ability. He loves lost souls and is ever concerned for them. He makes a fine song leader for the meetings and is no mean singer himself.

Our home while in Winchester was with Brother and Sister Walter Anderson, where we enjoyed the finest love and Christian fellowship. The homes of members and friends were wide open to us and many pleasant hours were spent enjoying the hospitality of these people.

We believe that this field in Winchester constitutes one of the most promising that the Brethren Church now has. Certainly it deserves all the aid and attention that can possibly be given it lest another organization step in and usurp the opportunity that has been held out to us for so many years. I shall look forward with great interest to every report from this field, hoping for the news that will indicate that we have made such progress that we are not in danger of losing the field. R. PAUL MILLER.

age when human beings are at the mercy of terrific outbursts of enthusiasm, and that their enthusiasms change so rapidly that the thing they rave over today may utterly fail to interest them tomorrow. As a consequence, when a sixteen-year-old girl tells the pastor on Sunday that she is crazy to be a missionary to China, and on Monday confides to his wife that she is crazy to go into the movies, he feels like throwing up his hands in despair.

But we have worries that are far more serious than the explosions and transient aberrations and changing enthusiasms of youth; and these we cannot get rid of by merely reminding ourselves that they are natural and will pass with time. Many a teacher who suffers little anxiety about his pupils is continually worrying over his own limitations and weaknesses—his lack of passion or conviction, his proneness to doubt, his failure to realize the presence of Christ in his life, his inability to rid his mind of confusion about the religion that he is trying to teach. I know of only one cure for these worries, and that is a Christ-centered mind. The average modern Christian tries to center his heart in Christ, but he seldom tries to center his mind in him. As a consequence he goes on doing his thinking as he has always done, from a world-centered point of view, which is materialistic and selfish. From that point of view Christ is nothing more than a shadow and religion a hopeless tangle. I think that I never acquired a very clear view of Christ and his religion until I formed the habit of turning my waking thoughts toward him every morning, and keeping them fixed upon him until I had fallen in with him in my thinking as well as in my affections and could begin my daily task with a Christ-centered mind—a mind that thinks always in full view of Christ and in harmony with his teachings and spirit. When you begin to do your thinking around Christ as the center of things, it is only a question of time until you will have a deep sense of his reality. Soon afterwards will follow a clear view of his religion and the faith and love and conviction that you need.—The Westminster Uniform Lesson Teacher.

Why I Go to Church

By Spright Dowell

A self-survey as to "Why I Go to Church" reveals the following reasons:

1. Habit. Going to church, like learning to walk, has become second nature, thanks to the influence of Godly parents.

2. Custom. The example of the best people in every community which I have ever lived convinces me beyond question that the most worthy and the most useful people in every community go to church.

3. Obedience. The spirit of loyalty to his word and to his will makes it a duty as well as a privilege to attend the services of his house.

4. Love. The inspiration and blessing that I feel in his holy temple prompt me to say, like the Psalmist of old: "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord."

5. Objective. Back of all of the above reasons are the real benefits which church attendance brings:

(1) Information. In the course of my life I have never found any other regular and systematic opportunity for helpful contact and high thinking comparable to that afforded by the church.

(2) Development. No other agency provides such a favorable setting for the discovery and development of the virtues and the graces that inspirit and ennoble life.

(3) Strength. In the atmosphere of God's house, I find the communion and fellowship that enable and impel me to share his available power and purpose with him.

(4) Co-operation. Conscious of my own limitations and of the wisdom of collective effort, I find in church attendance the preparation that I need for planning and working with my fellows.

(5) Service. Since service is the measure of success and the church is the agency par excellence for service, church attendance affords the best possible means of preparation for expressing and enlarging my life in loving service to my Father and to his children.

MORE about "House to House" Evangelism

In the Evangelist of September 16th something was said on this page about "house to house" evangelism. A few days later I received a letter from a friend of mine who is one of the hardest working soul-winners in the Brethren pastorate. Yet he says:

"I realize that my ministry is not as personal as it should be. Not that I do not have the time, but I simply do not take it. Strange as it may seem, I honestly believe that I spend more time in prayer for ... the unsaved than I do visiting with them."

There is a pointed lesson in the words of this successful pastor. The lesson is not that we pray too much, but rather that we work too little. He who would win souls must first talk to God, but he must also talk to men. How often after we have prayed, God is ready to answer our prayers. But we are not ready to be used in bringing God's saving message to the soul for whom we have prayed.

The Bible student will find an instructive example in Exodus 14:15. The Israelites were caught between the Egyptian hosts and the Red Sea. In this crisis Jehovah says to Moses, "Why criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." There is a time to pray, and there is a time to work. There is a time to speak to God, and there is a time to speak to men. Blessed is that pastor who knows the times and the seasons.

THE "state of the Union"

Some time ago Huey Long, clownish Senator from Louisiana, had his countenance a bit disfigured in an altercation with an unknown assailant while at a Long Island club. At the suggestion of some reporter with a sense of humor, a medal was struck off to commemorate the historic affair, now jocosely referred to as the "battle of Long Island." Now for the astonishing sequel: The demand for the medals has been so great that 80,000 have been sold at twenty-five cents a piece!

There are two things about this whole matter which are not very funny. First, the fact that the upper house of Congress contains such a clown as Huey Long, calls for national repentance in sack-cloth and ashes. Second, if in these days of hardship people can spend $20,000 to celebrate a black eye, it is hard to believe in the sanity of the human race.

ONE Way to Build New Churches

The lady from Angelus Temple, Los Angeles, is now on the vaudeville stage earning $5,000 per week and a percentage of box receipts. A New York newspaper quotes her as saying, "And with the money that comes from your beautiful New York (theater audiences) I hope to build more churches."

People who wish to evaluate correctly the work and motives of this woman should remember several things: First, she is being paid $5,000 a week, not because the theater has any special love for the Gospel which she preaches, but because she has become a newspaper celebrity. Second, she has been made a celebrity by the newspapers, not because they have any special regard for the Lord she claims to worship, but because she provides good news copy. And third, she is good news copy, not because of any deeds of righteousness performed, but because of kidnapping stories, lawsuits, family squabbles, marital rifts, etc.

That is one way to build "churches."

MRS. Besant is Dead

Annie Besant, who began her career as the wife of an English clergyman, later became an atheist, and finally wound up as the leader of a world-wide movement back toward East Indian theosophical religion, has passed into the Great Beyond about which she liked to speculate.

Americans of the present generation will remember her best as the sponsor of the Indian Krishnamurti whom she proclaimed as the latest reincarnation of the "Great World Teacher," or "Christ." The young Krishnamurti, you will recall, finally became rather bored with the role cast for him by Mrs. Besant and repudiated her claims for him. There was not enough iron in his soul to act the part of a "god."

Mrs. Besant lived too soon. Some day (it may be near) the "Great World Teacher" will arrive, sponsored not by a few Theosophists, but by Satan himself. And all the world shall worship him, whose names are not written in the Lamb's Book of Life. There will be no lack of iron in his soul. He will not rest until he sits in the temple of God, showing himself as God. But his tenure will be short, though terrible.

ENDED in Discord

In the rather full obituary which appeared after the death of Mrs. Besant, one item will be of interest to those who still believe in our Lord's teaching about the marriage relation. Of Mrs. Besant's marriage it was said, laconically, "The marriage ended in discord."

Strange as it may seem, this brief comment could be written about the marital experiences of many of the women who have become the leaders of important religious movements. Compare Mrs. Eddy, Mrs. White, Mrs. MacPherson, Mrs. Besant, and others. The influence of these women has been enormous in the modern breaking down of the sanctity of the marriage relation.

Paul, often accused of being a confirmed woman-hater, was really defending the Home and Marriage when he wrote in First Timothy 2:12, "I suffer not a woman to teach nor usurp authority over the man—" The above mentioned women have not liked Paul very well. As a matter of fact, no woman who is impatient with her marriage ties will like Paul very well. Nevertheless, the word of this Apostle is written in one of the "books" which will be opened at the judgment of the world. And all men, as well as women, will be wise if they take heed to what he wrote.

THE Church Money "Racket"

Dr. William H. Leach, editor of Church Management, is certainly no Fundamentalist. He would probably have no particular scruples about departing from the teaching of the Bible. Yet this is what he said to the Congregational Union of Cleveland the other day:

"I do not know of any Protestant Church which has, as yet, taken out a beer license to make money for the church, but I would not want to preclude it from the field of possibilities. Almost no scheme is turned down if it gets results. Selling schemes are rampant. Raffling devices, after a generation of silence, are again being seen. Churches which would not tolerate dancing and card playing a few years ago, now permit them because they are profitable. Unless some effort is made to resist the temptations of miscellaneous sales and advertising stunts which offer to produce revenues for churches, we will find the whole thing degenerating into a racket, and a lifetime of educational effort and emphasis lost."

Even the modernists are wise enough to know that, from the standpoint of practical results, the very worst way to raise the church budget is to bring in the "selling racket." It alienates the most spiritual supporters within the Church, and it angers the world outside the church.

Some months ago, stopping for dinner in a fair sized town, I asked a well dressed business man to direct me to a good restaurant. He said, "We have no good ones." I asked, "Why?" He answered, "The churches here have gone into the selling game to such an extent that no good restaurant has any assurance of regular support." Finding that the man himself was a member of one of the churches, I inquired whether the churches were making progress financially, to which he replied that they seem to be going "into the red" worse every year.

Beware the blight of the "selling racket" in the church of God. (Read John 2:13-16 and remember that Jesus is the same yesterday, and today, and forever.)

An easy life is not likely to be a very valuable life to itself or to others. Strength comes by overcoming obstacles, and it is the strong life that can best help those about it.

Loyalty to the Church of Christ

One of the most important words in the Christian's vocabulary is loyalty. The Christian religion is founded on loyalty—loyalty to a person, Jesus Christ the Son of God. That loyalty involves an acknowledgment of the claims of Christ, and the acceptance of new life and love at his hands and all the means of grace that he has provided. That means church loyalty too. It means not merely lining oneself up with the church, but giving it active support, believing its teaching, accepting its influence, cooperating with its aims and programs and having regard for its good name. Christian loyalty that does not apply itself to the church of Christ, is lacking in an important element necessary to make it truly Christian. That fact has been all too widely neglected. Much has been said about loyalty to Christ and to his Word, and that is right, but the needed emphasis of loyalty to the church has been overlooked, or considered unimportant. There is a type of evangelism abroad that concerns itself with nothing more than a mere decision for Christ. That, of course, is good and the thing of first importance, but the evangelist has not completed his task until he has directed the new-born soul into the church and into an attitude of loyalty to it. The report of New Testament evangelism was that "the Lord added unto the church daily such as were being saved."

The Church Established by Christ

A definite attitude of loyalty to the church is important because it is Christ's church, he established it, and at a great price. Jesus said to Peter, after he had confessed him to be "the Christ, the Son of the living God," "upon this rock (the great confession Peter had just made) I will build my church" (Matt. 16:18). Here our Lord very definitely lays claim to the church as his own possession and his own creation. The plans for his church had already been conceived and entered upon when he went "up into a mountain and called unto him whom he would . . . and ordained twelve, that they might be with him" (Mark 3:13, 14). Confirming Christ's claim to ownership, Paul refers to it as the "church of Christ" (Rom. 16:16), and as "the household of God" (Eph. 2:19). The apostle indicates the great price our Lord paid to get for himself a church when he admonished the elders of Ephesus to "feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood" (Acts 20:28) and in writing a letter to these same Christian leaders, he reminds them that "Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it" (Eph. 5:25). That makes the church supremely important and so vital a factor in the Christian's loyalties that one can scarcely be said to be a Christian who presumes to ignore or neglect the church of Christ.

The Intimacy of Relationship

The church is not only the possession of Christ, but it sustains an intimacy of relationship to him that is absolutely unique. The relationship is one of such complete identification that the church is called the "body" of Christ. Paul tells the Colossians (1:18) that Christ "is the head of the body, the church", and to the church at Corinth he writes: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular" (1 Cor. 12:27), and to the Ephesians: "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all" (Eph. 1:22, 23). Then we have these wonderful words setting forth the intimacy not only of Christ and the church as a corporate body, but of every member of that body: "And he gave some apostles . . . for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ . . . that we may grow up unto him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase in the body unto the edifying of itself in love" (Eph. 4:11-13, 15, 16). To the Romans Paul also presents this unity of Christians, a unity one with another and with Christ in these words: "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another" (Rom. 12:4, 5). And our blessed Lord himself invites that little group that became the nucleus of his church, and us also, into that intimate fellowship with him, saying: "Abide in me and I in you. . . . I am the vine, ye are the branches" (John 15:4, 5). What a blessed and intimate relationship! and with so great a person as the Son of God! Who would be without it? But bear in mind that it is vouchsafed unto those only who are members of the church of Christ. How important then that we should be members of that church and that we should exercise loyalty to it!

Custodian of Means of Grace

Church loyalty is important also because the church is the custodian of the means of grace and the door into the kingdom. It was to his young church that Christ committed his charge: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" (Matt. 28:19, 20). The phrase, "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" is the thing to be kept in mind. That is a broad program. It includes going forth and proclaiming the evangel, but it also involves making known and perpetuating "all that Jesus began both to do and to teach" (Acts 1:1), even as Luke undertook to do. The apostolic church understood its task and showed exemplary loyalty in doing it. That is evident from the record. "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and of prayers" (Acts 2:42). "And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem (Acts 16:4). Their memories were fresh concerning all those wonderful teachings and beautiful ordinances they had received from their Lord. Yet how easy it was to forget and to grow careless when they have been removed a little from the place and time of the events and teachings. Paul recognized and he thought it wise to admonish the elders of Ephesus thus: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God" (Acts 20:28). And to the Romans he writes: "I beseech you, mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them" (Rom. 16:17). That is an appeal to loyalty to the teachings and practices that were committed to them by him who is the great Head of the church. That is a call to maintenance of full faith and obedience to the whole counsel of God that was felt necessary while the church was not yet a generation removed from the date of its founding. How much more do we need the plea for loyalty to the whole gospel of Christ today. And to us it comes as a call to denominational loyalty, for that implicit faith and unswerving obedience in which we believe our Lord takes delight has been the distinctive characteristic of historic Brethrenism. And if we have a place to fill in the economy of God in the days that are ahead, we will find and occupy it in proportion as we maintain our loyalty to the whole gospel of which the church has so long been the custodian.

Church Clothed with Authority

Another reason for the importance of church loyalty and why it should be encouraged more widely is the fact that the church is clothed with authority by him who ordained it. That which Christ has established and commissioned deserves the reverence and devotion of all men and those who call Jesus Lord are honor-bound to give it. The church's authority is not an absolute and arbitrary kind such as might enable it to speak with finality on all subjects and command obedience irrespective of the individual's attitude, and out of its own desires. Rather, it speaks with an authority that is based only on the Word of God and in the spirit of love and its force is the constraining power of honor and devotion. That is the nature of God's dealings with men; he exercises his power in love, drawing men unto himself, rather than driving them. The love of Christ constraineth men to give devotion and loyalty to his church. Paul says, "I beseech you to submit yourselves" (1 Cor. 16:15, 16). Again, "For to this end also I write that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things". (2 Cor. 2:9). Then this other statement of Paul expresses more clearly still the real nature of the church's appeal and of the character of the response that should be made: "We beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; that to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake" (1 Thess. 5:12, 13). Such an appeal wins loyalty rather than commands it and the authority of the church is accepted gladly and with a sense of gratitude. With such an understanding as to the spirit and manner of the exercise of its authority, there can scarcely be any objection, even among so congregationally minded people as Brethren are, to an assertion of the church's authority as ground for its appeal for loyalty. That it has such ground no one can deny who reads his Bible. It is not difficult to recall such words as these: "Obey them that have rule over you, and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief" (Heb. 13:17). And Paul writes to Titus (2:15) "These things speak and exhort, and rebuke with all authority." On the basis of such authority and in the spirit of love and consideration, the leadership of the church has a claim upon the cooperation of the membership and the recognized church agencies have a right to build their programs and launch their campaigns in anticipation of conscientious support on the part of their constituents. Such loyalty is not only a great necessity, but a binding obligation.

Christ Indwelling

And lastly, the church has a right to expect loyalty on the part of the membership because of Christ's presence in their lives. Our Lord has promised: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:20). Everyone ought and can have his presence. Concerning the Holy Spirit, the promise is "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." And great will be the change in the life if the Spirit is permitted to indwell a person. Paul writes: "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you" (Rom. 8:11). With such a change, our human weaknesses will be overcome by divine strength and purpose. Henceforth it will be true "as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God and they shall be my people" (2 Cor. 6:16). Then loyalty will come as a matter of course. It will be natural and spontaneous and wholehearted. With such a continuous flow of loyalty the church will be strong and victorious.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

From Lanark, Illinois, comes a letter stating that the Brethren there are going forward in faith and determination to "do their part". All the departments are functioning actively, and the Christian Endeavorers are said to have done exceptional work during the summer. The church has voted unanimously to go forward another year under the pastoral leadership of Brother C. C. Grisso.

The church at Mathias, West Virginia, enjoyed a successful revival under the evangelistic leadership of Brother E. L. Miller of Maurertown, Virginia. The services were largely attended and greatly revived the spiritual interest of the community. Eleven souls were saved. Brother Arthur Snider is the pastor of this church. As a result of Brother Snider's ten days' meeting at Kinsey's Run three conversions are reported.

* As we were about ready for the press we received a copy of the Altoona Mirror, giving an account of the retirement of Dr. A. D. Gnagey from the Altoona, Pennsylvania, pastorate, amid many expressions of appreciation by representatives of church and community. He preached his farewell sermon on October 1st, bringing to a close a ten year pastorate and completing fifty-five years in the ministry. He and Mrs. Gnagey are returning to Ashland to live. A more detailed report will be given next week.

Prof. M. A. Stuckey gives us some interesting news on the Sunday School page regarding teacher training in our church during the past year, reporting the names of churches, pastors and courses studied and the names of the graduates in teacher training. We had been wondering if there was as much interest being taken in the training of teachers as was formerly manifested, but this splendid report is encouraging and reassuring. May the good work go on. Good teachers are about the most important cogs in the wheel of progress that the local church has outside the pastor.

Dr. Charles A. Bame says a word about the use of our Sunday school quarterlies. We believe he is right, that it is bad policy to economize by cutting down or cutting out the use of lesson helps in the Sunday schools. Every scholar ought to have the advantage of a brief commentary on the lesson such as the quarterly supplies. That is about the only guide and help to Bible study that the average church member has access to, and it is the most truly Brethren that is available. It ought not to be denied them. In another department Dr. Bame reviews a book entitled "The Jew and His Destiny". We are glad to publish book reviews by any of our leaders who feel they have gotten hold of a book worthy of introducing to others.

The editor had the pleasure of preaching for the Homerville, Ohio, Brethren on Sunday, October 1st., on the occasion of their fall Rally and preparation for revival. The attendance was splendid for that rural church. This was our first visit to this place and we were pleasantly surprised to see such a well-kept and inviting little house of worship, and withal wholly adequate for their needs. Naturally their membership is not large, yet what it lacks in numbers it makes up in quality. We received a number of new subscriptions to The Brethren Evangelist, and we found the Sunday school loyal in the use of Brethren literature. Brother Floyd Shiry preaches for this church every other Sunday.

Brother Lester V. King writes of the closing of his pastorate of eight years at New Lebanon, Ohio, where he has accomplished a splendid work. During his stay there he led his people in the payment of their parsonage debt and then in the enlargement of their church building, the remodeling being done at a cost of $18,000, about half of which has been raised. The average Sunday school attendance has been more than doubled and the church membership has been increased by 240 during his ministry. He has made a record for himself by the faithful attention given to his pastoral work and the results prove the worth of his method. We bespeak for him God's continued blessing in his new fields of endeavor at Mexico and Corinth, Indiana. The New Lebanon people have been fortunate in securing as their new pastor Dr. W. H. Beachler, who takes over the work the first of October.

The National Christian Endeavor officers of the Brethren church are presenting in this issue the work program for the year, and an open letter concerning the same. Certain months are set aside for stressing of certain types of work. The making of such a program and the working towards its accomplishment by the various societies, make for efficiency and thoroughness. No doubt the officers of the local organizations have received a copy of this program. The letter offers a splendid suggestion regarding the use of this program. It is a good suggestion; do it. And a financial challenge is presented to the Endeavorers for this year also. This is their opportunity to demonstrate in one way the practical work of Christian Endeavor to the brotherhood. Study the entire program. Then plan your work by it and work your plan.

Haggai and the Depression

By R. I. Humberd

Ours is not the first depression.
Cause—Men have robbed God by withholding the tithe and giving cheap offerings.
Remedy—Prove God with tithes and offerings, NOW.

Millions of men are out of work; thousands of families are denying the necessities of their existence; hundreds of homes lack the simple comforts of life; scores of the once rich are vainly trying to hold on to a vanishing bank account.

We ask a question, "What is wrong?" At once a thousand throats shout out the answer—"The Depression". Again we venture to ask, "What is the cause of the depression and how can it be cured?" The din is deafening as a babel of voices give vent to their opinions.

Not the First Depression

Again we inquire, "Was there ever another depression?" Yes, there was a depression in Haggai's time. "Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough" (Haggai 1:6). How like today! A farmer may sow his broad acres; the ground may produce bountifully, but when taxes are paid, he has but little left.

There was a want "upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn . . . and upon all the labour of the hands" (vs. 11). A few had an income, but try as they would, they could not make both ends meet for their wages went into bags with holes" (Vs. 6).

"Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. BECAUSE of mine house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house. THEREFORE the heaven over you is stayed from dew" (Vs. 9, 10).

But someone may ask, "Isn't it right that we run every man to his own house? Shouldn't we pay the grocer, the dentist and the doctor?"

Keep Out of Debt

Most certainly we should pay our bills, but we should put first things first. If God's minister has sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if he shall reap your carnal things? "If OTHERS be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather?" (1 Cor. 9:11, 12). In other words, if the doctor, the baker and the storeman are partakers of this power over you. That is, if you pay them for their service to you, "Are not we RATHER?" That is, a Christian is under obligation to pay his bills, but God and his house comes FIRST.

"Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste?" (Haggai 1:4). People may live in comfortable homes. If their own house needs paint, it is painted. If a new porch is wanted, a couple of hundred dollars are gladly squandered. At great expense, a basement is dug and a furnace installed. But how about new paint for the church, or a comfortable parsonage and just wages for the pastor?

God Wants His Rent

"The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof" (Ps. 24:1). God owns the land and has always asked one-tenth of the increase to carry on his work. If a man owns a farm and the tenant fails to pay his rent, something happens. If God owns the earth and fails to get his rent, is it unfair if something happens?

Let us imagine a congregation of one hundred families. In good times we will say that each family averages one thousand dollars a year. That is one hundred thousand dollars income, with ten thousand as the tithe. Usually the pastor gets the smallest possible salary and is paid, if the janitor and the coal bill leave anything in the treasury. He has spent thousands upon an education and should receive an income like the doctor and the dentist, but alas, he hardly receives the wages of a day laborer.

God's Tremendous Loss

That church should have given ten thousand dollars, at the lowest estimate, into the channels of the Lord's work. But pastor's salary, foreign missions and all other funds are scarcely able to total two thousand dollars. If God loses eight thousand dollars a year on that one congregation, think what he loses on the other five hundred congregations in that county, not mentioning the untold thousands of people who breathe his air and drink his water and who do not even belong to a church.

Will a Man Rob God?

There is but one name for the person who thus neglects God's house and runs "every man unto his own house". He is a thief. He is actually robbing God (Mal. 3:8).

If the owner of a farm is robbed, he objects. If the owner of the earth is robbed, why should he not object?

There is a depression. God has not received his rent. Even men who professed to love him have robbed him. The pastor went unpaid or was given the most meager allowance when prices were high. Now, times have changed. Men may even bring home a good pay check but God does "blow upon it. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. BECAUSE of mine house" (Haggai 1:9).

Consider Your Ways

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways" (Vs. 7). Many people take such advantage of the offering plate that the church would close, if it were not for a few faithful souls, who keep it open at any cost to themselves.

Suppose people should try to pay their taxes in the same way they try to carry on the work of God—that is, with things of little value; nickles, pennies, etc. Israel tried that and offered the "blind for sacrifice". But God said, "offer it now unto thy governor; will he be pleased with thee?" (Mal. 1:8). No, the government will even sell a man's house to get the taxes and can we blame God when he curses the "deceiver which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth a corrupt thing"? That is, a man who has money in the bank, or credit and yet vows he is hard up and gives God a cheap thing—a nickle when it should have been a dollar and a dime when it should have been ten dollars. "I am a great king, saith the Lord" (Mal. 1:14) and if your earthly governor will not accept your little tips, beware of me.

Pay God Now

"O", says some one, "I hadn't aimed to rob God. I just

Our Moral Problems

Moral problems that almost defy solution, we learn, are terribly distressing our pastors and other godly workers in the vineyards. There has been a fearful breakdown in the world of men, due to the World War, perhaps! due to the apostasy which has robbed the Church of its saltiness more probably! Of course, we all know that from legislators and judges who have recently been elevated to seats of high authority in our land, moral righteousness gets little or no sympathy. The sadder part of it is that many parents not only permit, but that they actually encourage their jungle-brained daughters to parade our streets in little or nothing save their muchly-abbreviated little white panties.  How much shorter shorts can get without our youth being even short of shorts, is a perplexing question. In that old-fashioned long ago that some of us can remember, most mothers were quite careful to keep out of sight certain delicate little garments. We remember when they used to hang them on wash day back behind the sheets on the clothesline, so that they would not be in full view of every leering "peeping Tom" who passed along the highway. Today, "peeping Toms" do not need to peep. They are having the time of their lives on every broad highway.

O for a return once more of that delicious, sweet, old-fashioned modesty that we once so greatly prized in our girls—in girls who still knew how to blush! In those days, there was at least an atmosphere of mystery about womanhood which made every true and pure courtship pulsate with the breath of heaven. Women know not what a precious jewel they have lost when they have lost sweet modesty. It may be that those old-fashioned times were at times a bit too heavily laden with prudery; nevertheless, newspapers were not filled with whole pages of marital disaster; the divorce courts were not humming; and a divorced man or woman was almost taboo in good society. As a matter of fact, our age has about touched bottom so far as modesty is concerned. It is not alone on the female side of the fence that modesty has faded from the scene. The shameless barnyard display made by some of our young men on and off the beaches, arrayed in their modernistic bathing-non-suits is enough to make angels weep, and demons whose chief business it is to demoralize the human race, to howl with delight.

If our Lord was right, and "As the days of Noe were, so shall the coming of the Son of man be" (Matt. 24:37), then the coming of the Son of man cannot be much longer delayed. The world is ripe for judgment. The days of Noah did not surpass our times today, in their utter disregard for purity of mind and heart. The historian informs us that the Greeks sank to rise no more when "the extent of their shamelessness was sufficiently shown by the fact that Phyrne, at the festival of Poseidon in Eleusis, appeared as Aphrodite Anadyomene, and having laid aside her garments and unloosed her hair, descended into the sea before the eyes of applauding Greece." The difference is that Greece had but one Phyrne. We have so many that they shove us off our sidewalks. The Phyrne of old was decent enough to blush and descend into the sea when she had nothing on. Our Phyrnes today forget to descend into the sea! They much prefer to parade crowded highways, and to flaunt their flesh in the eyes of men who find it difficult enough without such sights, to maintain the purity of mind and heart for which some of them, at least, long. Honest men will candidly tell you that these modern Aphrodites are not helping them in their fight to think cleanly. In Chicago, only last Tuesday, Superior (God save the mark!) Judge David was on the bench when a dancing girl was brought before him for dancing at one of the Exposition exhibits with only two fans in her hand to distinguish her from Mother Eve. The Judge said: "There is no harm and certainly no injury to public morals when the human body is exposed. . . . Some people would want to put pants on a horse. . . . There is no harm in exposing the human body. It is a beautiful work of nature. Evil to whom evils think. . . . You know we have a lot of boobs in this country." Well, beyond all shadow of doubt, this same Judge would take the position that it matters not what use you may want to make of the human body. All is right. It's nobody's business but your own. "Evil to whom evil thinks."

Unfortunately for the opinion of this Judge who would have us return to the naked estate of African savages, the emphatic testimony of six thousands years of human history is against him, and Almighty God made no mistake when he made clothing for Adam and Eve immediately after they came to a "knowledge of good and evil"—a knowledge which some judges do not seem to possess. Amazingly ignorant is that man who, no matter what his boast of intellectualism may be, does not know that no civilization has ever survived a return to barbarism when womanhood lost her modesty, and consequently, her chastity. It is for the Brethren churches to remain unmoved by the sneers of men who have been placed in high seats by a generation that seems to have lost its moral sense. It is for the Brethren churches to refuse the wisdom of mockers who fear no God and fashion their own codes of morals. It is for the Brethren churches to fear the God of heaven, who gave command "that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety" (I Tim. 2:9). It is for all Brethren ministers at least, who still profess to walk in the light of God's eternal Word, to solemnly protest in the name of God and public decency against these modern Sodomites who "call evil good, and good evil, that put darkness for light and light for darkness" (Isa. 5:20), and thereby hasten a whole generation forward to the day when the holy God above us shall pour forth his judgments upon those who have trampled his righteous laws beneath their dirty feet!

The Liquor Problem

The fearful and widespread moral apostasy of our day is again evidenced by the determination of the populace to enthrone again in our nation the most tyrannical and foulest monarch who ever enslaved the souls of men—King Alcohol. One of the most absolute proofs that any student of "the sure word of prophecy" can have that we are at the nightfall of our age is in the tremendous backward sweep of the world's greatest so-called "Christian nation." We refer to the matter of America's return to the most immoral traffic that ever cursed God's earth. Verily, "It is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire." Jeremiah wept over Judah as he beheld her sinking deeper and deeper into the mire of licentiousness. In the hour of deepest distress, God came to his project and said: "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; AND MY PEOPLE LOVE TO HAVE IT SO." Is it not so today? But the pertinent question of God to the people of Judah then, may still be in order today: "What will ye do in the end thereof?" (Jer. 5:31). Don't forget this, O America, that it is as true of nation as of individual: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. God is not mocked. He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption" (Gal. 6:7, 8). All human history affirms that God's "woe" stands: "Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink! Which justify the wicked for reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him" (Isa. 5:22, 23).

But, in an hour like this, when hell seems to have all but won a complete victory over the forces of righteousness in our land, it is not for us to throw down our arms in ignominious surrender. It is for us to tighten our belts and "hold the fort" with the full assurance that soon our help shall come from God! The victory will at last be his! The hour is coming when, though all the nations of the earth unite under the banners of hell, Jesus Christ shall conquer! After the smoke of Armageddon shall roll away from that last battlefield, then "shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings" (Mal. 4:2), and "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. 11:9). When he shall come, may he not find us as captives who basely surrendered to the enemy when the battle seemed to go against us.

We recommend, therefore, that our Church in this District shall not await the destruction of the Eighteenth Amendment by the foes of civic and moral righteousness for action, but that we shall immediately, in every one of our churches, and in every one of our Bible schools, begin continually to teach our children the physical, the moral and the spiritual dangers—yea, let them understand all the horrors—of alcoholic slavery. One of our pastors reports that "some" of his "young people are expressing to their parents a desire to taste beer to see what it tastes like." With the coming repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, the brewers will immediately begin to educate the generation that has grown up under the Eighteenth Amendment to acquire the taste for rum. This will be necessary to their business, even as it was necessary for the tobacco dealers. Their awful lying propaganda will soon begin. It is for us to begin immediately to prepare our youth to stand against it—to educate them to the horrible results which follow in the waks of the general use of rum. We shall not be able to save all, but we shall save some. One soul saved outweighs in value the whole world on which we stand! God can swing a world off his hand with his Word. But it took the Cross to redeem a soul! O America! America! What matters it if you deceive yourself into the thought that you have lessened a bit your burden of taxation by legalizing rum, if your sons and daughters come staggering home at night, physical, moral, and spiritual wrecks? God help America!

A Call to Denominational Loyalty

Some of our pastors complain of a lack of real loyalty to the Church on the part of certain members. We suggest that during the coming year, all pastors shall stress to a fuller extent, not denominational narrowness, but denominational loyalty. If the Brethren Church, in her teaching and her practice, is not more loyal to Jesus Christ and to his revealed Word than any other denomination, then it behooves the disciple of Christ, out of sheer loyalty to him, to make diligent search for the church which exceeds in loyalty to him and to his Word, and to join himself to that church. But, if he believes the Brethren Church to be the more loyal, then to it he should surrender himself with a fervor of loyalty, love and devotion second only to that which he renders unto Christ, the Head of the Church. The Church is the instrument through which the cause of Christ is presented to the world for which he died. "Christ loved the Church and gave himself for it." Dare we do less? If the Brethren Church with its teaching has brought a blessing into your life, you should prove your gratitude by renewed loyalty to it, and to the institutions which make its continuance possible.

We suggest, first of all, that no year shall be allowed to pass without a clear presentation from the pulpit of the distinctive teachings of the Church, as we believe those teachings to be the teachings of the Scriptures of God. The plea of the Brethren Church is a winning plea. Preach it, and preach it, and preach it! Let us rid ourselves of the false notion that the fullness of the gospel of Christ contains truths and practices which are unpopular with real saints. Some pastors in our denomination have thought that the rite of feet-washing is a hindrance to our denominational progress. We readily see how that may be true if its real spiritual message is not presented, or if it is not properly and decently practiced. But, if its real meaning is made known in connection with its proper performance, we hold that no ordinance of the Church more thoroughly grips the hearts of true believers, and brings to them so great a joy, in the blessed assurance that they are absolutely safe through the continual mediatorial work of an Advocate who never slumbers or sleeps!

We have just read a remarkable, though brief, article by Edgar E. H. King, in the well-known magazine, "The Dayn," London, on the subject of "The Washings of John XIII." We quote in part:

"He that is bathed (Greek, 'bodily washed') needeth not save to wash (Greek, 'partial washing') his feet, but is clean every whit" (John 13:10). Herein we see the foundation upon which the superstructure of the passage is erected. This lovely Scripture figure shows us a man wholly bathed but footsoiled, and declares that perfect cleanliness is possible again by a foot-bath. . . . Now, bathing undoubtedly refers to baptism by immersion. In Scripture the word 'bathed' is used to signify baptism (Heb. 10:22), especially in Acts 22:16, wherein a form of this verb clearly refers to the rite.

Since its root meaning is 'bodily washed' and the Holy Spirit has used it to signify baptism, it follows that when our Lord said "He that is bathed," he referred to baptism by immersion which the disciples had undergone.

If there is a literal aspect to the bathing, there must be also a literal aspect to the foot washing, for the one is added to the other as the means of keeping clean the foot of the once wholly bathed body. If the bathing of baptism be a rite, the subsequent foot washing must also be a rite. Since part of our Sanctification is set forth in our baptismal washing, it is logical to see in this verse a reference to literal feet washing, setting forth the cleansing of the stain of post-baptismal sin from the foot of the saint, thereby making him wholly clean.

Apparently, there are others besides the Brethren who are beginning to see the loveliness and the lovingness of Christ in this beautiful picture, when the Lord of heaven and earth knelt to wash the feet of the humble fishermen of Galilee!

In speaking of our denominational loyalty, it should be said that it demands a renewed allegiance to our various denominational institutions, without which we would soon cease to exist. Ashland College, with its splendid Seminary, deserves the full measure of support through our prayers, our money and our children. At its last Board meeting, Ashland College took an unqualified position as to the great fundamentals. No College in America can boast of a stronger Scriptural position. God will prosper Ashland College, a vital part of the body of Christ, the Church.

Our publishing interests likewise form a vital part in our denominational relation to the body of Christ. They, too, call for increased prayer and support. The same can be said of every branch of our church work. All may not be what they should be—what they might be! But all are a part of the body. If any part of the body is unwell, then the whole body is affected and we need to seek for its healing. Destructive, and sometimes unjust, criticism will get us nowhere. Perfect or not perfect, as long as we can find no better group, let us be absolutely loyal to the best representative of the body of Christ that we know!

A Bit of History

It was two hundred and twenty-five years ago (if we only knew the exact date, we might find that even this day is the exact anniversary, for it was midsummer in the year 1808) since eight pious souls in Germany joined in solemn covenant before God that they would forsake the world and all its follies, and follow their divine Master in all that he commanded, whether the world smiled or frowned upon their simple ways. Those eight pious souls on the early morning of that day were buried in the River Eider by the form of baptism which, through a prayerful study of the Scriptures alone, they had come to believe was the apostolic form—immersion. On that day, the Brethren Church began to be. Twenty-five years ago at the Bi-Centennial of the birth of the Brethren into the sisterhood of denominations, a great celebration of the event was held in the famous old first Church in America, in Germantown, Pennsylvania. Back of this church, the dust of Alexander Mack, under God the organizer and first baptized member of the Brethren Church, lies in the bosom of Mother Earth. There also sleep many of the patriarchs of the early Church. It was our privilege to write the hymn for that Bi-Centennial celebration. We present the message of that hymn today, to you who are gathered for this Twenty-third Annual Conference of the Brethren Churches of Southern California:

O Lord God, we thank thee for thy glorious church; for thine abiding presence in it; for thy power exercised over it and for the triumph to which thou hast destined it. Thou hast been abundantly merciful unto us in that thou hast permitted us to be a part of that great church, and thus to become identified with thine own self and to enjoy the blessed union of the saints of God. Increase our appreciation of it; intensify our devotion to it; make more constant our loyalty to it and more sacrificial our service for it. And hasten the day when the church militant shall become the church triumphant. Amen.

didn't think what I was doing. I will surely pay the tithe when times get better."

No! No! says God, Not that. NOW, in the midst of the depression, is the time to "Consider your ways" (Vs. 5). Go, get wood "and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it" (Haggai 1:8).

In Haggai's time the people responded and "they came and did work in the house of the Lord of hosts, their God" (Vs. 14). Did God forget? No—not for a single day. "From this day will I bless you" (Ch. 2:15-19).

Ending the Depression

Who can tell how quickly the depression would lift if God's people would bring "all the tithes into the storehouse" (Mal. 3:8) that there might be cash in God's treasury to carry on his work.

There are bugs for the potatoes and worms for the corn; there are beetles for the beans and flies for the cows; there are rats for the corn crib and hawks for the chicks. It is spray and dust and kill and swat. No doubt if all the money wasted upon these pests were placed into the treasury of God's house, he would "rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruit of your ground" (Mal. 3:11).

NOW—right in the midst of the depression is the time to prove God and bring in the tithes and pay up the pastor and increase his salary. The God who blew upon the "much" (Haggai 1:9), can also blow upon the little and make the nine-tenths go farther than the ten-tenths would have gone.

Elijah and the Widow

What a test of faith for the poor widow of Zarephath (1 Kings 17). The depression was on, and it was real. There was her own little son, dying of malnutrition. There was the empty barrel, with scarce a pint of meal and an ounce of oil. On the other hand was Elijah, a man well fed and cared for, having had two square meals every day since the depression began. And here was the difficulty. Elijah was actually asking her to take food from her own family and in the depths of the depression, she was to give it to him.

Would she—dare she do it? How her eyes must have rested upon her starving son as she made the cake and took it to Elijah. God had spoken, and to her simple faith it was for her but to obey him in the dark. She proved God and God opened the windows of heaven and poured meal into the barrel and oil into the cruse. Those same windows are still in heaven and the same God stands ready to throw them open to that person who will bring all the tithes and offerings into the storehouse (Mal. 3:8-10).

Nothing Forgotten Before God

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name." How our hearts should leap for joy at those words of comfort.

Only a few will respond to his entreaties but he will hearken and will remember them, "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him" (Mal. 3:16-17).

May the reader of this article serve his Lord as an obedient child and thus enter into the joy unspeakable and full of glory, and the peace that comes only to those who love and serve him fully. Martinsburg, Pennsylvania.

Philippians

The joy of St. Paul in the Lord Jesus Christ was never better evinced than in the immortal lines to the pious and temperate saints at Philippi. There Lydia, the famous European woman convert and seller of purple, lived; there the jailer, once frightened beyond measure, sought the aid of the singing Silas and Paul in his own well-protected jail; there too lived, as some think, the great physician-historian, Dr. Luke. They all remembered the apostle of righteousness and sent him a gift while he was incarcerated in a Roman dungeon. That that remembrance was amply appreciated the Philippians letter amply attests.

The City of Philippi

In the land of Macedonia, Philippi was the chief city of the western territory. Its name took its rise from the famous king of Macedon, Philip, who beautified it greatly and transformed it into a Roman colony. It was near here that the famous battles between Julius Caesar and Pompey the Great were fought; and that between Brutus and Cassius on one side, and Augustus and Antony on the other. However, Christians today remember the city not because of its great warriors, strategic location, etc., but rather because Paul once preached Christ there and then later wrote an undying epistle to them in the year of 62-63 A. D.

The Letter Itself

The Psalmist (126:5) once penned, "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." If ever that text, arising out of the bleak and barren ground of the Captivity, had meaning to any Christian, Paul as a man and a saint, had a right to claim it. He persuaded men to accept the Lord Jesus Christ "with tears." Tears may signify weakness in multitudes of instances, but the tears of St. Paul, like those of Jesus, are tears of strength and tears of joy. The Philippian letter is a pean of praise and a song of joy resulting from the sweet and reasonable peace of God in the soul. Paul and Silas sang in a Philippian prison. That was a duet. Paul sang a song of joy—alone in a Roman cell—when he wrote the Philippian epistle.

The Bishop of Durham felt that this epistle was "one of the fairest and dearest regions of the book of God." It is free from argument and rebuke; problems of church administration and moral derelictions are quite noticeably absent; thanksgiving and joy abound in every section. Dr. A. T. Pierson, than whom it is difficult to find a more sage and more Biblical popular lecturer on the Word, characterized the Philippian writing as "The Disciple's Balance Sheet," having in mind the compensations and renunciations of a follower of Christ. St. Paul's balance sheet evinced great renunciations and many, many compensations.

Salient Points

It is interesting to note that the author does not refer to the Old Testament Scriptures in his epistle. This was a Gentile church, having no need of instruction perhaps of the relationship between law and grace. Consequently the present tense of joy and rejoicing is in evidence. Both these words are found in every chapter. (1:4, 18, 25, 26; 2:2, 16, 18; 3:1, 3; 4:1, 4, 10). The word "mind" appears in 1:27; 2:2, 3, 5; 3:15, 19; 4:2, 7. The Spirit is mentioned significantly.

1. Supply of the Spirit 1:19.
2. Fellowship of the Spirit. 2:1.
3. Worship by the Spirit. 3:3.

Outlines

It is difficult to outline a love letter. Matters pertaining to the affections and the language of the heart forbid analysis in a sense. The Philippian letter is no exception. Paul reveals his love for Christ and is over-joyed in his love. That explains the sudden bursts of exultation and the worship of the Beloved. But, in spite of this, there is a more or less visible outline buried beneath the surface of its contents. Various have scholars tried to analyze it and a sample of their efforts is appended here:

1. Christ Our Life—The Believer's Life. Chap. 1.
 2. Christ Our Mind—The Believer's Pattern. Chap. 2.
 3. Christ Our Goal—The Believer's Object. Chap. 3.
 4. Christ Our Suffering—The Believer's Strength. Chap. 4.
- Or we may submit Dr. Moorehead's "four main principles":
1. The Secret of a Christian Life, viz., Christ (1:21).
 2. The Prime Element of That Life, viz., The Mind of Christ (2:5).
 3. The Aim and Object of that Life, viz., Christlikeness (3:10).
 4. The Motive-Power of The Life, viz., Christ's Strength (4:13).

Again, there is the expository analysis of Dr. G. Campbell Morgan:

1. Introduction (1:1-2).
2. Experience (1:3-26).
3. Exposition (1:27-4:1).
4. Exhortation (4:2-20).
5. Conclusion (4:21-23).

The Major Teaching

The major teaching of the Philippian epistle is wrapped up in one word name, Rejoice. But before the Christian has any reason whatsoever for rejoicing he must have "the mind of Christ." As Christ "emptied himself" so must the Christian empty himself, not of any glory of God, as did Christ, but of pride and selfishness. The Christian is to be sincere and void of offense; to be blameless and harmless; to be alive in Christ; to develop in the life of the ages; to rejoice in the Lord; to forbear towards all men; to pray; to live.

The Church of Christ will be authoritative in her work providing she conforms to the mind of Christ. If she fails to conform, as she so often does, she may expect failure. The mind of Christ is love; so should the Christian's be; the consciousness of Christ is full of joy; so should the Christian's be; the expression of Christ's mind resulted in his own sacrifice on the cruel tree; our Christian thinking and living should be sacrificial thinking and sacrificial living, in order that our Christ may become Master of countless thousands of sinful men. We may aid him in the work, if our hearts keep right. That way lies joy.

St. Bernard of Clairvaux, one of the truly great men of the twelfth century, wrote in Latin a great poem concerning joy in Christ. To it he gave the title "Jesus Thou Joy of Loving Hearts." It carries the message of the Philippian letter.

"Jesus, thou joy of loving hearts,
Thou Fount of light, thou Light of men,
From the best bliss that earth imparts,
We turn-unfilled to thee again.

Thy truth unchanged hath ever stood;
Thou savest those who on thee call;
To them that seek thee, thou art good,
To them that find thee, all in all.

We taste thee, O thou living Bread,
And long to feast upon thee still;
We drink of thee the Fountain head,
And thirst, our souls from thee to fill.

Our restless spirits yearn for thee,
Where'er our changeful lot is cast;
Glad, when thy gracious smile we see,
Blest, when our faith can hold thee fast.

O Jesus, ever with us stay;
Make all our moments calm and bright;
Chase the dark night of sin away;
Shed o'er the world thy holy light.

Since thou art the present portion of thy people, Lord Jesus, favor us this year with such a sense of thy preciousness that from its first day to its last we may rejoice and be glad in thee!—Charles H. Spurgeon,

The Jew and His Destiny

I have just finished reading in a very few hours, a small book with the title of this sketch. It is most interesting. Every teacher of our Sunday schools should read it before the next two Quarters during which the lessons are entirely from the book of Matthew, a kingdom book which tells the story of the Kingdom and the King of the Jews.

Some of the chapter headings are, The Jewish Question, Israel's Title to Palestine, The Jew a Miracle, The Mission of the Jews, Israel Coming to the Front, The Jew, God's Barometer, and others. The book is brief but to the point and easily understood. Any one puzzled with interpretations of Matthew 24 and 25 or Romans 9, 10, 11, will find help and light in this illuminating booklet. It throws much light on the unfulfilled prophecies of the Bible on the subjects of the Jew, the Kingdom and the throne of David.

It is published by permission, by the Union Gospel Press of Cleveland, Ohio, and may be ordered there or at the author, E. H. Mosley, Gainesville, Texas, at 35c the copy in heavy paper cover.

Course: Old Testament Studies—Burrroughs.

For the benefit of the readers of this page, it should be suggested that these courses began for the most part and were completed during the present year. In 1932, many classes also were in session and work was completed regularly in all cases.

Already the response to the renewed Teacher Training work of this present year has been more than that of other years up until the present time. An enlarged Teacher Training course will make its appearance on this page soon. It is to be hoped that more of our progressive churches will take advantage of the work that is offered through our National Sunday School Association from year to year.

It is sufficient to say that the above mentioned churches, pastors, teachers, and students were greatly benefited by the work which was accomplished in the name of the Sunday school in their respective communities. Trained teachers know how to teach and trained pastors know how to teach trained teachers. The future of the Brethren Church in many places rests definitely upon competent leadership. Our Teacher Training program aims to develop such.

Boyhood Memories

By R. R. Teeter

Of all the memories lingering still
Of boyhood life in wood and hill,
The one I now most keenly feel
Is that old stone-bruise on my heel.

The city streets are now concrete,
And seldom trod by boys' bare feet;
But, yet in mind I often feel
That old, old stone-bruise on my heel.

Education aids us in finding out how little we know.

We may fret because life seems uphill, but it does not pay unless it is on the upgrade.

PAUL IN ANTIOCH

Lesson Text: Acts 11:19-30; 12:25. Golden Text: Romans 1:16

Paul Teaching in Antioch. Acts 11:19-30

Sometime between the conversion of Saul of Tarsus and the events of the present lesson this man became the Apostle Paul. And after his return from his "retreat" in Arabia, he became most zealous and active in the work of spreading the gospel.

The people needed to be taught "the way of life", and apparently there was no one at that time better fitted to give them this teaching than Paul, aided by Barnabas. So for a whole year they remained with the people who were first called Christians at Antioch.

TUESDAY

Persecution Overruled. Philippians 1:12-21

Before his conversion to Jesus Christ, Paul thought he was doing God service when he persecuted the followers of the lowly Nazarene, but now he finds himself subject to similar persecution. But here he learns that even persecution for Christ's sake may be overruled to the glory of God. And in the case of Paul it was evidently the case, for many of the brethren in the Lord, "waxing confident in his bonds became much more bold to "speak the word without fear."

Receiving the Gospel. Thessalonians 1:1-10

The manifestations of the gospel in the lives of any group of people are largely dependent upon the manner in which that gospel has been received.

In the case of the church of the Thessalonians, their readiness to accept the teaching of Paul concerning the gospel of Jesus, and their quickly turning from idols to the worship of the true God, was of the greatest aid to Paul's ministry. So much so that he says wherever their faith has been made known it was unnecessary for him to speak anything.

THURSDAY

No Respector of Persons. Acts 10:34-43

Cornelius was a devout man, but without Christ he was not a saved man. But, because of his prayers and his alms, he received special notice from God and the way of salvation was opened to him through the vision in which he was instructed to send for Peter.

When Peter arrived, after being advised of the Lord to do so, and after he had listened to the story of Cornelius' vision, he immediately declared "I perceive that God is no respector of persons."

Salvation is for all men, Gentile as well as for Jew.

FRIDAY

A Prophet's Commission. 7:14-17

A true servant of God can not consider his own convenience when a task is laid upon him.

Some prophets may not take their commission seriously; but they can not be considered true to their calling unless they give strict obedience to the word of the Lord.

When his commission was given to Amos some of the people advised him to go elsewhere to give forth his message. They did not want to hear the truth; but Amos was a true prophet and he could not be turned aside. Consequently an unpopular truth was spoken to the people who were disobedient to God's law.

SATURDAY

The Gospel Message. Romans 10:1-10

All sorts of gospels may be preached to a sinful people with the idea of finding salvation in some more acceptable manner than that provided in the Book of God, but here is the saving gospel—"If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

Why is this so? "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

SUNDAY

The New Man. Colossians 3:12-17

Some years ago, while the writer was engaged in an evangelistic meeting in a country church in a mid-western state, he undertook to persuade a young farmer and stock buyer to become a Christian. The alibi of the young man was that in his dealings in business with many people he could not see enough difference between a man who was a professed Christian and one who made no profession.

Should such a change take place as Paul suggests in the reading for today, and the "old man" should become a thing of the past, and the characteristics of the "new man" become a living force in the life there would be no room for an alibi such as the young man offered.

An Open Letter to the Endeavorers

Canton, Ohio, October 2, 1933.

Dear Endeavorers:

Once more we are coming to you with information regarding Brethren National C. E. Union plans. You will find herewith the goals which should help you in making plans for this new year, and thus be fulfilling the plans of The International, as well as the Denominational program.

We would suggest that you paste the goal sheet that was sent you on a cardboard, so as to make it attractive, and place it in a conspicuous place in your C. E. room. As your society works out these suggested plans, place a red star after that particular goal, and see how many stars you will have by next Conference.

The C. E. Board decided in its meeting at Winona, to set a goal before our Endeavorers, which should help to make it possible for an offering of at least $500.00 from the local societies this year, to be used for General Evangelistic work among our churches. The goal is this: That each adult member pay fifty cents and every Intermediate and Junior member pay twenty-five cents during the year, for this purpose. Now if you should set this goal before your members AT ONCE, you may be able to send your gift to the National C. E. Secretary during C. E. Week in February. Of course, if you cannot send the cash at that time, you CAN send your pledge and take advantage of the extended time to July 15th to make payment of same. All money received will be used by our Home Mission Board to hold evangelistic meetings where same are badly needed but are a financial impossibility otherwise. Is this not worth while? "He that winneth souls is wise."

We also plan to have a Poster Contest at Winona this year. Each society is to have posters made for their meeting during the year,—send same to Winona (as many as you wish) where they will be displayed, and two awards will be presented to the Societies having the best display. GET YOUR LOCAL ARTISTS BUSY, Endeavorers!

BY ALL MEANS WATCH THE C. E. PAGE IN THE EVANGELIST AND THE ANGELUS for announcements which you need to hear about!

with their common foes in the materialisms of Marx, Lenin and Bertrand Russell. It teaches that all religions must unitedly fight against materialism. But why is materialism so strong in the Orient? It is because Buddhism itself was originally atheistic. Buddhism does not teach love, but individualistic contentment. If the religion of the cross had been well rooted in Japan, there would have been no space left for materialism to come in.

This report is shot through with "liberalism." It attempts to deal with communism, socialism and capitalism, all in the same way, from the "liberal" standpoint. Such a treatment may be admissible if the "liberal" standpoint can solve the world's problems, but while capitalism is chaining many thousands of young men in prison, and producing millions of the unemployed, can we be contented with such mild and lukewarm propositions? Ought we to be so lenient with capitalism? Was it not Christ who said, clearly, "One thing thou lackest!" Having put our hand to the plough, we can not turn back.

In the third place, since this report has forgotten the cross, it still differentiates between "home" and "foreign" missions. But does not Christ belong to all nations? And is not the third internationale of Moscow meanwhile engaged in a great propaganda movement, and promoting a new world revolution? Are not the Catholics in Japan, too, building new schools and trying to spread their variety of propaganda? We who belong to Christ should possess a stronger international spirit, and should give ourselves to the propagation of the Christ-spirit, forgetting the distinction between "home" and "foreign." It is deplorable that Christian propaganda has been based on capitalism. "In such and such a country, so much money has been used, and such results have followed; and in this other country, so much capital was used, and such results obtained." It is a mistake to reckon the results of evangelism in capitalistic terms.

Forsaking the Pioneering Spirit

When the cross-revolution spirit slackens, we forget the many unoccupied fields, and lose zeal for evangelism. We must again awaken to Christian internationalism, forgetting skin colors, nationalities and language differentiation. Marx avers that to the proletariat there are no national barriers; and certainly there should be no national boundaries to the Christianity of the cross.

In the fourth place, this book seems to forget the necessity for pioneering in unoccupied territories. There is nothing more foolish than evangelism if we begin to reckon it in money terms, though even at that, the "foolishness of preaching" is more economical than the folly of war! Even in Japan, but few places are being reached as yet. Only five per cent of the eleven thousand villages are even touched by evangelism; and no one has yet reached the fishing villages and most of the laboring class. In the face of such conditions, "Rethinking Missions," with its call to retrenchment, may have some unexpected value as a negative stimulus. To arouse us again to evangelize even unto death! We must work harder to establish the Kingdom of God for which Christ died.

"There are many good religions in other countries; Christianity is also good; but let Christian missionaries return home as soon as possible"—when they say that, it tastes

Missions Without the Cross

By Toyohiko Kagawa

(Some of our readers continue to have questions regarding the real attitude toward missions taken by Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry and Appraisal Commission. It is evident that people are doing some thinking along this line, and it seems to us that the reaction is likely to be wholesome in that Christian men and women will be made to realize that the very cause of Christ is at stake and will rally to its support all the more courageously because of this propaganda against aggressive evangelism in foreign lands. This is the more likely to be the result if the rank and file of the Christian forces are made to understand the real attitude of the Appraisal Commission and the character of their recommendations. The following keen criticism by the great Japanese evangelist is one of the most illuminating brief reviews of "Rethinking Missions" we have read, and while it has been several months since it was first published in The Christian Century (this liberal magazine takes an opposing attitude to Mr. Kagawa's however) and have been several times republished in denominational papers, it will be new to the great bulk of our readers. We believe it will help answer some questions for some of our readers who have been reading the propaganda releases being continually sent out by the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry, financed by John D. Rockefeller, Jr.—EDITOR.)

Can Christianity exist without the cross? "Rethinking Missions" tries to interpret to us a Christ without the cross, as Christianity. From its first page to the last I failed to discover the word "cross" in this book. It is this lack of the cross which constitutes its weakness. The book is not founded on the motivation of the cross, but on economic motives. This is evident at the very beginning of the introduction, where the writers speak of the desire for retrenchment because of economic reasons. This lack of the cross is the principal reason why I am disappointed in this report. "Thy kingdom come" is indeed quoted frequently as the fundamental purpose of foreign missions, but nothing is said about the inevitability of paying the price of the cross in order to bring in the Kingdom of God.

There are ten points under which I have listed my dissatisfactions regarding this report.

Lack of a Sense of Commission

In the first place, this report has forgotten that the starting point of missions is a commission from God. No evangelism is possible merely from the standpoint of comparative religions or of the evolutionary theory of civilization. It was not "comparative religions" for which Elijah and Elisha suffered! Where can the motive for foreign missions be found, and how can energy for it be expected to well up and overflow, except as proceeding from a sense of absolute commission from God? There would have been no need for Christ to be crucified, merely to propagate humanism! The most deplorable part of this report is its first eighty pages. If these had been left out, we might have read the rest with more earnestness. After reading this part of the book on general principles, will be kindled with evangelistic enthusiasm to go out as foreign missionaries.

There are indeed many religions in the Orient, but is there any that clearly teaches that God loves humanity with the love of the cross? Buddhism propounds abstract principles, but it failed to wipe away my tears. To this day Buddhism compromises with the system of public prostitution in Japan. Shintoism and militarism, and Brahmanism and superstition, are closely associated. I do not wish to attack any other religions, but it is useless to be too lenient with them. Man will not be saved thus.

Loss of the Militant Spirit

Again, what a lack of militant spirit! This book seems to have forgotten that the religion of Jesus was the religion that drove out the money-changers and the sellers of sheep and cows from the temple. If Jesus had followed the methods taught in this book, he would probably not have been crucified. This book leaves the impression that Buddhism, Mohammedanism and Brahmanism, equally with Christianity, are at odds like salt which has lost its savor, like cider without a stick in it! One wonders why the missionaries ever came out in the first place! Mere survey-missionaries might be ready to return soon, but missionaries who came to preach the cross should endure unto death.

A Gospel Without Repentance

This report has forgotten the gospel of repentance. One of the things that astonishes me in this book is that the foreign missionaries are urged to make connections with the European and American business men in the Orient. There may of course be exceptional cases, but, in general, Western commercial men in the Orient have been a great hindrance to the Christian movement. William Carey could not enter India because the business men prevented his doing so; and Christianity could not make headway in India at that time because the policy of the East India trading company had aroused the anger of the Indian people. Christianity fails to spread in China today because the Chinese can not forget the British opium war and British opium traders. In general, the main reason why Christianity makes little progress in the Orient is that the business men, and the governments of the countries from which the missionaries come, are acting in direct opposition to the teachings of Christ.

The Asiatic races can not forget the long history of Oriental invasions on the part of the white races. No matter how lavishly schools may be built and philanthropies conducted, the Orientals can not believe from the bottom of their hearts in the religion of those who carry the sword in one hand and the Bible in the other. The people of that vicinity never forget that Singapore and Hongkong are supported by the proceeds of the sales of opium. This fact is known to the missionaries, and that is why they fear the men of commerce. It is deplorable that this report devotes not one page to this burning subject.

The book does not demand repentance. To be sure, if Christianity is indeed the innocuous thing this book represents it to be, perhaps there is no need for repentance. But the fact is that both the Orient and the Occident do need to repent. Jonah fled from the call to preach repentance to Nineveh. And shall we Christians of the twentieth century seek to escape the necessity for preaching repentance to our materialistic civilization?

Disregard of the Church

In the sixth place, I am dissatisfied with the place this book gives to the church. The idea of "Christian fellowship" is good, but why not call that "the church"? I believe we must strive after the unity implied in Christ's command to Peter in Matt. 16:18. The weakness of the Christian movement today is because the liberals are not unified among themselves. Although this report teaches humanism and humanitarianism and church unity, forgetting creeds and denominations, why does it go on to say that it is all right to have separate fellowships outside the church? That is inconsistent. Those who have experienced the Christ-love of the cross ought to gather themselves into one church like the ancient catholic one, though there may well exist various brotherhoods within the one catholic organization.

In the seventh place, this book lacks idealism. It lacks a flaming enthusiasm to Christianize the whole world. Rather the trend is toward retrenchment, except in the rural districts. But if money is lacking now, there are many ways to work without it. Russia carried out a five year plan without money, and now is preparing to launch a second five year plan. A plan of world evangelization must inevitably involve changes; but it is against the purpose of Christ to retrench! If there is no money to support missionaries, let us get together and start many gospel schools and thus create lay leaders, and continue doing so for some scores of years. There is need now to set up such aggressive constructive planning. Why not start occupational evangelism on a world-wide scale? When even the Rotary Club has an occupational fraternity as wide as the world, why can not those who belong to Christ achieve such constructive planning?

Lack of a Christian Economic Policy

In the eighth place, this book has unfortunately no vision of the Christianizing of the economics of the Oriental countries. We are aware, both in China and in Japan, that there is no way to save the villages and the laboring class except through the cooperatives. And we believe that the ideal of Christian love can be realized in the economic realm only through these cooperatives. If the Christians of the world will engage in world-wide cooperative movements, and plan international trade through the cooperatives, and also educational cooperatives and mutual aid cooperatives, war will cease to exist. Not only that, but even the communistic movement will be powerless in the face of such a cooperative Christian movement. The strength of the Marxism, Leninism and Bertrand-Russellism of today is derived from the antireligionism aroused by the economic struggle for existence. Therefore only through the economic readjustment afforded by the cooperatives shall we be able successfully to combat and overcome such isms. It is futile to compromise with Buddhism and Shintoism while failing to realize these facts.

In the ninth place, this book is very indifferent toward the evangelistic work with which the missionaries are so deeply concerned. Its writers paid much attention to academic education, but seem to have forgotten that evangelism is an important variety of social adult education and of religious education. Academic education alone is not the whole of education. Tent meetings, street preaching, etc., are also social education. Foolish as this sort of evangelism may appear, it has wonderful results in the Orient. In India there may be some who object to it, but it was the method of Jesus Christ, and one of the ways by which Christianity spread into all the world.

In the tenth place, this book does not advise us to do mission work through the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Jesus Christ sent out his seventy disciples to evangelize without purse or scrip, without even extra sandals. They believed in the guidance of the Holy Spirit. In their train followed the Moravian missionaries. The Williams missionary party, too, in the time of the Napoleonic wars, left London for the South Seas on the same basis. If money be not forthcoming, then money is not needed! Have we not dedicated our very lives to Christ?

Needed: A Strategy of Attack

We do not want to make the business of rethinking missions a thinking in terms of retrenchment; but rather, a thinking out of a new strategy of attack on the world-wide field. When there ceases to be money in America, America may cease to send out its missionaries. Nevertheless there must remain many young people in America who desire to dedicate their lives to missions, without receiving such high salaries as are paid now.

I am grieved to find, on reading this report, that it is written economically rather than religiously. It does not inspire me. And evangelism is impossible without inspiration. Those who wish to retreat after reading this book had better do so; but let those others who have been led by the Holy Spirit continue to cross the Pacific, bearing the cross of Jesus. The Kingdom of God movement in Japan is not yet completed. The harvest is plenteous but the laborers are few. I am still rising for prayer at midnight. This present age is evil. The age of Nero was also evil. But Christ's teachings at length conquered the Roman Empire. Machine civilization is deplorable. But I am convinced that the good news of love through the cross of Jesus will lead the Orient and the whole world into the light.

Now, though I have spoken thus frankly, I am not forgetting the gratitude due to these commissions, which have prepared this report. Aside from its first eighty pages, there are many things for us to learn from this book. I agree with its emphasis on cooperation, on community consciousness, and on the necessity of establishing rural churches. But I deplore the impression left, after reading the book, that it lacks a supernatural basis. Can those who think of continuing the movement started in the Book of Acts, attempt to do so without the help of the Holy Spirit?

My brothers, here we meet,
With joy each other greet,
On sacred ground;
Hither our fathers came,
Hither from sword and flame,
Hither in Freedom's name,
Thy refuge found.

Two hundred years ago,
They lived that men might know
The ancient faith;
Holy in thought and deed,
Turning from man-made creed
To do, they all agreed
Whate'er God saith.

God's Word is still the Rock,
Withstanding ev'ry shock
Of earth or hell;
Zion built there is strong,
And tho she suffer long,
She'll shout the victor's song,
Where her tears fell.

O Church, beloved of God;
Stand where thy fathers trod,—
Pledge heart and hand:
We'll follow in their train,
Shunning all earthly stain,
Until our King shall reign
O'er ev'ry land.

Submission

By Arthur R. Baer

Master, I thy cross have taken,
I would learn to bear my load;
But I must confess I'm shaken
When I see how dark the road.

Dark foreboding thoughts assail me,
Strive to crowd me from thy side.
Spirit come, I long to feel thee
Ever near, just by my side.

Test me, try me, leave me never;
Purge from me all sin and dross,
So that I may serve thee ever
And I'll gladly bear my cross.

Master come and calm my spirit,
Make my heart and soul be glad.
By my life I claim no merit,
But my weary soul is sad.

Sad, because my faith was shaken,
As my body maimed and sore
Hid as clouds my heavenly vision.
Drive them back,—I'll love thee more.—

Be still sad heart, just follow me.
Dost thou forget! I've trod this road.

I have promised ne'er to leave thee,
And I'll carry all the load.

While troubles press and fears assail,
The cross seems more than thou canst stand;

Fear not, but trust, thou shalt prevail;
Supported by my loving hand.

Comfort, strength, are mine to give thee,
And to thee they're freely given.
Just be patient; love and serve me,
Darkest clouds by me are riven.

Dost thou wonder why the suffering?
Knowest thou not why gold's refined?

Ne'er was brought such priceless off'ring,
As a will that is lost in mine.

The Power of the Gospel

By J. L. Bowman

The power of the gospel no tongue can describe,
Its wonders can never be told.
It transforms the vilest whom sin has most marred—

Makes him fit for the city of gold.
It cleanses the heart though blackened by sin,
Calms the fears that once troubled the soul,

Puts a song in his mouth and praise on his lips
To the God who thus made him whole.

His feet now find a sure resting place, Though long this old earth he had trod.

He never knew rest and he never found peace
Till his soul found its rest in the Lord.

The winds may now rage and trials may come—
Unmoved he stands in the storm.

His feelings may now be stirred to the depths
But he is free from all fear and alarm.

He now has a place where he safely abides,
A song for the darkness of night.

And if HE call e'er the dawn should return,
To his Lord would his soul take its flight.

"Then I Shall Know"

By Mildred Michael

If I can wear, each passing day,
Before my fellowmen,
A face that's wreathed in smiles gay,
And frowns forever ban.

If I can speak in accents kind,
Unto the passing throng
And, trusting in thy grace divine
Some wanderer lead home.

If I can sing in terms of praise
The deeds of all mankind,
The flag of Truth forever raise,
False pride forever blind.

If I can do some kindly act
For either friend or foe,
Nor place for them a stumbling block
But help them onward go.

If, evil speak not of another,
Believe not, nor repeat,
But stoop to help a fallen brother
To rise again upon his feet.

If I can live the common life,
Nor seek for wealth nor fame,
Win over sin and over strife,
Play fair what'er the game.

If I can live life fair and square
So when each day is done I've helped someone, sowemay, somewhere,
Life's battles to have won.

If I can graciously forgive
My brother, sister, friend,
And guard my words and deeds, and live
So I shall not offend.

If all the time and everywhere
I truly follow thee,
Then I can kneel in evening prayer
With conscience clean and free.

And I shall know, Oh, Christ Divine,
Love, peace, beyond my ken,
For thou art mine and I am thine,
Blest Savior of all men.

WHAT'S PROGRESS? (Matthew 6:33) By H. A. Gossard

A poetical vein suggested by the press and radio concerning "A Century of Progress", now staged in Chicago.

Could one go back, and by remote control,
Bring up to now all action of the past,

And throw it on the screen, as one vast whole,
Before the human race, as Judge,
at last,

Could it, like God,—if so, it understood—Recount each act performed and call it good?

'Tis true that man has made some noble gains;
But o'er dark turbid streams he missed the fords:

(For, somehow after all, there yet remains
The record of his deeds)—for man, records!

And as he blunders on, he oft will find
The goal he sought ahead, still lies behind.

So thus man has sought out,—e'en to his hurt,
Things which, instead of God, he claims to love;

And in his consecration to the dirt,
He quite forgets there's undressed gold above.

Thus bowed to Earth alone, thruout an age,
At last he barbers for an Earthen Cage.

The road to Progress runs thru every age;

'Twas made and mapped for man
by One who knew
That man should have a guide at every stage,

Lest he might stray to miry paths,
—whence few,
Of many who have gone, shall e'er
return—

The Mount's too far,—when souls in valleys burn!

God said, "Be fruitful, and subdue the Earth.

If ye lack wisdom, ask, and I will give;

As to your needs, ye shall not know a death;

My Image on your souls shall make you live.

Your PROGRESS ever rests within My WILL.

Forget, forsake, depart,—all else is ill!"

The way to actual Progress never lies In what man oft conceives its course to be,—

He waits for TIME, and swiftly past it flies;
HOPE'S empty future brings ETER-NITY.—
No, Progress never comes by hopeless chance;
It trails our steps as we to'ard God advance!

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

LANARK, ILLINOIS

I might talk a lot and say little, but I'm glad to make this report. I think I should write under the text: Romans 14:23,—“Whatever is not of faith is sin.” We Do Our Part! That's the Christian Code. And since none can please God without faith, no work can be Christian without it. . . . Yes, “Faith is the victory that overcomes the world.”

Well, as a congregation we still believe God lives, for we see the evidence of his existence too plainly to believe otherwise. We are still keeping our heads above water, and apparently almost forgot Romans 14: over the waves through which we came to victory; however we have had some hard battles in which we nearly met defeat—because, we were endeavoring to win through temporal aid alone in too many attacks, and apparently almost forgot Romans 14: 23. Now that we have rediscovered ourselves, we are turning our faces to the Light, marching on in the hope of victory over the circumstances which had temporarily turned us into the night.

Each department of the church and Bible school is functioning normally. Our Christian Endeavor has gone through a wonderful summer, not only in attendance, but in interest and real accomplishment as well. During vacation months most of the city churches and one nearby rural church joined forces; featuring the sessions with special programs—such as debates, etc., with Christian Endeavorers of other towns; this created a wholesome and helpful interest in communities.

We soon will have our Bible school rally; we have for our goal, (and we hope you will not think us selfish)—“Each Member Enrolled, Present!” That's simply looking after our OWN; then our OWN look after OTHERS; for, OTHERS, is our motto.

Our pastor's report of the Church Conference was highly encouraging. We now are looking forward with desire to our District conference, which we know will bring us a spiritual uplift.

We recently settled a large problem: that of retaining our pastor; the delay was due to material conditions, on which we waited in vain to grow better, and after all we settled the matter on the basis of determination and Faith. The vote for retention was unanimous.

Unthwarted, and unflinching we hope to have, by the help of God, one of the most effective evangelistic campaigns this community has witnessed for years. The time is as yet not fixed; but prayers and plans are being made. Perhaps the Lord will convert Old Man Depression, and then we won't have him to deliver our excuses to the Lord. The Old Man has served us as a horse, now a number of years,—but we've worn the saddle out; now we'll go bareback or afoot, without excuse, but by Faith.

We rejoice when we hear and read of evangelistic successes throughout the brotherhood. For one, I would that more families in all our churches might avail themselves of the Church Paper. I believe that the encouragement they would receive through reading the splendid contributions and reports, would not only increase their faith in God (and therefore in the work of the Church) but more firmly establish them in it. I firmly think that one cannot be as positive in results, as a Christian, in the church of his choice, if he is uninformed as to the church's activities. Just a little right economy here and there, will bring that information throughout the year.—Let's be more united, both in Bible knowledge, and in current church thought.

EARTHEN VESSELS

(II Cor. 4:7)

By Ruth Waymire

The road was dusty, hot and long
And weary grew my feet;
I paused beside a rippling spring
To taste the water sweet.

But tho' the water cool and fresh
Flowed on thru meadows green;
No cup was there to hold for me
The water of the stream.

And then a little maid appeared,
I hailed her from afar,
She gladly dipped and filled for me
Her homely earthen jar.

God's grace flows on o'er all the world,
His love is for us all;
But thru his chosen he reveals
The tender loving call.

The treasure of the Gospel pure
In earthen vessels' given;
That all the power may be of God,
That leads us on to heaven.
Englewood, Ohio.

riod of two weeks came to a glorious conclusion with the Communion services on September 10, which was largely attended.

The meeting was well attended. Excellent crowds in rapt attention at each of Brother Miller's discourses, resulting in eleven souls enrolling in the good cause,—“the fruits of his labors”.

This congregation and community desire to express their appreciation to Brother Miller for his tireless efforts and inspiring sermons which we feel have left our community a little better because of having again heard the old-fashioned gospel by an old-fashioned gospel preacher.

We thank you, Brother Miller, and your two daughters for the splendid work you have done so well. We pray that the Lord will continue to keep and bless you and that your reward shall indeed be glorious. We also report a 10 day revival service at the Kimsey's Run church September 15 to 25, conducted by Rev. Arthur Snider of this place. Splendid interest, three conversions and a well attended communion service.

LEAVING THE MIAMI VALLEY AND NEW LEBANON

On Sunday, September 15, we delivered our farewell sermon to the New Lebanon Brethren church after serving as their pastor for a period of 8 years. It is no easy task to leave a congregation after serving this period of time, but at the beginning of our ministry we reconciled ourselves to the fact that as ministers we have no abiding home here. That we must be subject to the call of the Lord when he sees fit to lead elsewhere. So it was with a note of sadness and yet an inner joy that we bid farewell to friends we shall never forget.

Our stay in New Lebanon has been a happy one as a whole, mingled, of course, with some unhappy experiences and many mistakes. Yet in spite of our own weakness the Lord has seen fit to bless our ministry in many ways. This was made possible only because the church as a whole cooperated in a splendid Christian spirit showing their loyalty in the work of the Master.

Financially, our first task was the raising of $2,000 to wipe out the indebtedness on the parsonage. After this was accomplished we began to raise money toward the enlarging of the church building. Finally after much prayer and effort and faith the church was remodeled at a cost of $18,000. Nearly half of this amount has been raised in spite of three years of economic chaos. This enlargement will enable the Sunday school to continue its growth for some years to come. The church has been acclaimed as one of the largest and most beautiful rural churches in the brotherhood.

The Sunday school attendance has increased from 105 in 1919 until the year 1931 when it reached an average attendance of 223. The average for the first half of this year stands at 218. With the fall activities the average may exceed the highest record. During our ministry it was our privilege of receiving 240 members into the fellowship of the church.

At a great sacrifice, the church during the last quarter, raised a considerable sum of money thus enabling them to pay the pastor up in full.

The above report has largely been given from the human viewpoint. What has been accomplished in a spiritual way in deepening the life of the people only eternity shall reveal. There is much yet to be done and we believe under their new leader the church shall be able to accomplish much we have left undone. We bespeak for Dr. Beachler our sincere prayer and good will and shall follow his work with a great deal of interest.

Again we say in this public way, thanks to New Lebanon for the many kindnesses, sacrifices and prayers offered in our behalf. We covet a continued interest of the entire brotherhood in our new fields at Mexico and Corinth, Indiana, as we take up the work there the first of October.

We desire also to express a word of appreciation to the churches of the Miami Valley and their pastors for cooperation shown in our work in this one of the richest fields for Brethrenism in the state.

CHRIST'S PEACE PLAN

A few years ago there were upward of twenty-two thousand applicants for a one hundred thousand dollar prize offered by Mr. Edward Bok for a peace plan. And the real peace plan was already in existence! Just six words: "Make disciples of all the nations."

An article in World Dominion, July, 1932, gives us a glimpse of a small group of Japanese and Chinese Christians meeting to talk things over. One of the Japanese delegation, an engineer, said, "We come from the Christians of Japan to offer you our hearts' sympathy. . . . Our fellow-Christians gave us money . . . to help you. But money can never undo what we have seen. Our hearts bleed for you and we are ashamed. But there is a new hope. You are believers and followers of Christ. So are we. . . . We in Japan, have pushed out an arm of a bridge from our shore. You, by allowing us to meet you, are pushing out an arm from China. It is Christ, the Keystone, who can and will finish the bridge and bring us together.—Selected.

NEW PAGEANT-DRAMA ON THE BIBLE

"Let There Be Light!" is the title of a new pageant-drama consisting of skillfully arranged music, hymns, Scripture passages, episodes, and tableaux, prepared by Elliot Field and published by the American Bible Society for churches and religious groups desiring to present a message in dramatic form on the value and significance of the Bible. An attractive feature of this pageant-drama is its unusual flexibility, for by modification it can be adapted to the use of small churches having only a minimum of equipment while larger churches will be able to use it in its entirety.

This pageant-drama especially suitable for Universal Bible Sunday, to be observed on December 10, will be mailed post paid, for twenty-five cents in stamps or coin, to anyone addressing the American Bible Society, Dept. U. E. S., Bible House, Astor Place, New York City.

TOO MANY QUARTERLIES!

We have too many quarterlies on the shelves for this time in the progress of the Quarter. For the last two Quarters, we sold out before this time; now, we made more and the orders have slumped. How can we ever tell how to do this thing, anyway? These quarterlies will do no good lying around here. It is hoped they might do some good, if they were in the hands of the teachers and pupils of our Sunday schools. We believe it to be the poorest kind of economy to stint the supply in this field. Better to economize elsewhere than to give our scholars insufficient opportunity to study their Bibles.

It was presumed that our sales would be enhanced by the reactions we got from the address to the ministers in their meeting at Winona Lake, but instead, some of the preachers seem not to have done a thing or else they have done the wrong thing. Our orders for the Bible Class Quarterly—best seller of all our issues—are off right now, more than 1,000 less than last quarter. Who's to blame? Two of our largest churches have slumped terribly. Beware! CHARLES A. BAME.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

UPHOUSE-FROEST—The marriage of Carl J. Uphouse and Evelyn G. Froest was solemnized on August 20th in Johnstown, Pennsylvania. Both are residents of this place and intend to make their home here. They are active workers in the First Church, both having served in various capacities within the church. Mr. Uphouse is superintendent of the Sunday school at the present time. The ceremony was read by the writer. NORMAN H. UPHOUSE.

CONZELMAN-REAGER—Mr. Phil Conzelman and Miss Margaret Reager, were married by the undersigned in Manokato, Kansas, on June 2, 1933. Miss Reager is a high school graduate and a display of garden flowers in her parents' home. Her grandmother was a Holsinger. They will make their home in Republic, Kansas, where he conducts a produce station. Both will be baptized soon and enter into the Christian life together. W. R. DEETER.

FISHER-TEMPLE—On June 11, 1933 at Wynora, Nebraska, occurred the marriage of Fred Fisher, and Vertie Irene Temple, both of Lincoln, Nebraska. The ceremony took place at S. A. M. and was a display of garden flowers in her parents' home. Both are making their home in Lincoln and are employed with the Conoco Oil Company. Best wishes to them both. W. R. DEETER.

George Jones, Mapleton, Kansas; Mrs. Etta Johnson, Devon, Kansas; Mrs. Nora Crane, address unknown; Mrs. Ida Crane, Lattie, Missouri.

Mr. Jones had lived in the Devon neighborhood for 50 years and was well known and highly respected by a large circle of friends.

He had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church for many years and was a good Christian man.

"Uncle Hiram" as he was known, loved his church and seldom missed any of its worship services. Since being his pastor for five years, only one other man attended more regularly than he, and no one seemed to enjoy them more. He was converted in one of H. R. Holsinger's meetings in Berlin in 1884-5.

He and his brother, H. J., were partners in business in Carlston for 42 years—two decades.

Funeral services by the writer, assisted by R. L. Sink, minister of the Church of the Brethren. W. R. DEETER.

GODDARD—David H. Goddard was born in Ozark, Mo., on July 1st, 1861, and departed this life at his home near Richards, Mo., on September 3rd, 1933, at the age of 72 years, 2 months and 2 days. Mr. Goddard was married to Mrs. Martha McCauley at Ozark, Mo., on February 3rd, 1888.

Mr. Goddard had been a member of the Baptist church since childhood, and was a good Christian man, very devoted to his family, and enjoyed a very large circle of friends.

Funeral was conducted from the Enoch school house, on Sept. 5th, 1933, by the writer. The large attendance and the beautiful floral offerings evidenced the high esteem in which he was held. L. G. WOOD.

BARKER—Claude Raymond Barker was born May 27, 1898 at Engleware, Kansas, and departed this life at his home in Fort Scott, Kansas, on September 5, 1933, at the age of 35 years, 3 months and 8 days.

He was united in marriage to Margaret Doty, on May 31, 1920, at Fort Scott, Kansas. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Margaret Barker, and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Barker, also two step-sons, Robert and Roy Doty. He also leaves two brothers, Glenn and Kenneth Barker, also three sisters, Mrs. Bertha Fulsom, Mrs. Violet Mills and Miss Alice Barker, all of San Jose, Cal. Mr. Barker was a very industrious young man, of honorable Christian fruits. He united with the Brethren church about 18 years ago.

He served in the U. S. Army after the world war, and was stationed for one year at Camp Grant, Illinois.

The funeral was conducted on September 7, 1933 from the Cheney Parlor, by the writer. A large circle of friends and neighbors assembled to pay their tribute of respect. Beautiful flowers were also tokens.

The body was laid to rest in the National Cemetery at Fort Scott, Kansas. L. G. WOOD.

He served three years in the civil war, and was honorably discharged.

Later he moved to Richards, Missouri, where he passed away on September 23, 1933, at the age of 86 years and 18 days.

Funeral by the writer from the Cheney Parlor on Sept. 26, 1933. The body was taken overland to Carbon County, Mo., for burial. L. G. WOOD.

DAVIS—Sue Davis was born August 26, 1866, and died at her home near Raytown, Mo. Sept. 21, 1933, aged 65 years. She leaves a mother, a daughter, 5 brothers and 2 sisters. She was a member of the Raystown Brethren church.

Often there is a funeral when even the nearest neighbors do not know if the departed is a church member, but not so in this case. Probably there was not a person in that community who does not connect that church with the name of Sue Davis. I held a meeting in the church; and in my relationship with her pastor, Brother Flora; and in my relationship as district evangelist, I came in contact with her life and can say that she was a rare person—one in a thousand.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer and Brother H. C. Hammond. R. L. HUMBERD.

MILLER—Idelen Louisa Miller, wife of Earl Miller, passed on to her eternal reward, Thursday, September 21, 1933, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Basil McElroy, three miles south of Danville, Ohio. Mrs. Miller was born July 18, 1810. She lived her entire life in the community of her birth.

The deceased united with the Danville Brethren church at the age of twelve years. She was a faithful Christian during her entire life. For many years she taught the Beginners' Sunday School class. She always manifested a pure and high character, which was the fruit of her Christian faith.

On March 19, 1932 she was united in marriage to Mr. Earl Miller. They made their home on his mother's farm south of Danville. Their happy union was terminated by her death. The funeral was held in the Danville cemetery, south of Danville. Services were conducted by the writer and pastor. F. W. SHERRY.

BRETHREN EVANGELIST

*Lord, give me the will to obey thee in fulness,
Nor let selfish pride ever cause me to do less;
For if Thou, Son of God, didst in lowliness bend,
Who am I, That Thy word to wash feet should offend.*

*Lord give me that cleansing, for daily I need it.
My soul is so blinded with selfishness; lead it.
There's naught left but confusion and sorrow and strife.
In Thee only is the way, the truth and the life.*

OUR Movie Made Children"

The above caption is the title of a recent book by Henry James Forman. This book presents a summary of the first scientific study ever made of the effects of the moving picture upon children. The investigators were not preachers or moralists, but scientists, psychologists, sociologists and educators. The investigations were conducted by the Payne Fund under the auspices of the Motion Picture Research Council headed by Dr. Hibben, former President of Princeton University. Four years were taken by the investigators, which will indicate the thoroughness of the work.

The peculiar value of the testimony of this book is that it presents the findings of men who are not opposed to the motion picture theater. In fact, they commend certain pictures which the Christian should condemn. They have no religious scruples against the theater. They approached the whole matter from a coldly scientific viewpoint. Yet their findings constitute the most blistering indictment of the movies ever written. The moving picture interests are so aroused that their dictator, Mr. Will Hays, has secured some "scholars" to answer the book.

Any Christian parents who after reading this book continue to send their children to the movies, must be either criminally careless or just plain dumb. The following review will give some idea of the book's contents.

WHO Goes to the Movies?"

The investigators, after scaling all estimates down to the lowest minimum, found that over 77,000,000 people attend the movies each week in America. Of this vast audience, over 28,000,000 are minors under twenty-one, and over 11,000,000 are under fourteen. In some places seventeen percent of the audiences were children under the age of seven years.

For comparison purposes, the investigators wished to study a group of children who did not attend the movies, but they were unable to find a sufficient number of non-attendants in one place to justify the investigation. Only the Bible has a larger circulation than the latest film from Hollywood! The weekly audience in the world is 250,000,000!

Out of five hundred pictures produced between 1920 and 1930, chosen carefully to get at the average, it was found that from 75 to 80 percent dealt with "love, sex and crime." If it be suggested that the children can be sent to see those pictures specially designed for children, the answer is that in 1925 there were but four such pictures out of 500, and in 1930 only one. If your children attend the movies they must be satisfied with the main themes, Love, Sex and Crime: Nearly one-half the pictures dealt with crime and sex.

Out of 115 films chosen at random, it was found that 54 murders are committed. 59 cases of assault and battery, 36 hold-ups, 21 kidnappings, and numerous other types of crime. To summarize, there were 43 crimes attempted, and 406 crimes actually committed; a total of 449 crimes in 115 pictures! Discussing the various stars, it was found that the most prominent often portrayed the worst types. Dr. Dale found that in 22 pictures of the 115, the goal of 35 leading characters is "illicit love." Speaking of Greta Garbo he says, "I cannot recall a single film in which she has portrayed what might be regarded as a good woman."

HOW Much Do the Children Remember?

The average parent sometimes comforts himself by thinking that after all the child will quickly forget what he has seen at the movies. The investigators looked into this matter and what they found was astonishing. First, they found that the child retains at least sixty percent of what the average adult retains, and that they remember it much longer. Second, what the child does not remember is generally those abstract aspects which might to some extent counteract the bad effects. Third, defining knowledge as correct information, it was found that the movie child who remembers sixty percent actually has less knowledge than before. This is because the pictures generally portray the facts of life falsely. In other words, the movie child knew fewer things that are so and more things that are not so.

EFFECTS of the Movies on Sleep

Since sleep is closely related to the health of the child, this aspect of the movies was carefully studied. An instrument was devised to measure the restlessness of children while asleep. Then after testing a group of children to find their normal restlessness, these children were taken to the movies. Subsequent tests showed all children were affected to some degree. In some the increased restlessness increased nearly 100 percent above normal, while in a few cases it decreased! The scientists explain that the latter cases mean "emotional fatigue" so that the child sleeps as if "drugged." And these effects often continued for several nights as the result of seeing one picture! Very few parents would give their children regularly either liquor or tobacco. Yet the effect of the movies is in the same category physiologically; probably actually worse in some cases.

OTHER Physiological Effects

A trained nurse, wife of a physician, was employed by one theater to care for the attendants. She was in a position to make personal observations. After some performances children would vomit as the result of their emotional condition. A certain picture caused eleven faintings and one miscarriage. Children became hysterical. Ushers were specially trained to handle these cases. Effects upon children were similar to shell-shock. Little wonder that nervous disorders and insanity are increasing.

DO the Movies Mold Thinking?

Children were taken who had little racial prejudice against the Chinese or negroes and shown certain pictures which portrayed these two races in an unfavorable light. The result was that a large percentage of the children became anti-Chinese in sentiment, and this attitude persisted nineteen months after the picture had been seen. When it is remembered that most films picture moral and social values in a false manner, the possibilities for evil become enormous. One investigator declares his belief that the thought patterns of American children are formed by the movies to a greater extent than by books! If this be true, it would explain the tremendous increase in sex and crime problems.

Why is it so difficult to arouse the public against the modern criminal and his deeds? Investigation revealed that at least one-fourth of the high school students tested had been made more tolerant toward crime and criminals by seeing the films ordinarily shown in the movies. More than one-half of the truant and behavior problem boys who were investigated gave evidence of having gotten their desire to "make a lot of money easily" from seeing movies of gangsters and crime.

WORSE than Ancient Rome

Mr. Forman concludes that "It is safe to say that not even Imperial Rome at its most decadent stage held up such symbols or images for its young to ape and copy."

DO the Movies Make Criminals?

Answering this question, the author points out that no other country in the world has shown such an increase in crime as our own since 1914 when the movie was just beginning its tremendous vogue. The evidence shows that the movie has played a significant part in teaching "techniques, methods and means of committing crimes." Two of the scientists found that in a group of films, selected at random, thirty-two sep-

Witnessing to the Gospel Communion

Jesus said to his disciples: "Ye are witnesses of these things." Of what things? Of all that Jesus had wrought and taught; of his dying and rising from the dead "that repentance and remission of sins" might "be preached in his name among all nations," and of his provision for daily renewal and growth in grace and power. The Lord had in mind the whole Gospel message when he gave that charge. Its all-inclusive intent is set forth very definitely in Matthew's report of the great commission, where not only making disciples and baptizing them is required, but also "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever" he had commanded them. Without doubt it included the ordinances of the holy communion which were established with such emphasis in the last hours before his crucifixion. No one with any knowledge of the circumstances could imagine it to be otherwise. What Jesus taught and did in such a time would most naturally be looked upon as being of the utmost importance and as involving the most binding obligations. No sincere messenger could go forth and tell the Gospel story and not include what happened that last night Jesus spent with his disciples in the upper room. And when the words fell from the lips of the Master: "Ye are witnesses of these things," the charge included Footwashing, the Lord's Supper and the Eucharist. These are included in our Lord's evangelistic program; they are parts of the "good news" that must be told.

All too often we look upon these things as mere church practices, just forms and ceremonies, or possibly only elements of the church's ritual, in which one may participate or not, as he may choose, and with little consequence either way. Laymen follow the lead of ministers in this respect. Frequently these ordinances are referred to from the pulpit as if they were matters of secondary importance. We speak glibly of the "fundamentals", but the last teachings of Jesus before he went to the cross and the forms in which they were conveyed are never or seldom included. Who are we that we should presume to separate from among the commitments of our Lord the things that are really important and those that are not? Our task is to bear witness to the whole Gospel of God, that which he incorporated in symbolic mold as well as that which comes in abstract statement. And if we really understand these forms, if we have a wholesome sense of their rich content, we shall know that they are not unimportant, but rather that they are conveyances of most vital gospel truths, and that it is our high privilege as well as bounden duty to bear faithful witness to the whole gospel communion on every occasion when it can be done to the glory of God.

Honoring the Lordship of Christ

In witnessing to the communion rites we acknowledge and honor the Lordship of Christ. At the outset of the eventful program of that last night with his disciples, Jesus is declared to have been actuated by the knowledge that "the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God." Such a statement means nothing less than that Jesus knew himself to be the Son of God, clothed with all authority and power, head over all things in the church, and that he deliberately set about to exercise his Lordship. If we are to honor him in that position we must forthwith begin to do what he says we should do, and to urge such obedience on others who join us in our fellowship. That is, we should in the first place set about to wash one another's feet and then to proclaim to those who will receive our word, the necessity of such spiritual service. The fact that Jesus is Lord should be sufficient reason to obey, for he himself said, "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet." Then we should partake of the feast of love and fellowship, even as he set us the example, and witness to others of the joy, the sense of oneness and the levelling influence to be experienced in such a service. After that there is the eucharist, the blessed spiritual communion to be had by means of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of the Savior of the world. We partake of the bread and the cup in memory of him who is our gracious Redeemer and glorious coming King, and this we do because he is even now our Lord and by so doing we may "show forth our Lord's death till he come." It is a great privilege and a sacred duty we have of honoring the Lordship of Jesus Christ in the communion.

Recognizing the Example of Christ

Again, in witnessing concerning the whole gospel communion we acknowledge the worth and importance of the example of our Lord. Jesus definitely stated that he had given us an example in the act of feet washing, and he might have said as much concerning the meal of fellowship. In many other things also he is our example. For it is an inspiring fact that Jesus is not only a great Savior of men, but a great example to them. He showed us how men ought to live, both in relation to God and to their fellow-men. Paul recognized his exemplary character when he admonished the brethren at Philippi in these words: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 2:5). Again, speaking of himself as pressing "toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," he pleads, "Let us therefore, . . . be thus minded" (Phil. 3:14, 15).

And the example is set by one who understands man, knows the weaknesses of the flesh and the strength of temptations, was tempted in all points like as we are and yet was without sin. That gives us a fellow-feeling with our Lord, a sense of having something in common; he becomes our true and sympathizing Elder Brother, and consequently his example is the more appealing. His is an example that has both appeal and compulsion in it, for while he had humbled himself and taken upon himself the form of a servant that he might set an example to mankind, he was at the same time the Son of God and Lord of heaven and earth. When he comes to us saying, "I have set you an example," it is time to take heed and to profit by it in every way possible. But vast numbers, both in the church and out, are ignoring his blessed example, and the opportunity is presented to those who are willing to follow the Lord in all things, to reprove the careless and willful by their faithfulness. It behooves those who would bear a faithful witness to exalt the example of our Lord both in their teaching and practice.

Witnessing Increases Knowledge of Truth

Then, witnessing concerning the blessed communion by faithful observance and by word to others lets us into an ever increasing fulness of understanding of the truths set forth by the ordinances. When we first begin to practice them, their meaning and significance are usually quite meager. Even to those who have given much time to their study, it requires time and experience for them to strike deep into the soul. And to many a poorly instructed soul they mean little more than a test of obedience. But the promise is, "If any man will do his will, he shall know the doctrine" (John 7:17). And even though one may have small faith and less knowledge at the beginning of his experience with this triple form of communion, as he goes on in sincere worship of God after this fashion, it will accumulate richness of meaning like money loaned at compound interest. Every new experience will add new value. It is true with the cleansing service of feet-washing. How much more real the cleansing becomes with each successive observance, and how much more clearly it pictures the daily operation of the grace of God in the heart of the believer! It is true of the meal of fellowship. It comes more and more to generate love and brotherhood with every honest participation. And the sacred emblems of our Lord's sacrificial death become steadily more spiritual and the presence of God more keenly sensed, if the communion is entered into in sincerity and truth, and if we regard it with love and with desire for its communication to other hearts.

We grow stale in our worship and the vehicles of truth become empty and meaningless when we become satisfied merely to enjoy the blessings alone, and have no thought or concern for those who have not received a knowledge of the truth. The blessings of God are like a river, they cannot be restrained and confined without becoming stagnant and wasting the wealth they are meant to convey. If these great truths which we hold so precious and so essential were more thoroughly permeated with the spirit of the Evangel, if, indeed, they were more truly looked upon as a real part of the Evangel, we would be witnessing more zealously concerning their vital truths and their wealth would enrich more greatly our own souls.

Religion Survives in Russia

Dr. C. M. Elderdice, in his department in The Methodist Protestant Recorder, writes as follows:

"Religious faith is not extinct in Russia, even though the Soviet Government for the last fifteen years has been carrying on with varying degrees of intensity, a systematic anti-religious drive, according to the London Sunday Observer, quoted by an exchange, "Although many churches have been torn down," says the article, "especially during the last years; although priests and ministers are deprived of food cards and subjected to various social discriminations; although the Soviet citizen who professes religious faith is often at a disadvantage as regards preferment in the state service, one can still see signs of surviving religious belief in the Soviet Union. What gives special concern to Soviet anti-religious propagandists is that religious practices can be found not only among the members of the pre-war generation, but also among younger people who have been brought up under the Soviet regime." For which we thank God, and take courage.

"The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." And we dare believe it will continue to be true in this day as it has in the past. Christianity in Russia is being purged of its old formalism and vitalized by persecution, and out of this suffering and death, the church will arise with a power and an evangelistic fervor that will send it forward with an aggressiveness that no opposition can withstand.

"Honor to Whom Honor is Due"

One of the most important factors in the modern church is the Sunday school teacher, and we have been encouraged recently by evidence that their more adequate equipment has not been overlooked or neglected, as seemed for a while to be the case, particularly among our own churches. Our National Sunday School Association is to be commended for its efforts to arouse new interest in the trained teacher, and the churches for responding to the Association's leadership, as proved to be the case by the report of last year's efforts published in this paper a few weeks ago. No effort should be considered too taxing and no sacrifice too great to make possible a more efficient teaching of the Word of God. Next to the pastor in importance stands the Sunday school teacher as an imparter of the teaching of the Scriptures, and along with that responsibility goes the right to a corresponding appreciation and honor, though no worthy teacher is serving for the sake of honor.

This word introduces us to a splendid idea that comes from the fertile brain of Dr. William T. Ellis, the widely known religious writer of Swarthmore, Pennsylvania. We believe such an occasion of honor for the Sunday school teacher would, as he suggests, not only pay a long over-due debt, but arouse new interest in the Sunday school, and especially in the task of teaching. We quote Mr. Ellis as follows:

"Churches honor ministers with degrees and donations; and they give banquets to leading laymen. But the most deserving group

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother W. H. Schaffer writes that the Communion service will be held in his church at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, on Sunday evening, October 22, at 7:30.

Nineteen souls have made the good confession in Dr. J. C. Beal's meeting at Homerville, Ohio, church, according to word from the pastor, Brother Floyd Sherry. The meeting was scheduled to continue for a few days yet.

The church at Cumberland, Maryland, reports five souls added to Christ and the work going forward under the faithful leadership of Brother C. H. Wakeman, who is giving good account of his talent in his community,—in the pulpit, in the parish and over the radio. Dr. Bell begins a revival meeting there on October 22.

Brother Homer Anderson is serving his third pastorate for the church at Pleasant Grove, Iowa, where the attendance is encouraging and the spirit is splendid. Three are reported baptized and four await baptism. The church surprised their pastor recently with a generous donation of eats and fuel, which is a fine thing for any church to do to show appreciation for their pastor's services.

Dr. L. D. Bowman reports eight new members added to his Mount Olivet church in Delaware, by baptism. He announces his intention of holding two revivals in Delaware this fall and early winter, and the Lord has opened the way for him to do some evangelistic work right near his home for a church of another communion. May the Lord bless Brother Bowman with continued physical strength and spiritual power.

Sister Mary A. Snyder writes a note about a short series of Bible Chart lectures conducted in her home by Brother Thomas Pressnell, closing with the communion service. It is truly Biblical to talk about "the church in my house", but we do not often run across such in our day, however we are glad to record such an incidence, and we venture to say that it would be better for the kingdom if there were more such churches.

The Indiana District Conference held at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, is said to have been one of the best the district has had. Brother Frank Gehman, the acting secretary, supplies us with a generous and well-prepared report. He was elected the new secretary-treasurer. Dr. R. F. Porte is the new moderator, and Brother L. E. Lindower, vice moderator. It was decided to change the time of the annual conference to follow immediately the Young People's Camp in July and to meet at Shipshewana every other year. The attendance was 111, three more than last year's record.

The movie business presents one of the most vexing social problems of our day, and Prof. A. J. McClain does the cause a real service by discussing it in the form of a book review on his page. There is perhaps no other social institution that is exercising so large and so vicious an influence on the children and youth of our land as the movie, and it deserves more attention at the hands of Christian people than they are wont to give it. If our readers are not aroused by Prof. McClain's very excellent review of the book, "Our Movie Made Children" to a new concern about this strongly entrenched social evil, we hope they will secure the book and read it.

Brother Robert D. Crees, pastor of the Brush Valley church at Adrian, Pennsylvania, held his own meeting recently which resulted in twelve confessions of Christ, six of whom have been baptized into the church. The meetings were brought to a close with an all-day harvest home program. It was a good record to have 97 members to respond to the roll call at that special service. In a separate notice Brother Crees expresses his appreciation for the service being rendered by the several publications issued by our Publishing House. We are very grateful to Brother Crees for his kind words, and wish to assure him and other appreciative friends that their encouraging words are a real help to us in our work.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for revival at Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania, October 24 to November 12, R. Paul Miller, evangelist, and William Gray, pastor.

Pray for revival at Linwood, Maryland, postponed from November 12 to November 17, with Dr. Charles A. Bame as evangelist and J. L. Bowman, pastor.

May WE also Be MARTYRS?

Acts 7:54-66

By Florence N. Gribble

The Answer is, "We Can."

A Real Martyr is filled with Spirit, Looks up—Sees God—Recognizes place of Christ.
Do We cast stones?

What is a martyr? One who suffers innocently in a just cause. There have been martyrs to other causes, but Stephen was the first martyr to Christianity. After him have followed singly, in groups, even in regiments, a long train of martyrs. Stephen was not only the first Christian martyr, but he was the ideal martyr; for there are martyrs who are not ideal. I remember when a child, one of three sisters nearly of an age, we were much interested in a picture in one of our books entitled "The Maiden Martyr." Things did not always go smoothly in our sea of little sisterhood and sometimes one of us would become offended or pout, and the others would immediately say in chorus, "Look at the maiden martyr." Such martyrdom or assumed martyrdom is common. But is there real martyrdom even today?

What then are the essentials of a true martyr? We shall find them in the verses which we have read. First, the true martyr is filled with the Holy Ghost. We long for his fullness, and rightly so. The more we have of his fullness the more we shall know of the fellowship of the sufferings of Jesus Christ and the more we shall suffer innocently for the just cause of Christianity.

Second, the true martyr looks up steadfastly into heaven. There are many who suffer who are not martyrs. In the beginning their suffering may have been innocent. It may have been even in a just cause. But they have swerved from the path which the first martyr followed by looking elsewhere than into heaven. Sensitiveness, self-love, introspection, resentment have no place in the heart of the true martyr who will be found looking like Stephen steadfastly and continuously into heaven, remembering that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (2 Cor. 4:17).

And this brings us to our next point. The true martyr sees the glory of God. Death and destruction may be all around him. Hatred and misunderstanding may be rampant, but he sees beyond it all God's ultimate glory and knows that though "on their part he is evil spoken of yet on his part he is glorified" (1 Peter 4:14).

The true martyr recognizes the place of Jesus Christ. Pearl Buck is a sufferer, but we cannot call her a martyr for Christ, for she has failed to recognize the place of Jesus Christ. She has failed to recognize his deity and his divinity and without realizing it perhaps has challenged his right to sit upon the throne at the right hand of God. He is sitting there, and yet Stephen saw him standing. No greater commendation can be given to the true martyr than this fact, simply but clearly stated, that the majestic Son of God rose from his seat in glory to receive in heaven the first Christian martyr.

And Stephen saw him. Not only did he see him, but he rendered testimony to the glorious vision, and it was this testimony which caused his death.

The Son of Man, that Jesus whom the Jews despised, whom they hated and whom they had crucified, that Son of Man also the Son of God—they would not hear it. And in order that they might not hear it they stopped their ears. Not Stephen only has suffered from the unstopped ears of those to whom testimony has been rendered. Unregenerate minds close their ears today to the truth, and one of the hardest things for him who today renders his testimony is found in the stopped ears of his hearers.

So they cast him out of the city. How many among the Bible colporteurs, how many among the missionaries have been cast out of the city or country in which he would labor! They stoned Stephen, and men are stoned today. Against the Christian message and the Christian messenger are hurled the stones of ignorance, prejudice, intolerance, misunderstanding and discontent. And today witnesses will lay down their clothes as they did in the days of Stephen. Why did they lay them down? In order that they might be unhampered in their crusade against God's messenger. And so today the followers of error in the intensity of their misplaced zeal divest themselves, figuratively speaking, even of their clothes in order that they might be the more free to attack the Gospel and the Gospel messenger.

Have we ever been stoned? Can we look back in our experience as Christians, as Christian workers or as missionaries and remember the time when against us have been hurled the stones of which we have spoken until we have been well nigh crushed with the burden of them?

But let us ask ourselves another question. Have we stoned others? In our uprightness and our orthodoxy have we been Sauls who have guarded the clothes of the witnesses against the Son of God? We shudder at the thought, yet have we been free at all times from prejudice? Have we been always free from ignorance? Have we stooped to intolerance? Have we been involved in misunderstandings? That is to say, not only misunderstood but misunderstanding? Are we discontented sometimes without cause with those whom God has given us, but who, coming out of the darkness of heathendom, are yet imperfect and incapable in their present stage of growth or development to appropriate that grace in its fullest extent, or to overcome the fierce temptations which assail them?

Let us see to it that although we may be stoned, we do not stoop to stone another. Let us remember that precious example of the Lord Jesus as he dealt with the woman taken in adultery. "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her" (John 8:7). More often perhaps in the future than hitherto will we be able to say to erring, faulty ones, "Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more" (John 8:11).

But as they stoned Stephen he was calling upon God. Shall not we also in the midst of our sufferings and trials remember to call upon God? Let us call upon him when surrounded by ignorance. Let us call upon him when assailed by prejudice. Let us call upon him when we meet intolerance. Let us call upon him in the dark days of misunderstanding, and let us call upon him when tempted to be unduly discontented with babes in Christ. We cannot say in the trials of life as in the trial of death, "Lord Jesus receive my spirit." Acts 7:59, but we can say "Lord Jesus keep my spirit." "Keep me unruffled, keep me rejoicing, keep my face as thou didst keep the face of Stephen, like the face of an angel."

BIG THINGS

Morally, Spiritually, Economically

TEXT: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him might not perish but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.

This verse is the Gospel in a nutshell, the whole Bible boiled down in one verse. There are so many big things in this verse that one man cannot exhaust it. Moody preached for three solid weeks on John 3:16 and then had only a beginning. A sermon I heard by Brother Percy Yett and a radio talk by Paul Rader and a magazine article by Dr. Louis Bauman started me to thinking on this verse. I submit the following.

Take a Look at the Big Things

The doctor tells the mother who has a lot of little problems, troubles, and cares, to take a trip and get a look at something big—maybe a mountain. She takes his advice, goes away for a rest, sees some of the big things of God's universe, forgets the little troubles and cares, and her nerves are built up and she is refreshed. She comes back home a care-free person.

The man who husks corn works away and thinks he's not getting much done. He goes to the barn, takes a look at the big crib of corn, and goes out with a big determination to make that pile of corn bigger.

Paul Rader for the first time went to see the ocean. He saw the waves roll in, and it so impressed him that he said to an old fisherman nearby, "My, that's great. Does it do that all the time?" and the old fisherman laughed at him. But just the same, it would have done that fisherman good to have gone to Paul Rader's Colorado home and seen the mountains there. It pays to get a view of something big.

The devil took the Lord of Glory up into a high mountain and showed him all the kingdoms of the world and said, "If you fall down and worship me, I'll give you these." He knew he had to tempt the Lord with something big, or he wouldn't stand a chance. Most of us humans would have fallen right down there and groveled in the dust at the old devil's feet. We couldn't stand such a temptation.

The Lord took Peter, James, and John into a high mountain and was there transfigured before them. It was such a big view of the Lord's glory that Peter didn't know what he was doing half the time. He wanted to build tabernacles up there on the mountain. What need would they have of tabernacles? We probably would have done worse than Peter.

I went up on Mount Wilson, where the observatory is, during my stay in California and from there, 7000 feet high, looked out over limitless space. From that peak I saw Catalina Island, 56 miles away. A BIG VIEW? It makes you think of a BIG GOD!

Henry Drummond was on a boat with five other men of different nationalities. They could not understand each other. They wanted to have some kind of communication with each other. Finally one ran and got a Bible. He opened it to John 3:16 and showed it to Henry Drummond. Immediately those two began to have fellowship. When the others saw what was happening, they all went and got their Bibles in different languages and opened to John 3:16 and had fellowship together. They could all see a high peak, even if they couldn't see the little things about them like the differences in their languages. Take a look at the big things. And so,

Take a Look at a Big God

The Scripture says the Lord God is a sun (Ps. 84:11). How big is the sun? you say. Well, can we get it in between the moon and the earth? No—we'd have to push the moon back three times farther than it is, before we could even get the sun between the earth and the moon, it having a diameter of 864,000 miles. Moreover, flames of fire leap out from the sun's surface for 250,000 miles and sometimes during disturbance, as far as 500,000 miles.

It's hard for us to realize such enormous distances. We people can't even think a mile. When my car broke down seven miles from Krypton, I had two hours to get there to be in time to speak at the first evening session of the Christian Endeavor convention of July 7-9th. The first two miles were along the river bed, the next two were up the side of the second mountain, and the last three miles were from the peak down the mountain side into Krypton. On the last mile I met mountain people coming home from Krypton with their groceries. "How far is it to Krypton?" "Bout three quarters of a mile." I walked on for a long distance—no sign of Krypton. "How far to Krypton?" "Bout three quarters of a mile." I walked on and on. I asked again. "It isn't far. 'Bout three quarters of a mile." After walking about three or four of these distances, I rounded the bend into Krypton. We humans can't even think in terms of miles. But the sun's measurements are in terms of hundreds of thousands of miles. And yet, the Lord God is a sun, so the Scriptures say. And that is only—comparison. For God is bigger than that yet. HE MADE THE SUN!! Thursday night, August 10, I looked into the heavens and saw a nebula which the astronomers say is another universe in itself—so far in distance that it is only a patch of light here. And God made that universe too. So God is beyond our powers of comprehension. Only in Christ Jesus do we comprehend him.

Moses stayed up on the mountain for some time. The GLORY of the LORD passed by before him. The Lord communed with him as he wrote on the tables of stone. When he went down from the mount, he didn't know that his face shone. Such was the effect of a big view of God.

But take a look at the great heart of God in John 3:16. GOD SO LOVED. Never has there been such a love. The loves of earth fade away and pass into almost nothingness when we consider the love of God. God so loved THE WORLD—a WORLD LOVE. It was this "world love" of God that prompted Jesus to say, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark 16:15). A mighty big command for us Christians to fulfill! First, we must preach intensely hard at home. Second, our next

This is the CRISIS: the world has turned her back upon the great love of God and the great message of John 3:16—of salvation through belief in Christ. She has turned to her idols of gold and silver and the perishable stuff of earth. And now—these idols have failed her; where is the gold of earth? The world is bankrupt financially, morally, spiritually, and politically. But in each case a strong delusion bids fair to blanket the eyes of men.

This is what I mean in each case. To remedy the financial condition, a World Economic Conference was called. This was to "fix up" the economic (no trade) perplexity of nations (Luke 21:25). But how many dollars did that conference benefit you? Einstein says, "It is as if the circulatory system of the whole organism were, throughout, FATALLY ILL." Lloyd George of England expresses his fear of international bankruptcy eventually. But while the great leaders are looking with foreboding on the financial situation of the world, others are engaged in putting a dust-cap over the eyes of men.

Morally, the world is hardly without parallel. Immorality runs without blush upon the streets. Crime stalks in the daylight. Murder lurks beyond the next corner. Suicide advances relentlessly into the front door. Divorce is as common and more heard of than marriage. Insanity increases at such a tremendous rate that if the door neighbors should hear the Gospel from our lips or by the means of our pocketbooks. And so our Judea ought to be the Kentucky and Home Mission work. Then, our Samaria, lying in this Western Hemisphere is our Argentina work—we should give there. Last of all, our world should be represented by Africa. Thus we can carry out Christ's command and demonstrate his love to and for the world.

The great love of God was crystallized into material form when Christ, his Son, gave himself upon the Cross. A missionary who went to one of the islands of the West Indies told the story of God's love to an old chief. He told him how God gave his only Son to die on the cross. The chief listened intently and when convinced that this was true, said, "He must be God to do that, for no human would do that." From that time on, the island was opened to missionary evangelization. God's great love gift, salvation from sin by redemption through Christ's blood, banishes the big burden of sin from the shoulders of the weary, worn-out sinner.

Christ was a big man; he had a big cross; he did a big thing when he burst the bands of death asunder and came forth from the grave. GET a BIG LOOK at a BIG GOD with a BIG LOVE.

Take a Look at a Big Crisis

This is the CRISIS: the world has turned her back upon present rate of increase keeps up, in 200 years, there will be not one sane person in the United States. No wonder that Harry Carr of the Los Angeles Times, in speaking of conditions preceding the fall of Rome concluded, "Conditions are far too similar for comfort." And still the old blanket is thrown over the heads of men. They call sin an accident, a mistake, a trifle, something inherited, a luxury, a blunder. But God calls it S I N.

I had an occasion recently to be among some workers. An old man about 60 was telling a girl about 20 how he liked to dance, and asked her why she didn't attend more. She said she didn't know any of the young people except some of the church young people who attended. He said, "What, do they attend?" She said, "Sure, WHO WANTS TO BE GOOD ANYWAY, THESE DAYS?" And THAT, my Brethren, is the spirit of this age.

Spiritually, the world has turned to apostasy. Herein rests a great deal of the chaos of the world,—blind spiritual leaders of the blind! The Institute of Social and Religious Research sent out an appraisal commission to ascertain the value of foreign missionary work. They came back with a report something like this: "We don't need any more missionaries or mission work on the present basis. For we Christians can't quibble with other religions. Our business is not to save men from hell but to promote heaven on earth. People aren't lost because they are without Christ. Since the theological outlook has changed, so must the missionary motives. We can no longer hold that honest seekers of God in other religions are lost." And so, with such a modernistic white-wash, what becomes of missionary zeal? It is stamped as a child of fundamental dogmas and relegated to the same ash-heap.

The seductive and intensely poisonous flower of apostasy has come to full bloom in America. The World Parliament of religions at the 1933 World's Fair in Chicago is the flower of it. It promises to be the seething pot of religion. Some years ago, I heard much talk about a book then published called "The Melting Pot." And this seething pot of religion is bound not to make Americans, but, if anything, some hideous, power-grasping, control-centralizing, beast-shaped dictator over the religious impulses of mankind of the whole world. For representing America's Christendom is the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America under the leadership of Bishop Frances McConel, who himself expects to see "a new spiritual dynamic" devolved or evolved which will be "competent to master and reform the world." No longer is THE BLOOD OF CHRIST considered that spiritual dynamic—it is outworn and faded. No longer is it "competent to master and reform the world." But I read in Revelations 12:11, "And they overcame him BY THE BLOOD OF THE LAMB." It seems to me that Revelation 12:11 has been in evidence a great deal longer than the shades of evanescent and effervescent spirits of these men who propose to represent Christendom today.

The great principles of Christianity will be thrown away in this parliament of religion. John 3:16 will be emptied of all meaning. The old, bloodstained CROSS is to be burned up on a funeral pyre of consolidated religion touched off with the little matches of human wisdom. Oh, for another Joseph Cook to rise up in this parliament and press the claims of the CRUCIFIED CHRIST whose blood can cleanse the vile spots on Lady MacBeth's hands, and not only those on her hands but the bloodstains on the hands of everyone!! Oh, for another Boniface to come and chop down this new tree of worship more deadly than Thor!

Politically, the world is turning to dictators. Governments topple into the discard through the efforts of strong men who centralize authority. Even in America, the land of the free and the home of the brave, we must do as the dictator advises, or it will be mighty unpopular for us.

Now, say, do you remember what happened in the Old Roman Empire when the Caesars had gained all power? They had the people worship them as gods. And say, it is the easiest thing for a dictatorship over the bodies of men to assume a dictatorship over the souls of men. CAESAR-WORSHIP!! It has already happened in Germany. The First Federal Congress of German Christians under Nazi influence has declared this principle: "The State under Adolph Hitler calls to the church, and the church must heed the call." SINCE WHEN DOES THE CHURCH HAVE TO ANSWER TO THE CALL OF ONE MAN RATHER THAN TO THE CALL OF CHRIST? Easily answered. When that man is a dictator!

Now—Our president has more power than any European dictator; this is conceded by men who ought to know. And he is rather friendly with the Catholic Church; I remember hearing the reception of the degree of doctor of Laws from the Catholic university last June. Moreover, Raymond Moley, the President's advisor (now at this writing resigned) is one of the Columbia University men associated with technocracy. And technocracy, which aims at government control of all production and business "from the inside" is an outgrowth of socialism. Now the NRA, the most wonderful economic measure the world has seen in years, seems to be a drive for the vantage ground of the first objective—control of production and business, that is, control over the bodies of men. The next step I'm not saying "will be" but "may be" control over the souls of men. Will it be Catholic?

A CRISIS? God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, a crisis that averted the world from ruin and destruction. His part is done. The world's part has been rejection. NOW the crisis is here. The stage is set. The Lord of Glory will soon appear and this world will perish because it would not believe on him. "Whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life."

May God help us to take the big things of this verse and make them the big things of our lives.

Evangelism by Personal Interview.

By Dr. J. C. Beal

Personal Interview is one of the most effective means at the disposal of those interested in soul-winning.

It is a method that has the sanction of the Lord Jesus Christ as evidenced by his personal dealing with Nicodemus, the woman at Jacob's well and others.

It enables the worker to meet the questions and objections of the one with whom he is dealing in a way not possible in a public service.

It removes the danger of "mob-psychology" and makes possible the decision being based on the definite message of the Word and thus furnishes a foundation for real faith.

Personal interview, if to be successful, demands absolute frankness on the part of the worker. He should plainly and frankly tell the prospect the purpose of the visit and not "spar" for an opportunity. There is just as much reason to tell a man why you have come when seeking to lead him to a personal acceptance of the Lord as Saviour as for the insurance agent to make his business known when he seeks an interview.

This method, if to be successful, demands much prayer and a definite surrender on the part of the worker that the Holy Spirit may have his way. He knows the need and has promised to meet that need and experience proves that he will not disappoint.

May We also Be Martyrs?

And we can pray as Stephen prayed for those who stoned us. We can pray that their ignorance, their prejudice, their intolerance, their discontent may not be laid to their charge. And having thus prayed our spirits may be tranquil. It was not when they ceased to stone him that Stephen fell asleep, but when he fell asleep they ceased to stone him. Were our spirits more tranquil, were our lives more spirit-filled, not only would we have perfect contentment through our own trials, but never through our own ignorance, prejudice, intolerance, misunderstanding or discontent would we hurl a stone at another.

And so for a little while we must continue to suffer the imperfections of humanity, our own and those of others. For a little while we must continue to pray, "Lord Jesus keep my spirit" and "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge" (Acts 7:60).

And thus he that shall come will come and receive us unto himself. He stood to receive Stephen. To receive us he will advance, nay more, he will descend and we shall be caught up together with him in the air and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

Brethren Young Men and Boy's Brotherhood.

By N. V. Leatherman

"What we propose doing for our boys."

For a number of years interest has been expressed at General Conference to develop an organization, build a program and promote a movement for the boys of our church that would be for them what the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha is for our girls. That interest culminated at our last General Conference in the adoption of an (order of procedure), presented by a committee for this purpose at the 1932 conference. This report appeared in the conference minutes, printed in the September 23 (1933) number of the Brethren Evangelist. A committee of ten was named to promote the work this year. General Conference demonstrated its interest in this work with real enthusiasm which received its best expression with an offering for the work of promotion to the amount of $26.43.

Some of the things proposed by the National Committee is to have a representative present the brotherhood at each district conference this year. Rev. L. E. Lindower presented the matter to the Indiana conference, and the writer to the Pennsylvania conference October 2-5. Rev. E. M. Riddle will present it to the Illiokota conference, while Rev. Herbert Rowsey will do the same at the Mid-West conference. Each district is asked to name an Advisory Committee or Committee on Boy's Work. The National Committee will provide a program for the brotherhood to meet in conjunction with General Conference of 1934. Already plans are being made to promote the work locally. We are not seeking to create more organizations locally; but shall endeavor to help those organizations, Sunday school classes, etc., already in existence, by suggesting improvement in their organization, order of procedure, program and leadership.

The writer was made president of this National Brotherhood Committee and as such was requested to assign subjects concerning the brotherhood to the different members of the committee, for articles to be published in the Brethren Evangelist. The following is a list of subjects which will thus appear throughout the year:—"A Consecrated and Trained Leadership the Greatest Need of Our Boys," "The Present Value of a Boy's Life to Our Churches," "The Christian Boy Today—The Churchman Tomorrow," "Helping Our Boys to Appreciate the Christian Life," "Worthy Projects for the Boys of Our Churches," "Interesting Our Boys in the Word of God,"

Colossians

Introduction—(1:1-13)

If any reader of the Bible doubts the authorship of any of the Pauline Epistles, certainly he will not find any basis for them in the great Colossian letter. The external and internal evidence for the epistle are so strong that the case is absolutely established and closed in favor of the Apostle's authorship.

Take, for instance, the external evidence. Clement of Rome, Barnabas, and Ignatius have echoes of it in their observations. Marcion, the Muratori Canon, the old Syriac and Latin versions recognize it. Aristides and Justin Martyr quote from its pages. So do Irenaeus, Tertullian, and Clement of Alexandria. Such an array of external facts in support of the epistle are incontestable.

Moreover, let us take a glimpse at the internal evidence. Gloag writes: "The character of Paul is discernable in the writer; his anxiety for the spiritual welfare of the Colossians (1:9; 2:5); his gratitude to God for the good report which he had received of their faith and love (1:4); his earnest desire for their spiritual improvement and increased holiness (1:9, 10); his liberality and freedom from carnal ordinances (2:16); and his solicitude for an interest in their prayers (4:3). The style, also, with some variation, accounted for by the nature of the subject, is decidedly Pauline.

Even Renan, never a Bible enthusiast, admits: "This Epistle is to be received unhesitatingly as the work of St. Paul." And the worthy Meyer testifies: "The fabrication of such an Epistle would be more marvelous than its originality." Admittedly, then even the most critical scholar would have great difficulty in finding another author than the famous Tarsus Rabbi who laid aside his legalistic robes for the garments of Christ's righteousness.

Colossae

The city of Colossae, never important in secular history, was located in the valley of the Lycus in the land of Phrygia. Earthquakes and volcanic disturbances were particularly severe at this spot. The Lycus river system "carried calcareous matter which formed everywhere deposits of travertine," a peculiar formation. But the region was fertile and productive in places. Sheep grazed on the hills and plains. Streams, tintured with chemicals of various sorts, provided water for dyeing purposes. Consequently, woollen goods were marketed there.

Bishop Lightfoot, himself a traveler in this section, states: "Ancient monuments are buried, fertile lands overlaid, river-beds choked up, and streams diverted, fantastic grottos and cascades and arches of stone formed by this strange, capricious power, at once destructive and creative, working silently and relentlessly through long ages. Fatal to vegetation, these incrustations spread like a stony shroud over the ground. Gleaming like glaciers on the hillsides, they attract the traveler at a distance of twenty miles, and form a singularly striking feature in scenery of more than common beauty and impressiveness.

The Gospel and the Intellectuals

Paul, though not the founder of the church at Colossae, nevertheless learned of its existence and Gentile composition. Certain Jews also belonged to its membership. It appeared that some intellectuals were perverting the purity of the Gospel in that church by:

- (1) combining it with asceticism and angelology;
- (2) erecting a worldly philosophy or knowledge; and
- (3) establishing anew the Jewish festivals and sabbaths.

Perhaps some Alexandrian Jewish educators of Philo's school were causing the trouble. At any rate, the Apostle sought to correct the super-added knowledge with a more complete statement concerning the one "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," (2:3).

Doctrinal Instruction (1:13-2:3)

Over against any schemes or systems of men, together with their ordinances and customs, Paul sets the great Head of Creation and Head of the Church, Jesus Christ. Findley, better than most expositors, clearly analyzes "the clusters of glories" which surround the head of our Saviour!

I. Christ's Headship of Creation:—

- V. 15. (a) Who is the image of God the invisible, First-born of all creation:
- V. 16. (b) For in him were created all things.
- (c) In heaven and on the earth, the things visible and the things invisible—whether thrones, whether lordships, whether principalities, whether dominions—
- V. 17. (d) All through him and unto him have been created:
- (e) And he is before all things, and in him all things consist.

II. Christ's Headship of the Body, the Church:—

- V. 18. (a) And he is the Head of the body, the Church.
- (b) Who is (the) Beginning, First-born out of the dead, that in all things he might become preeminent.
- V. 19. (c) For in him he was pleased that all the fullness should dwell.
- V. 20. (d) And through him to reconcile all things unto him, having made peace through the blood of his cross.
- (e) Through him, whether the things on the earth, or the things in the heavens.

The very heart of this Epistle is discovered in the Scripture analyzed above. What gnostic, what philosopher, what ascetic, what Jaudaiser could prevail over such a Christ in the Church? He and he alone is the Head. He is the "very God of very God."

Polemical Advice (2:4-23)

Having shown the Colossians the fullness of God in Christ, Paul advises them to beware of "enticing words" of insidious opponents of the faith. He begs that they shall be "rooted and built up in him;" that they shall accept anew their completion in him; that they shall blot out "the handwriting of the ordinances"; that they shall leave former out-worn and out-moded Jewish and pagan requirements alone; that they shall "touch not, taste not, handle not" the above things, (this phrase has no reference to spirited liquors); and, finally, that they shall "seek those things which are above" and not the rudiments of the world and the commandments of men. "Is not the way of God good enough," he asks? "Yes," they would answer. "Then," he would again suggest, "set your affections on things above."

Practical Exhortations (3:1-4:6)

Put off Satan! Put on Christ! Lay aside "anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communications, etc." Adorn yourselves with "kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering, etc." All this is Paul's advice. It is excellent advice, too. "And above all things put on charity which is the bond of perfectness." (3:14). "Let the peace of God rule . . . Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly." Others than those poor seduced Colossians need to heed this exhortation. When Brethren are misled and discredited they should be helped and loved, not damned and maligned. Why did not Paul attack these wayward Colossians? The answer is obvious. He knew what love would and could do. Is it any wonder that Paul should be to Christians the greatest man on earth since Jesus? He is the gifted expositor and gracious defender of the faith who persistently explained the Scriptures and courteously defended them before all comers in truth and in love. May we profit by his example.

Personal Matters (4:7-18a)

In the Colossian letter, as in others, Paul never forgets his friends. In order to have friends, a man must be friendly himself. Paul's friends were numerous among all classes of men. Just look at the list! It is in itself a challenge to us. His friends were those who were in Christ. Are our friends Christ's friends?

Conclusion (4:18b)

"Remember my bonds." "Grace be with you." Paul was human—the chain bothered him—but he was as free as any Christian who has ever trod earth's sod. Paul was spiritual—"grace," precious grace, "be with you," he urges. When you write church letters, brother minister, do you remember the grace which has saved you?

What Will Make Me Love to Teach?

By Edward Leigh Pell

A proud young mother said to me the other night, "Sonny is teaching little sister how to say her prayers."

The little fellow, though only five, had taken up the task on his own initiative and, I was assured, was "having the time of his life."

I believe that I have never known a normal human being, young or old, who did not dearly love to teach some one about something at one time or another. Certainly I do not know one church school teacher who cannot recall at least a few red-letter Sundays in his life in which he found teaching an amazingly happy experience.

It seems to me that, if I were worried over my lack of love for teaching, the sensible thing for me to do would be to recall the few happy experiences that I have had in my class and try to think what it was in each case that made teaching a joy. When a teacher goes from his class happy over his work, it is usually because he went to it in an unusual glow of love for Christ or for his pupils—usually for both—and because he was so full of his subject and so deeply stirred over it that he felt "simply bound" to teach it.

Unquestionably if a teacher always goes to his class with his heart full of love for the Christ for whom he is teaching, and for the pupils who have been committed to his care, and never goes until he is full of his subject and deeply stirred over it, he will continually develop a love for teaching, no matter what sort of pupils he may have. But we might as well face the facts. Many a teacher is not willing to devote enough time to thinking of Christ and his pupils during the week to keep his heart warm with love for them. Besides, no matter how warm your heart may be at the end of the week, if you are so thoughtless as to eat too much on Saturday night and then wake up Sunday morning with a dull ache in your head, a dark-brown taste in your mouth, and a dark-blue outlook on life—

There is no use mincing matters. No matter how careful a teacher may be to prepare his mind and heart for his class, if he puts his body out of commission by self-indulgence on Saturday, he will go to his class on Sunday with a dull mind, a cold heart, and little love for teaching. You cannot love to teach for a Christ you do not love; you cannot love to teach a pupil whom you do not love; you cannot love to teach a religion that you do not love. And you are not going to love a Christ, a pupil, or a religion that you do not know. You may know and love all three, but you will never love to teach if you put your body out of commission so that you cannot think or even love while standing before your class.

We often meet teachers who complain that they do not love to teach any more than they did when they started. This means, of course, that many teachers are trying to teach from a motive other than love. A generation ago apparently more teachers taught from a grim sense of duty than from anything else. They depended upon their sense of duty to drive them to their work. The whip of conscience sent many a teacher to his class with a headache that made teaching a torture. Half the teachers in the old-fashioned Sunday school, it seems to me, were good, earnest men and women to whom the task of teaching was a painful burden that they were always trying to carry for duty's sake rather than for love's sake. How strange that it never occurred to them that, when a person does a thing because he is driven to it, he is more likely to despise it than to love it!

Today the teachers we meet who complain that they do not love to teach are depending less upon their sense of duty and more upon enthusiasm. They say that you can do nothing without enthusiasm, and they set great store by great drives and whirlwind campaigns and all the rest of our modern devices for working up enthusiasm. But, as I have often said, enthusiasm is like the old-fashioned day-coach window that was always getting out of order. It took all your strength to push it up to the top where it ought to catch, and by the time you had settled down in your seat it would be down again. We have seen pastors and church school leaders who had brought themselves to the verge of a nervous breakdown in their efforts to work up enthusiasm—their own as well as other people's—to a point where it would stick. It simply cannot be done. Enthusiasm runs down as inevitably as a clock. Perhaps the biggest blunder that the church has made in this generation has been in wasting its energy in futile attempts to make enthusiasm take the place of passion. The teacher who depends upon devices for keeping up his enthusiasm is engaged in an impossible experiment. Jesus does not call us to a life of spasmodic drives and whirlwind campaigns; he calls us to a steady, unceasing life walk with him along his own highroad of sacrificial love and service. For this he offers to fill us with his own steady-flowing, deathless passion.

But let us not forget that this deathless passion for Christ and our pupils, without which we are not going to love our task as teachers, does something more than send us to our class with warm hearts. The teacher who imagines that, if he goes to his work with his heart full of love, it will not matter if his head is empty does not know the meaning of the sacrificial love that Christ offers us. With that love in our hearts we shall think of the lesson as the message that Christ has given us to take to our pupils, and we are not going to leave that message behind. We are going to fill our heads with it. Before we go, we are going to brood over it until we are so deeply stirred that we would rather teach it than do anything else in the world.—The Westminster Uniform Lesson Teacher.

Winning Another for Christ and the Church

By Elizabeth Cooper

As individuals we can do much to win others to Christ, but as a consecrated praying group there is no limit to the work that may be accomplished.

I know a Sunday school class that not only keeps a prayer list, but the members have a certain time each Saturday night when they pray for those of their class that are not in the church, and for members of their family. Sometimes the list is known to the whole group, and sometimes there are only a few names known to the group, but anyone may give a name to the teacher, and it is filed. This class of young business women has less than two per cent of its enrollment outside the church. It averaged an attendance last year of thirty-one.

Personal visitation helps when it is done by a tactful person. Teams of two may be a power; for, if one may not be able to say much, he can pray for the other person, who can speak of Christ to one without.

The outstanding way to help others to see Christ is living each day that they may know that Christians have something that brings a lasting happiness to them. Without Christ there is a longing and restlessness that cannot be satisfied. When we least know it, we preach the best sermons.

A young man coming to the city recently was told that few people attended church; but he learned differently, because he was employed in a service station that was open twenty-four hours a day. This station was across the street from a large church, and he told the minister one day as he was buying some gas that he had learned that not all were away from church. Watch where you park your car on Sunday; it might preach a sermon.—Selected.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY

(Lesson for October 29)

(Lesson Text: Romans 13:12 to 15:3. Golden Text: Romans 13:10)

Self-Denial for the Sake of Others. Romans 14:13-23

Self-denial seems to be one of the most difficult virtues to be acquired by human beings. If "self preservation" is the first law of nature, and if "the survival of the fittest" is to be recognized as a controlling principle in the development of all things, then there is no legitimate call for self-denial. But Christianity teaches us there are things of greater value than the preservation of self, and that in human relationships there are things of greater value than individual advancement.

Just at the time of this writing about all the power of our federal government is called into action to convince the American people that there are human relationships and responsibilities that call for self-denial.

TUESDAY

Christian Liberty. First Corinthians 10:23 to 11:1

"If therefore the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed", coming directly from the lips of our Master may cause some people to believe there are no more restraints upon them, and that they are free to order their lives as they will. But such is not the case. While they may be set free from the bondage of sin, they are not set free from their obligations to their fellow Christians, and they are not at liberty to order their lives independently, and without regard to their influence upon others.

Brotherly Love. 1 John 4:1-3

John, who has been designated the Apostle of Love, had an unusual grasp of the great Christian doctrines or truths that bear upon human relationships as well as the relationships that should exist between man and God.

Calling to mind the great event of the coming of the only begotten Son into the world as a manifestation of God's love to us we are told that since God so loved us, we also ought to love one another. And, if we do love one another as we are told we should this love will be indicated by right relations to our brother's welfare, especially our relations to those we are prone to call our "weaker brothers."

THURSDAY

Watchfulness and Sobriety. 1 Thessalonians 5:1-11

In this letter to the Thessalonians the great apostle calls their attention to the fact that the "Day of the Lord" cometh as a thief in the night, and that if they have any desire to be ready for that day it is very essential that they ever maintain an attitude of watchfulness, and that they shall practice sobriety at all times. Some may be overcome with drunken stupor, but the wide-awake Christian will realize that he dare not thus degrade himself and invite destruction to befall him, but rather he should endeavor to build himself and others up in the faith.

FRIDAY

Obedience in the Home. Ephesians 6:1-9

This entire lesson has to do with "Good Citizenship." This quality is manifested in many ways and in many places. And since it is commonly admitted that the security of a nation lies in the security of the home, it is not at all difficult to understand how impossible it is to have an obedient citizenship unless there has first been instilled into the life of the citizens while still children in the homes of their fathers and the mothers the virtue of obedience. Sober homes, temperate homes, are important in teaching the great lessons of obedience.

SATURDAY

Drunkennes Punished. Luke 12:41-48

In this parable of the unfaithful servant the Lord lays down an inexorable law. You may call it a "law of retribution" if you will, but nevertheless the law holds.

Men may hold it as an "inalienable right to pursue happiness" in any manner they may see fit, whether it be in the "flowing bowl" or in any other personal indulgence. But the law holds, and "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." There is no escape. "Be sure your sin will find you out."

SUNDAY

Jehovah the Judge. Psalm 68:1-6

We should be glad that God is the judge of all human conduct rather than that man should be granted that power over man.

It is true we have earthly judges to sit in earthly courts, and their responsibilities are great; but we are glad God sits upon his throne as the supreme judge over all. Earthly justice may miscarry, but not so the judgment of God. That is always right and from his decisions no appeal can be made.

Men may live lives of intemperance without interference of earthly courts, and men may vote to remove all earthly restraint from the control of the curse of liquor without being condemned by society, but after all Jehovah is the judge, and he will pass judgment upon our acts as we go to the polls to register our votes either for or against this curse.

Personnel and Organization of the Lookout Committee

Compiled by Viola Ogden, Secretary of the Oregon Christian Endeavor Union

The lookout committee should have in its membership those who are personally consecrated and of character and habits above reproach; (for how can one win others if he himself be living unworthily?) those who are socially inclined and have the happy faculty of making acquaintances easily; those who have some charm of personality so as to attract those they seek to win; those who have ingenuity and, by all means, persistence. The chairman of the committee should possess as many of these characteristics as possible, and should have had previous experience on the lookout committee. Most of the committee members should have these characteristics as far as possible, but there should be a few of the newer society members included, in order that they may get the training and development.

The size of the committee should, of course, be commensurate with the size of the society. A small society will have a smaller lookout committee than a large society will have. While the lookout committee is one of the most important in the society, it should not be out of proportion to the other chief committees in size.

Whether or not the organized committee-work plan is used, the work of the committee should be divided and assigned to its members so as to distribute the responsibility and training. The organized committee-work plan has much to commend it; so an outline of its lookout-committee organization is herewith included.

1. Chairman.
2. Secretary.
3. Advertising and publicity.
4. Personal-work and Bible-study classes.
5. Reclamation work.
6. Recruiting in Sunday school.
7. Recruiting after morning church service.
8. Recruiting after evening church service.
9. Recruiting high school seniors.
10. Recruiting college freshmen.
11. Recruiting college sophomores.
12. Intermediate work.
13. Junior work.

In a large committee of thirteen members to each person should be given one of the above-mentioned assignments. In a small committee two or three or more assignments can be given to each member, and so the plan can be made to work for large or small committees. Far more committees consist of five or less members than of more than five, however; so the assignments for five members will be considered.

The chairman should, of course, call meetings of the committee and preside over them. He should make the assignments of tasks to the members, and make them feel that this is their job as a whole, and that each has a part of that job as his own responsibility and that his work will go undone unless he does it. The more of optimistic leadership ability the chairman displays, the more will his committee achieve. He will find regularity of committee meetings an indispensable requisite to successful work. At these meetings plans for future work should be made and reports of work done should be heard. It seems to be a characteristic of human nature that more work and better work will be done if written reports are to be given. The chairman will do well to give his co-workers a share in the planning of the work, and also to ask pleasantly but firmly for written reports. The successful chairman will also be generous with his praise of those who have accomplished things. People like to be commended for what they have done. It is said that Charles M. Schwab never reproved a man who had failed to accomplish his task; instead he praised those who had done their work well. The chairman will not overlook the importance of planning the year's work. It is ever so much better to lay out a plan for a whole year's work than to go along aimlessly from month to month. Just as soon after the beginning of the society's year as possible this should be done. One committee wrote out its year's "policy" something like this: "We, the members of the lookout committee, trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, undertake to do the following things." Then all the members of the committee signed their names to it. The chairman will make the reports of the committee to the society in the society business meetings.

The secretary will take minutes in the committee meetings just as a secretary would in the society business meetings. She will also keep a scrap-book of plans and methods tried, which will be of great help in keeping up a continuity of work from one administration to the next.

Advertising and publicity are often handled by a special committee, but if there is no such committee the work can well be done by the secretary of this committee.

Let the chairman of the committee have charge of personal-work and Bible-study classes, and it will be well to have a class of each kind each year. Especially do the members of the lookout committee need such classes, but of course the other society members should be invited to participate in them.

The chairman should have responsibility for reclamation work, because he is supposedly the most able person in the society next to the president, and certainly the best person available should undertake this most delicate task of all the committee's work. Getting new members is not nearly so difficult as is the reclaiming of those who are slipping or have slipped away. It takes a great deal of tact and personal consecration to do this work, but nothing is more important. If a member becomes lax in his Christian living, or becomes dissatisfied in the society, he usually puts the blame upon the society instead of upon himself; and such "knocking" can do the society a tremendous amount of harm.

One member may have charge of recruiting, or of getting new members. Here mention will be made only of the places wherein recruiting may most logically be done. The Sunday school and after morning and evening church services are the places within the church in which new members may most naturally be sought. In the outside realm let another committee member be responsible for recruiting in high school, grade school, or college, as the grade of society may indicate.

If there are Junior and Intermediate societies, they, of course, furnish new blood to the society next higher in age. Therefore some attention should be paid to them, and members of the lookout committee should have a special responsibility for this. Before graduation-time, or at some other similar time in the year, members about ready to go into the next older society should be invited personally to come into the older society, and should be introduced and made welcome after they have entered into it.—C. E. World.

any task is a problem in geography. The gospel has not yet been preached to the whole world. It is still in part at least a matter of geographical occupation.

The Intensive Application of Christianity

The missionary task is not only a problem in geography. It reaches into every department of both individual and group life. All the social relationships are affected by the introduction of the Christian religion into a community. Civic life is changed by the application of Christian principles. The moral standards of men are transformed when they attempt to exemplify Christian ideals. In fact there is no field of human activity or relationship that does not feel beneficial results from the practice of the teaching of Jesus. The home, the school, business, politics, social life, etc., all are made over when Jesus Christ gets into men.

Sometimes too much attention has been given merely to covering the field with a witness by voice without adequately illustrating Christian truth in practice. That is, new converts, accepting our testimony have not been taught how to apply Christian principles to the practical affairs of life. The result has been a poor conception of what the gospel really is and in too many instances a speedy return to their former condition. The time has come for us to give more careful attention to the intense cultivation of the fields occupied.

Real Religion

Some one has said that religion is man's attempt to find God. The world is full of such attempts but more and more it is confessed that the only satisfying revelation of God has been made by the Christian religion. The others either admit their failure by patening after Christianity or demonstrate it by the fruitage of the past and present. The adherents of many so-called religions, have groped in vain, are still on their quest, hoping to find God and in him the satisfaction their souls are demanding.

The critics of the Christian movement tell us that it is unethical to attempt to present Christianity to the adherents of other religions, that such a procedure is a form of proselyting which no Christian can approve. However, our Master did not send us only to the non-religious but to all men regardless of their religious affiliations.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones has demonstrated recently in his approach to the adherents of other religions that here is a fruitful field and perchance the results from the conversion of the leaders of other religions may be more far-reaching than from other efforts. In this field there is large opportunity for the missionary who can with sympathy and reason and positive Christian truth help those who are searching for God to find him in Christ.

The World's Greatest Need

A survey of all the Evangelical missions reveals the fact that there are areas within or near all our missions which are unoccupied and needy, and to which our churches should minister in spiritual things. The further fact is just as evident that because of insufficient manpower or inadequate equipment, there are unevangelized areas with the Christian zones which constitute a large part of our missionary task and some of these areas may be in large self-supporting churches in so-called Christian lands as well as in the smaller, weaker groups on supported fields. MISSIONS

Our Missionary Task: Scanning the Field John 4:31-42

By Dr. C. H. Stauffacher

Our Divine Command

When Jesus was here in the flesh he looked on the white robed, white turbaned multitude and said to his disciples that they should lift up their eyes and look on the field which was ready to be harvested. If he were here today, in a world with many times as many people and vastly more needy than were the people of Palestine in his day, it is certain he would ask us to lift up our eyes to behold the needy multitudes. As we begin this theme "Our Missionary Task", let us scan the missionary field. Our vision may be limited in many ways but if we try we may see the greatness of the task given us by our Master and may get a glimpse of the unfinished part of it.

A Problem in Geography

Our missionary task circles the world. Jesus said: "The field is the world." The early Christian Church attempted their world-task with courage and enthusiasm, and no small degree of success. Nearly two thousand years have gone by since the great commission was given but considered only in terms of geography the task is far from completion and in some sections not even begun. Our missionaries tell us of large areas still unoccupied. In them millions of people are waiting for the gospel.

A home missionary visited a new community and held a service. At the close a man came to him and asked: "Why didn't you come before?" No one was preaching the gospel in that place. In another community a group drove some distance to ask for our missionary to visit them and hold a meeting. They are telling us that the frontier has reached the Pacific ocean but there are hundreds of sections like these in our cities, villages and rural communities where people are without religious privileges. North America is still a great mission field. There are large geographical areas untouched, also large groups of underprivileged and neglected people in the United States and Canada and the same is true of Europe.

The hearts of the continents of Asia, Africa and South America are still unreached by any messenger of Christ. Great areas of land inhabited by many millions of desperately needy people are still unvisited by any missionary. Even in the parts of the world where the gospel has been preached there are whole sections which have not been adequately occupied. More than a hundred thousand villages in India are without a missionary. The rural part of Japan has been almost entirely neglected. Large parts of China are without the gospel. Multitudes in Asia have never heard of Christ. Millions in Africa have never had a chance to know him. Other millions in South America are in spiritual darkness. The mission-of Christianity as one's religion may mean little or nothing. It is the practice of the principles of Christianity that demands everything. The occupation of some of these fields demands new missionary recruits and enlarged budgets which seem impossible at this time of financial depression but others require only the application of resources already at hand.

The Logic of It All

The whole field of the world in its every aspect calls for the application of the teaching of Jesus to every individual and group relationship. No other religion promises to do that which needs to be done and which Christianity has demonstrated by numerous examples that it can do. The whole logic of human relationships, expressed in need, opportunity and ability calls for a new attempt to follow Jesus Christ and to share him with all the people of the world.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

We were told this was a token of appreciation for our services, and we greatly appreciate the gift. May God bless the givers.

The church everywhere needs to depend on God. Christ said the gates of hell should not prevail against it. When Belshazzar was in trouble he called the wise men. When Daniel was in trouble he called a prayer meeting and went to God and God showed Daniel the way out. Today the nations are in trouble and they seek man's guidance to lead them out. Sometimes the church makes the same mistake. Let the church go to God as did Daniel. This is the only way out of the depression. May God lead the way. H. W. ANDERSON.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

BRUSH VALLEY CHURCH Adrian, Pennsylvania

Besides giving the name of the church this time, we have added the location, for some folks have been sending mail to Brush Valley, Pennsylvania. There is such a town, but our church is nowhere near it and has no relation to it. The church is located in a beautiful valley, and there is plenty of brush, therefore the name. No matter where the location of the church, the Spirit of God can find it and bless it.

We have had a wonderful time of refreshing in the two weeks' revival held in September. The meeting began on September 10 with "Baby Day" in the Sunday school. The Cradle Roll Department had charge of the program and 22 babies were present, making a total attendance of 124, which broke the record for all time. The interesting thing about it was that the previous highest mark had been attained on a "Home Department Day." It looks as if we need the old folks and babies to break records for us! The pastor conducted the revival services, being assisted at times by some of the local ministers. We had fine weather, a good attendance, and a wonderful spirit manifested by the members. Cottage Prayer Meetings were held previous to the meeting and greatly contributed to its success. Twelve souls confessed Christ as Lord, of which six have already been baptized and received into the church. They were baptized, received, and took their first communion all in the same night. Others are awaiting baptism. Many of the converts came in family groups for which we are glad. There was a brother and two sisters in one family, and a father, three sons, and a daughter-in-law in another family. Three months before the meeting, this father, about 59 years of age, was given up to die by the doctors. He was not a Christian and never supported any church, but when facing death, called for the preacher. It was my privilege to lead him to the Lord, and when health returned, he did not forget his newly found Lord, but confessed him before men and insisted upon baptism despite a weakened physical condition.

The meeting closed with all day services on what we called "Harvest Home Day." To the Roll Call in the afternoon, just 97 members responded. The response to the appeal to bring the church finances up to date, was splendid, many of the members making heroic sacrifices for the church.

Another blessing that has come to this community is a new, hard surfaced road that takes them out of the mud, and makes travel much more pleasant. Since the advent of the road, we have one church service every Sunday, in place of the old method of two services every other Sunday. We rejoice in the victories won in other fields and are praying for the success of the Lord's work everywhere.

ROBERT D. CREES Pastor.

PLEASANT GROVE, IOWA

We feel that others may be interested to know that the work of the Lord is advancing in this field. We took up the pastorate here about the first of April on conditions that meet the financial situation here. The Lord has blessed our labors with these good people. The attendance has improved remarkably, and a splendid fellowship exists, the best I have seen in all my experience on this field, and this is my third period of service on this field. I have been called to remain another year beginning October first.

The Pleasant Grove church of today is not the Pleasant Grove church of 1919. Some have died, some have moved away and some have lost interest in the work of the Lord. But some are still faithful, thank God, and for that reason the work of the Lord still goes on. During these times of financial distress when calls have come for missions and for our benevolence work, these people have responded freely with their gifts. They responded to the Brethren's Home call and to the Educational Day offering, going over the top in both cases. I believe in the importance of having a college that stands for the fundamentals of the Word, and preach that to my people.

On August 13th we baptized three and received them into the church. We have four more to baptize and others just ready to come. There was a time when I thought the rural church had seen its day, but I have changed my mind. We have two rural churches in this community that would make most of the city churches step some, and Pleasant Grove church is one of them. Even though we have seen better days, yet what the church is doing is good considering conditions.

The church gave us a pleasant surprise recently. I live seven miles west of the church and on Friday night of last week (the 6th of October), the church people gave a surprise, bringing flour, potatoes, sugar, popcorn, canned goods, chickens and a truck load of fuel, which will last for many weeks.

THE CHURCH IN MY HOUSE Glover's Gap, West Virginia

We have been living on the "mountain top" spiritually this week. Brother Pressnell of Aleppo, Pennsylvania, just closed a four night series of original "Chart Bible Study" lectures in my home to the satisfaction of those who love the Word.

This evening we had a love feast which was a blessed service to all who took part. Sister Julia A. Murray, who is in poor health, was here too, and was anointed Thursday night, being 77 years old. She was greatly blessed.

Praise the Lord for these blessings which mean much to an isolated member.

MARY A. SNYDER.

THE BRETHERN CHURCH OF CUMBERLAND, MARYLAND

Rev. C. H. Wakeman, pastor, wishes to announce their evangelistic meeting, conducted by Dr. W. S. Bell, of Ashland, Ohio, beginning October 22 and continuing for two or three weeks, followed by the Love Feast. A great outpouring of the Holy Spirit is expected and many souls brought to the fold of God.

The church is growing and five more souls have been added to Christ's Kingdom since Brother Wakeman's return from Annual Conference.

Our pastor is doing wonderful work, not only from the pulpit and his daily contact with people, but over the radio as well. He gives an uplifting message directly from God's Word each Wednesday from 3:30 to 4:00 P. M. assisted by a mixed quartette. Those in the quartette are: Miss Odessa Ullery, Church chorister; Miss Edith Wakeman, his daughter, Church pianist; W. C. Cooper and Brother Wakeman. Mrs. G. C. Crowe, accompanist.

Remember the Cumberland church in your prayers.

MRS. AGNES BORDER,
Church Correspondent.

MT. OLIVET, DELAWARE

It has been a long time since I have written anything for our church in Delaware, not because we had nothing to write about but because I simply neglected to write. I have taken in eight by baptism since my last report. Six of these made a public confession under the preaching of Brother Christiansen but at that time were not baptized. I baptized two the last trip I made to Delaware. When I returned from National Conference I baptized a sick man who on his sick bed confessed Christ to Brother Christiansen.

I baptized his wife and three of his children several years ago. This little church holds together better than any other church I know of that has been neglected. I think this can be attributed to the wonderful testimony meetings after the Sunday school session Sunday afternoons and also after their Christian Endeavor Society each Sunday night.

We expect to hold two revivals this fall and winter in Delaware. One in an old church, almost abandoned, ten miles from Ocean View and thirty miles from Mt. Olivet, and the other one after the holidays at Mt. Olivet.

I would much rather have an outside evangelist to hold these meetings, especially at our own church, but owing to the most terrific storm ever known here, that almost totally destroyed the crops, this added to the general depression for more than three years makes it impossible to finance extra meetings. We expect to hold them free of charge, or almost so.

It seems remarkable how the Lord answers prayer as I have had a pressing call for a revival less than half a mile from my home from the Methodist church, which I will hold, beginning the first Sunday in November.

A score of Methodist preachers would have been glad to hold this meeting, yet they gave me a unanimous call. This will enable me to hold the two meetings in Delaware without being greatly cramped financially, and also enable me to do my fall work at home. For this I am thankful. Will write more later.

arate and important ways of committing crimes were taught in detail!

SEX-DELINQUENCY and the Movies

The evidence here should be read by parents from the book. It is really too appalling to print in this department of the Evangelist. The investigators found that not only were a large proportion of the delinquency problems due directly to the influence of the films seen, but that the theater itself, with its darkness and partial seclusion, provided a place where children actually practiced the sexual irregularities to which they were stimulated by the pictures.

A WORD to Parents

Those who, after reading this brief review, are still convinced that the movie is a proper place for their children, should read the book itself. The publishers are The MacMillan Co. Most libraries should have it. Those who are unconvinced after reading the book are not quite fit to be parents.

OUR LITTLE READERS

REAL BROTHERHOOD
Norman C. Schlichter

Jim Thompson could hardly believe his own eyes when he saw Scotty Boyes eating cooked potato parings as they sat together at their noon lunch near one of the stone crushers at the limestone quarry where they had worked together for a good while.

He told some of the other "boys," as the workmen always called each other.

"What do you say we ask him about it, Jim?" said George Allison, who lived closest to Scotty, and who knew him better than any of the other fellows.

"Suppose you feel him out on the way home this evening," said Jim.

Scotty always rode home with George in his flivver. George's place was beyond Scotty's about a half mile in the country.

"Well, George, we are up against it for the first time. Both my boys (Royse was just past 16, and Harry not yet 18) were laid off down at the steel mill three months ago, and they've been everywhere hunting work and they 'just ain't no such thing' hereabouts. You know that. And you know I've a good-sized flock to feed—five of them besides these two big boys and wife and me. So I've just had to eat bread and potato parings the last few days. This three days-a-week shift instead of six that've been on now for the third month has brought me to it. We are just up against it for the first time since we were married twenty-two years ago."

This was Scotty's story when George felt him out.

"Well, why didn't you say something?" said George. "The boys will all club together and stand right by you, and the boss will feel hurt about this when he finds this out. You know he likes to help everybody in every way he can."

"Yes, I know that, but he has got plenty to worry about with us fellows only on three days. That is nearly killin' him, I bet. And as for askin' you fellows for anything, we just can't do it, George," said Scotty.

"Shucks! What's wrong with you? What are we here for?" George parried, good-naturedly.

"No. We'll manage somehow. The gardens are coming along fast now. We'll soon have onions and lettuce. I can make a whole meal off bread and young onions if I have to," said Scotty. "Well, here's my place, George. So long, old boy."

"So long, Scotty," said George.

His supper was over. That was Tuesday evening. George soon had the crew rounded up at his house, and it didn't take the boys long to agree on a plan when they all heard about the potato parings. They all agreed to keep strictly "mum," too, about them.

The next day, George, their chief spokesman, told their foreman about their plan, and about Scotty's hard luck, but not a word about the parings.

It was that each of the boys lay off one day more every third week so that Scotty could have his regular six-day shift back.

"Well, you men are sure a good bunch," said Mr. Jordan. "I am sure that the 'Super' will O. K. the plan."

"Don't tell Scotty who started this, Mr. Jordan. We want him to think it came from all the fellows together," said George.

"O. K. I got you, Allison."

That Wednesday evening just as Scotty was climbing into George's flivver to go home Mr. Jordan called, "Scotty, just a minute, please."

"Yes, sir," Scotty answered. He was trembling all over for fear he was going to be asked to knock off another day a week since he was the last man of that crew to be taken on for a long time.

"You report back tomorrow morning for your regular six-day shift again from now on," was Mr. Jordan's order.

Talk about a happy man! There was one in George's flivver. No, there were two, and one wasn't much happier than the other.

When Scotty came back to work the next day there were no potato parings in his dinner pail.—The Congregationalist.

INDIANA DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Forty-sixth Indiana District Conference of Brethren churches convened at Shipshewana Lake, Tuesday, October 3, 1933, at 7:15 P. M. Moderator S. M. Whetstone was in charge of conference, and Rev. Delbert Whitner was in charge of music. After the singing of hymns Frank Gehman read the Scripture lesson from Acts 4:1-31 and led in prayer. The address of welcome was given by Rev. A. T. Wirick. To this a number of delegates responded. Following this another hymn was sung.

Announcements were made by the Moderator and committees were announced as follows:

Credential Committee—R. F. Porte, Freeman Ankrum, Milt Wysong, G. L. Mans.

Committee on Committees—G. W. Rench, H. F. Stuckman, D. A. C. Teeter.

A duet entitled "It's Real" was rendered by Mrs. Clem Garwood and Rev. C. D. Whitmer of the First church, South Bend.

The Conference Sermon was brought by the Vice-moderator, Dr. R. F. Porte. It was based upon Isaiah 28:23-29 and centered around the ideas of obedience and loyalty to God.

The benediction was pronounced by Rev. D. B. Flora.

Wednesday Morning

The session opened with the singing of a hymn. Dr. G. W. Rench led in Scripture exposition and devotions for the hour, speaking on the subject, "Squaring Our Lives by the Divine Model", basing his remarks on the "Our Father".

The Credential Committee reported four ministers as having presented proper credentials from other conferences to this and having paid their fifty cent membership fee as follows:

George Pontius, H. E. Eppley, W. B. King, L. V. King.

The Committee also reported 53 lay delegates. The report was accepted and the committee continued.

The Committee on committees brought in a partial report which was accepted. (Complete record of conference organization is appended to this report).

The report of the District Mission Secretary was read by Mrs. W. I. Duker. Motion was made and adopted to accept this report as partial because of the influx of further funds making the report incomplete.

The report of the District Mission Treasurer was read by Brother C. G. Wolf. Motion made and adopted to accept this as a partial report for same reason as above.

Dr. R. F. Porte acquainted conference with the circumstances of Brother J. W. Clark and family. The moderator set the night services of October 4 as the time when the needs of this worthy family would be further considered.

The Statistician's report was read and accepted. (Report appended).

The Vice-Moderator was called to the platform to preside. After the singing of a song Rev. S. M. Whetstone delivered the forceful moderator's address. It was moved and adopted to have the address presented to the Brethren Evangelist for publication.

A motion for adjournment was entertained, a song was sung, following which the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Paul Davis.

The Credential committee presented a further report bringing the total of lay delegates to 89. The Secretary reported 3 more ministerial delegates bringing that report to a total of 22. This made a grand total of 111 delegates which was 3 more than the number in attendance in 1932. The Credential Committee's report was accepted.

A further report by Committee on Committees was accepted.

The Committee on the Change of Conference Time presented a resolution proposing an amendment to Article II of By-Laws of Indiana District Conference which reads as follows:

"Article II shall read

Section I. Conference shall convene the week following the Young People's Training Camp in July and shall be held each alternate year at Shippshewana Brethren Retreat, days of conference to be determined by the conference executive committee.

Section 2. The program of the above conference shall be determined by the officers of District Conference and the Program Committee of Bible Conference.

(Signed) F. C. Vanator, (Chairman); A. T. Wirick, G. L. Maus."

The resolution was referred to the afternoon session.

During interim of balloting for nominees for Moderator the Resolutions Committee reported:

"Inasmuch as God in his wise providence has dealt kindly with us in the year that is past and has permitted us to gather together again in District conference and inasmuch as our gathering together amid the beautiful and pleasant surroundings of Lake Shippshewana calls to our memory the ministry of our Lord by the blue waters of Galilee,

Therefore be it resolved:

First: That we render thanks unto God for his many blessings and for the privilege of our meeting together in this place.

of church workers get least attention and smallest praise—the teachers in the Sunday school.

"May I propose something new for all the churches of North America,—a nation-wide celebration of the service of the Sunday school teachers?"

"My thought is a simple one, but it will take a year of large-scale planning and activity to carry it out. All denominations, Sunday school associations and local congregations would have to enlist in the enterprise. The endorsement and approval of public officials, educators, editors and other leaders in national life would be sought.

"In a paragraph, the plan is that, upon a night in some week to be agreed upon, not less than a year hence, there should be held in every community in the land the largest and most imposing demonstration possible of the nation's debt to that great host of unsung, unsalaried servants of God and of man, the Sunday school teachers; who have modestly carried on, week after week, year after year, the priceless and immeasurable work of holding aloft before the youth of the land the teachings of the Bible. Their usefulness has been beyond any man's power to measure.

"Indirectly, such a spectacular tribute to the Sunday school teachers would do more to arouse interest in the Sunday school, and to recruit into its membership the millions now without any religious training whatsoever, than any other method possible. By directing attention to the functions of the teachers, and by expressing in every way possible appreciation of their work, the whole picture of the Sunday school would be brought anew before the public eye.

"Existing denominational and interdenominational agencies should welcome the opportunity to do the promotional work for this great and unique celebration."

"Developing Boy Evangelists and Missionaries," "Catching and Leading Boys by Means of Good Stories," "Playing with the Boys of our Churches," "Christianizing Discipline for Our Boys," "Training Our Boys to Worship."

After proper application to the National Brotherhood has been made each local unit will be issued a Certificate of Membership. A complete set up of promotional plans will be mailed to each pastor just as soon as the National Committee completes the formulation of those plans.

We want to give ourselves to the Boys and Young Men of our church believing they are worth more to our Lord and his church than all the energy and life we spend in the gift.

Berlin, Pennsylvania.

Second: That we express our thanks to Brother Wirick and to all who assisted him for their untiring efforts in behalf of Shipshewana and for the wonderful hospitality extended.

Third: That we commend our district co-operation in the National Program of Evangelism and urge the fullest cooperation of all local churches in the carrying out of such a program.

Fourth: That we take note of the report of our District Mission president and that we carry back to our churches the seriousness of the situation that is facing them and that we urge a renewed interest in District Missions on the part of Brethren people, both by their prayers and by financial support.

Fifth: That we commend the efforts that are being put forth in behalf of the Boys' Work and that we recommend to our churches its hearty support.

Sixth: That we give thanks unto God for the privilege of having with us a missionary on furlough, Miss Florence Bickel, and that we honor her for her earnestness and faithfulness in the service of her Master.

Seventh: That we commend the various organizations of the church for their activities and for their faithfulness in the work of the church. Signed:

G. L. Maus, George C. Pontius, W. B. King.

The report of the Resolutions Committee was accepted and the committee discharged.

Thursday Afternoon—Christian Endeavor Session

The first session of the afternoon was presided over by the Vice-Moderator. After the singing of a song, F. C. Vanator led in asking God's blessing on conference.

Mrs. Joyce Saylor, National Superintendent of Junior and Intermediate Departments of Christian Endeavor, was introduced as the second speaker and spoke on the need of Junior and Intermediate societies in every church. L. E. Lindower, the third speaker, brought a message on "Meeting the Challenges of Our Modern Youth". Session closed with a duet entitled, "All the Way to Calvary," rendered by Mrs. Clem Garwood and Rev. C. D. Whitmer.

The male quartet under the direction of C. D. Whitmer favored conference with another special.

Moderator Whetstone then presented the speaker of the hour, Dr. K. M. Monroe, who came as the representative of the National Sunday School Association. Dr. Monroe's splendid message had to do with the teaching work of the Sunday school and its relationship to the church.

Proposed amendment to Article II of Manual of Procedure received its second reading. After discussion motion was put to amend the amendment to read, "Conference shall convene the third week in June." The motion passed. Original motion was now before the house. A standing vote was called for and the motion passed.

The District Mission Board presented the following resolution:

"We, hereby recommend to the District Conference assembled, the discontinuance of District Missions under the present board, and the consolidation of all district mission work under present Home Mission Board.

"This recommendation is due to present presumed duplication of mission work and is in keeping with tendencies toward simplification of methods and increase of efficiency. Signed,

"W. I. Duker, Secretary."

Motion to adopt was made and seconded but Moderator declared no vote because so few delegates appeared ready to vote on the question. A motion was made to table the matter until next year; motion to table carried.

Budget of District Mission Board was read and accepted.

Committee on Location recommended the Corinth Brethren church at Twelve Mile, Indiana as place of 1934 conference. This recommendation was accepted by conference.

Conference Treasurer's report was read and accepted.

The Secretary's minutes were read and approved.

Conference was dismissed with benediction by L. E. Lindower.

FRANK GEHMAN, Secretary.

Statistician's Report

Thirty Indiana churches reported in time to include their reports in the annual statistics. These churches reported thirty church houses being used. No union houses, halls or school houses are being used. Thirteen parsonages are owned by them and other property such as small buildings, sheds, extra lots, kitchens, etc.

Last year there were added by letter 39 members, by relation 26, by baptism 193, making a total of 264 additions. However, there were lost through death 75 members, through letter 50 and through dismissal 8, or a total of 133 which leaves a net gain of only 113. These churches have a total of 2,414 male members, and 3,107 female members, or a grand total of 5,521. Although 20 revivals were reported being held, only one Bible conference was reported.

Financial valuations were sometimes written rather low. Nevertheless church houses, lots and fixtures are valued at $318,575. No interest is held in union buildings. Parsonages, 13 in number, are valued at a total of $35,750, and other property at $1,900, making a total property value of $356,225.

In church finances more is paid out for pastor's salaries than for any one other item. This is as it should be for are not workers more important than the equipment? There was paid to the pastors of these churches last year $22,649.12 in salaries. Another $959.14 went for evangelistic services, while only $10 was paid out for Bible conferences. $429.36 went for improvements, and $8,646.13 for current expenses. The Home Mission cause secured $1,026.56 and the Foreign Mission $2,893.39. This district contributed $165.46 to the support of superannuated ministers and $186.43 to the Brethren's Home. $54.50 went as gifts to Ashland College and $166.00 to the Publishing Co. District Missions benefited only to the extent of $544.55. Other expenses to an additional $868.98.

This brings the total expenditures reported to the sum of $38,599.62, leaving in the treasuries at the end of the fiscal year monies to the amount of $631.74.

86 deacons were reported and 83 deaconesses. All told 47 elders and ministers were reported in this district.

2 churches included no report of finances and one reported only the pastor's salary by way of finances. 4 reported revised membership lists.

FRANK GEHMAN,
Acting Statistician.

OPINIONS OF OUR READERS

AN APPRECIATION

Dear Brethren of the Publishing House:

I want you folks in the Publishing House to know how I appreciate your efforts to disseminate the gospel truth among the Brethren. I am particularly pleased with the "Adult" and "Teachers' Quarterlies and the "Brethren Evangelist." I never throw my "Evangelists" away but try to put them into the hands of others to read them. However, I am meeting up with a problem. After I have cut out and filed away the sections of the paper I wish to keep for future use, I often find the magazine so mutilated that I would be ashamed to pass it on to another! Our denomination can well be proud of its publications, and the future promises even greater things in a large combined magazine.

THE Bear and the Eagle

President Roosevelt invites Russia to discuss the possibilities of ending the "present abnormal relations" which have existed between these two countries for fifteen years. As a result, Maxim Litvinoff will come to America to negotiate with the President. The wily Litvinoff, who is not handicapped by "capitalistic morality", has out-manuevered all the European diplomats for years, and they are not children at the game themselves. Our own statesmen will do well to examine with a cold and cynical eye whatever he may have to offer.

For fifteen years the United States has refused to recognize the Soviet government, one of the main reasons being the refusal of the Communists to honor their financial obligations. President Roosevelt's readiness to discuss recognition with them is not due to any change of heart on their part. But so many other nations have calmly repudiated their debts to us that to be consistent we must either recognize Russia or else break off relations with most of the other powers. In other words, Russia has not become better. The other nations have become worse. Promises mean little.

AFTER us, the Deluge"

The chief motive of Russia in sending Litvinoff is that she needs desperately many things that America has for sale. And our motive in being willing to listen to Litvinoff's proposals is that we want to sell the things we cannot sell at home.

Suppose that recognition is given Russia and her vast areas are opened to American trade. What will happen?

First, it will enable Russia to develop her industrial program to the point where she will be able to make what she needs in the next war. And that war will surely come, for Communism has never given up the purpose of making a Soviet world. Russia is getting ready.

Second, Russia will not be able to purchase what we have to sell unless the United States loans the money to buy our goods or guarantees loans made by our private bankers. Judging from the past, there is no certainty that we shall be able to collect these loans unless we wish to go to war.

Third, the moment Russia acquires the machinery and technique necessary to supply her own needs, which may not require very long, she will at once cut off our market. Then America, with industry geared up to supply the Russian market, will suddenly find herself with closed factories and unemployed men walking the streets.

All these things are well known to those who think, but human greed is very stupid. The cynical slogan is "Get the money while you can. After us, the deluge."

President Roosevelt and his advisors, before they sit down across the table from the Communist Litvinoff, could do nothing better than to read prayerfully chapters 38 and 39 of the book of Ezekiel.

THE Failure of Internationalism

America stands today at the parting of the ways. Industrially, we must choose either to search out new foreign markets for surpluses, or else put our house in such order that we shall become economically self-sufficient. If we choose the path of export trade, we shall be at the mercy of our customers. High tariffs, a war, or the development of foreign production—any of these possibilities may at any time cut off our markets abroad and bring an economic depression. The events of the past few years should teach us that there is no economic salvation in international conferences and agreements. There is no government in the world that can guarantee to make its promises good. When the date of payment comes due, the government may be no longer in the hands of those who signed the promise.

The policy of economic self-sufficiency may seem a backward step to the international idealists, but in the light of present day events it would seem to be the most expedient course and less likely to cause wide-spread suffering by derangement. A nation which has become self-sufficient is not so likely to be drawn into wars. We have been drawn into two great wars trying to defend our commerce on the high seas.

National isolation, economically may not be ideal, but it seems to be the safest in our kind of a world. This seems to have been recognized in the divine plan for Israel. They were to be separate from the nations. And there is a hint of the same thing in Acts 17:26 where Paul declares concerning all the nations that God has determined "the bounds of their habitation."

The age of internationalism is not yet come. It cannot come until there is set up an international authority which will do two things: first, truly and impartially represent the genuine interests of all nations; and second, have the power to enforce its decisions against all rebels. Such an authority will be set up when our Lord comes to establish his Kingdom on earth. "HE SHALL JUDGE AMONG THE NATIONS."

THE International "Tragedy"

Least some things I have written about the failure of internationalism may seem overly severe, I offer the following quotation from Gerard Chaput. Under the caption of "The International Comedy" in the Saturday Evening Post, he pillories the recent economic conference:

"Called in the name of economic peace, virtually every country intrigued, bluffed and fought to keep and even strengthen her trade weapons while she deprived her rivals of theirs. Each one identified international economic morality with her own interests. All sent out propaganda in an unending stream to deceive or discredit their competitors. When this or that nation balked at an unfair proposal, pharisaical adversaries pictured her as callously blocking humanity's recovery from indelible sufferings. And while these struggles raged, eloquent statesmen, incorrigibly optimistic or hypnotized into a feeling of sincerity by the sound of their voices, denounced selfish nationalism!"

This is only another and longer way of saying what the prophet Daniel said—"They shall speak lies at one table." (11:

27) And he adds "But it shall not prosper." Men are learning this, but slowly.

HITLER and the Pope

With apparently the entire nation supporting him fanatically, Chancellor Hitler walked out on the League of Nations and served notice that Germany was done until given absolute equality with the other member nations.

The Papal Nuncio to Bavaria said to Hitler, "For a long time I could not understand you. Today I do."

Whatever the Nuncio meant by these words, it is safe to say that the Pope approved, for Papal nuncios do not speak on important matters without the mind of their royal master. But here is a suggestion. The Roman Hierarchy approves the dictator form of government, for it is easier to deal with dictators than with parliaments. And again, the Pope has never wholly liked the present League of Nations. His voice did not carry sufficient weight in its deliberations. And the Pope knows that with the breaking down of the League's prestige, Europe may turn increasingly toward the strong man of Rome for the settlement of its problems. And the Pope has influence with Mussolini. Thus the center of internationalism moves inevitably from Geneva toward the city of the "seven hills" where the Great Harlot sitteth.

THE Fall of the Preachers

A recent book entitled "Preachers Present Arms" makes the startling statement that all but 90 of the 200,000 preachers in the United States became "jingoos" during the late world war.

I have an idea that in the Brethren Churches alone more than 90 preachers could be found who did not become jingoos during the war. But even when discounted heavily, the statement is a sad commentary on the ministry.

Today nearly all the preachers in all denominations are thundering against war, warning the government they will take no part in it. How many will stick to their convictions when the next war comes? The memory of man is short.

Gospel Baptism a Note in Our Message

The church is striking out strong on evangelism, and this it should do. Nothing is more important than that every disciple of Christ, and most especially every minister of the Word, shall be overcome anew with the conviction that the "good news" must be told, and told persistently and with power. The primary note of that message is now as it was in the beginning, Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. In the same breath it is necessary to call out, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. After that the herald must tell of the necessity of baptism. These three steps are bound up together, essential parts of God's great plan. And no man has any authority for separating them, or for proclaiming one and neglecting another, or for stressing one to the disparagement of another. Right along with faith and repentance goes baptism. It is a divine requirement; it stands at the very door of the kingdom; it is a vital part of the Gospel, and the faithful and well-instructed messenger will not omit it.

Don't Apologize

There are various ways of approaching the subject of baptism in a helpful manner, but one of those ways is not the way of apology. No gospel messenger has any right to apologize for any portion of the message. He who does so betrays either a lack of confidence in the wisdom of God or a lack of faith in the integrity of the Word. His business is to proclaim the message as it is delivered unto him, and seek to do it in a way that will carry conviction. That cannot be done by introducing the subject with an apology, rather it will have the opposite effect. And he who tones down his message or weakens the force of its requirements, is not faithful to him who gave him his commission.

There will be little temptation to apologize for speaking of baptism, if we are really convinced of its great importance and filled with understanding of its vital significance. We should be assured that it is no mere form; not just an initiatory rite into the church and nothing more, but that it is in very truth an ordinance of God, a vehicle set apart by divine wisdom for the conveyance of divine truth, and that the form of the conveyor cannot be changed without affecting the truth conveyed. We must know and believe that the truth with which God charged the church in the baptismal formula is of the most vital sort, and that no one can afford to tamper with its purity or endanger its continuance, by presuming to change or to do away with the formula. There is every reason to defend, and to speak boldly for, such a commitment.

Necessity of New Birth

Gospel baptism bears witness to the necessity of the new birth by reason of its immersion in water. It symbolizes the burial of the old man of sin and the rising into newness of life in Christ Jesus. That is just what Jesus declared to be necessary, in his talk with Nicodemus: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Again, replying to Nicodemus' inquiry as to how that could be, Jesus spoke very definitely of the necessity both of the outward sign and of the inner experience, saying: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:3,5). The rising out of water is suggestive of a birth, and helps to bring to the mind with forcefulness the all-important truth, that the carnal man must needs be renewed by the operation of the Spirit before he can stand in the presence of God.

Reality of New Life

Gospel baptism also symbolizes the guarantee that the renewal of life offered in Christ is real. In immersion we symbolize the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, which is the seal and surety of our resurrection from death in sin into new life in him. The likeness of our resurrection out of the baptismal waters to the rising of Christ from the dead is set forth by Paul in his epistle to the Romans: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection" (Rom. 6:3-5). And the reality of the blessed renewal that we are said to have in the Lord Jesus stands or falls with his resurrection. Hear the apostle again: "If Christ be not raised your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins." But there was no doubt about it in Paul's mind. It was a glorious certainty, for he exclaimed a moment later: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept" (1 Cor. 15:17, 20).

Christ's Sacrifice Voluntary

Again, we see that Gospel baptism suggests by its forward action the fact that Christ went willingly to his death that we might have life in his name. His was a voluntary sacrifice offered for the sins of many. Jesus said, "I lay down my life, . . . No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself" (John 10:17, 18). The voluntary character of his act is indicated by the manner of his death, for we read that "he bowed his head and gave up the ghost" (John 19:30). And speaking of baptism, Paul says, we are "baptized into his death," and again, "We have been planted together in the likeness of his death," (Rom. 6:4, 5). That is according to the bowing mode, or forward action. To bow the head suggests submission, surrender, yielding, and that is the proper attitude to display in baptism, and at other times, too, for that matter. It is well that we are reminded by the bowed head of Christ's voluntary act, that we may the more readily be induced to adopt that attitude toward him.

Honors the Trinity

And finally, Gospel baptism recognizes the threefold ministry of the triune God and honors each person of the blessed Trinity. That is involved in the baptismal formula. When we say, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," the very words require a triple action. We cannot truly obey the commission without it. There are three names; three persons, and there must be three acts, one for each member of the Godhead. Each person of the Trinity has his own name and work, and they can only be properly honored and recognized in that supremely important hour of baptism as each is given a separate and distinct part in the baptismal act. A trinitarian group of people, such as Brethren people are, cannot afford to fail, nor will they fail, to give honor unto each of the blessed persons in the Holy Godhead. Neither dare such a people forget the fact that Gospel baptism is a definite part of their message and that they are under high obligation to proclaim it.

Some Still Undeceived by Wet Propaganda

It is encouraging to read now and then of a great business concern that continues to have both conscience and business sense in spite of the blinding liquor propaganda that has swept the country off its feet. The following is the kind of news that is not given to the people by the daily press. But if the press agents were not subsidized by wet money they would recognize the news value of a line such as this: "N. W. Ayer & Son, Inc., Refuse Million-Dollar Contract with Manufacturer of Alcoholic Drinks," The N.

W. Ayer & Son, Inc., is one of the country's greatest advertising firms. The following statement by its president, Mr. Wilfred W. Fry, is worthy of being quoted:

We have cancelled our ten-year-old agreement with the Canadian Dry Ginger Ale, Inc., a highly-valued client, following that client's decision to engage in the manufacture and distribution of beer and whiskey after repeal. We regret, of course, the conditions which necessitated this step, but on a strictly business basis we are certain we are right.

The return of liquor will divert an important share of America's mass purchasing power from essential commodities. This diversion may run as high as twenty per cent, based on pre-prohibition experience and the trend of economic and sociological conditions since the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted.

The moral question involved in repeal can be left out entirely, but from a purely business standpoint, we still cannot see a very happy result in the return of liquor.

It is true that revenue from alcohol will contribute many millions of dollars to Federal, State and local treasuries, but this contribution in the main, will be made by that class of the public which can least afford to make it. This was true before prohibition, and it will unquestionably be true when prohibition is repealed.

The liquor business has not changed. When the thirty-sixth state has been lined up, it will be run by the same old crowd in the same old way.

Many decades ago my firm adopted a policy of not advertising alcohol. The reason for this is simply that, as an advertising agency we must identify ourselves so closely with the affairs of our clients that we are, in effect, a part of their business.

In the case of a client who manufactures or distributes alcoholic beverages, this would create for us an impossible situation, since we would then be in the position of making alcohol attractive to the youth of this country. Furthermore, we do not wish to classify our other clients with the liquor business.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

By personal contact with Brother Ray Klingensmith, pastor of the church at Ankenytown, Ohio, we learn that he received two confessions of Christ at the regular Sunday evening services on October 22. At the morning service Prof. A. J. McClain assisted him in the ordination of deacons.

Brother Raymond Blood writes of a successful evangelistic campaign recently held in his church at Garwin, Iowa, under the leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller. There were thirty-nine confessions and reconsecrations, twelve of which were first time confessions. Great interest was created in the community by the meetings and the church was strongly stirred to new zeal.

Christian Endeavorers will find on their page a report from the society of Peru, Indiana, giving officary and goals for the new year. That is a fine way to start in the new year. Now let some others tell us who's who in your group and what you have set before yourselves to do. Also, we have this week a splendid statement from the Intermediate Superintendent of the Dayton Christian Endeavor society, Miss Susie Snyder, who works on the sound theory that interest is generated by the placing of responsibility.

The work at Elkhart, Indiana, goes forward under the capable leadership of Brother H. F. Stuckman. This people displays a vigor and an aggressiveness that is inspiring; not even the depression is allowed to stop them in the work they have set before themselves. Rally Day saw 411 in attendance at the Sunday school. The prayer meeting continues to be largely attended and that likely accounts for the "courage" which this church possesses in large measure, and concerning which our correspondent rightly observes to be the big need of the brotherhood.

Word came from Dr. Bame, who was cooperating last week with Brother E. S. Coffman of the Church of the Brethren in a revival at Columbus, Ohio, that thirteen souls had made the good confession, and that the attendance and interest were good. The editor had the privilege of spending three days with these people and cooperating with the pastor, Brother D. R. Murray in opening the campaign. When we were compelled to leave the field, Brother R. D. Barnard of Dayton came to give his cooperation to Evangelist Coffman. We shall likely have a more complete report later.

Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the church at Waterloo, Iowa, writes that the Lord's work is thriving there, that they had no

"summer slump" and that they are in preparation for an evangelistic campaign with the pastor to do the preaching. During his first year as pastor of this church forty-nine souls have been added to the church. He also makes mention of two members of his church—Dr. and Mrs. Owen McCartneysmith, who are both capable and consecrated workers, we are assured. Brother McCartneysmith is a fluent speaker and Sister McCartneysmith is a fine soloist and choir directress. They are willing to give themselves in evangelistic service to the brotherhood anywhere they may be needed. We hope they may be used by our churches somewhere.

We have a brief report of the Illiokota Conference recently held at Milledgeville, Illinois and an officary of the district, supplied by the conference secretary, Brother C. C. Grisso, who was re-elected to that position. There are other districts that are stronger in numbers, but none stronger in loyalty to all the interests of the brotherhood. We congratulate the Brethren of this district for their well-balanced interest and the attention given to the various departments of our work. They plan to stress evangelism with special zeal, in accordance with the national Program of Evangelism. The 1934 meeting will be held at Leon, Iowa, and the pastor of that church, Brother Miles Taber, was chosen as moderator, while Brother E. M. Riddle was selected as vice moderator.

In a personal communication from Miss Johanna Nielsen, who supplies us with the splendid address by Brother Juan Pisani, which is published on the Mission page this week, she makes this comment: "This evening (September 21) we begin a series of meetings with Brother Farre, which we trust will mean much to the church here. He has just held meetings at Ralico and Huinca Renanco, and splendid reports have come from there. Brother Sickle has been engaged in evangelistic work in the various churches, for several months, finishing this work at Tancacha, October 1, and then he comes here (Rio Cuarto) to begin his pastoralate at this place, while Brother Romanenghi takes the evangelistic field. We covet an interest in the prayers of the brotherhood that this summer may see great things for Christ in Argentina."

Brother J. W. Clark of South Bend, Indiana, passed to his reward on October 12, 1933, after a protracted illness, according to the obituary written by Dr. R. F. Porte in this issue. It was not our privilege to know Brother Clark intimately, but we met him on several occasions at state and national conferences and our impression of him was a most favorable one. We saw in him a zeal for the whole gospel and a devotion to the proclamation of it that we judge was the secret of his success in the ministry. We also like the very brotherly attitude he displayed in his contacts with others. We are glad to have known him and join with those who knew him more intimately in expressing a sense of loss at the departure of so fine a soul. May God comfort his companion who, we are told, was scarcely separated from him an hour, day or night during the last six months of his life.

It was a very successful revival that the Brethren of the Homer church, about seventeen miles from Ashland, experienced recently, under the evangelistic leadership of Dr. J. C. Beal and the pastoral leadership of Brother Floyd Shieri, a devoted student pastor. There twenty-seven made decisions during the campaign, sixteen first time confessions; ten came into the church by letter and baptism, and one life-work decision was made. Though the preaching services were well attended, and fraught with keen interest, the real strength of the campaign seems to have rested in Dr. Beal's skill in taking the Gospel to the people in their homes. That method not only fitted well into that particular community situation, but ought to work in any community, because it is the method largely employed by Christ and has been demonstrated as effective in many a city parish. We do not believe that less attention should be given to the proclamation of the message from the pulpit, but more to the carrying of the truth of the Word to those who will not come to the church to receive it. Jesus said, "Go ye," and that means to the nearby neighbors and friends as well as to the heathen in far away lands. In our contact with these people we found the pastor highly spoken of for his faithful service among them.

Present Day Trends in the Light of Prophecy--The NRA

—By Charles H. Ashman—

Address before Pennsylvania District Conference Ministerium and Requested Published in The Brethren Evangelist.

The only correct interpretation of events and conditions is through the Prophetscope of Predictive Prophecy. We are told by our Lord to be able "to discern the signs of the times." In this night of sin, sickness, and sorrow, we have "the more sure word of prophecy" as the "light that shineth in this dark time." It will shine "until the day dawn." "We are not of the night that the day shall o'ertake us as a thief in the night." We are "Children of the light". "Watchman, what of the night?" "The night is far spent, the day is at hand."

In the light of Biblical Prophecy, there is revealed a mammoth commercial octopus heading up in the authority of government, eventually controlled by the Anti-Christ. A partial fulfillment of this forecast is possible in this age, but the complete fulfillment will await the Tribulation period. The Church will never see this complete fulfillment for she will be raptured before that time. But, the church will live into the closing days of this age and witness the beginnings, the preparation for this Commercial Octopus. The most striking prophecy foretelling this is Revelation 13:16-18. In this Scripture, there is foretold a time when all industry will come under ONE HEAD. There will be a Commercial Trust controlled by the government, ruled over by a supreme Dictator. Also a visible emblem will be demanded of all who buy or sell. There are other Scriptural Prophecies which forecast the same Trust of Trusts.

Witness the gradual development toward this condition. Until recent years, there was nothing to match this in history. Commerce was an affair of families. Manufacture means "to make by hand." But, there came an industrial revolution. The forces of nature have been harnessed to do man's work. The mighty resources and forces of coal, steam, and electricity have been made our slaves. Companies, corporations, and trusts have been formed. These absolutely control natural resources, production, output, etc. Now, Governments are going into business, not the business of making laws of justice and righteousness, but in promoting, controlling industry. Governments are fast becoming Business Dictators. Theodore Roosevelt will go down in history as the President who fought TRUSTS. Franklin Roosevelt will go down in history as attempting to form a MAMMOTH TRUST. The Chicago Tribune in an editorial wrote, "Our government is failing. It is unsuited to us. It assumes we are honest. We are not! It assumes that men of integrity will be elected to office. Such seldom are! We are a people fitted for a Dictator form of government. We are spineless, lazy, dumb, dishonest, cowardly, unfitted to rule ourself." This is a terrible indictment. But, it appears to be true in present day developments. America is demanding to "be like the nations round about." Israel cried, "Give us a king!" America is crying, "Give us a Dictator!" We are not drifting into a dictator form of government, but rushing pell-mell into it. Germany has her Hitler. Politically, industrially, and religiously, he is a Dictator. Liberty of conscience, liberty of the press, and religious liberty has been banished from Germany. Hitler says, "Henceforth all individual action must cease." Also,

"I demand the strictest and blindest obedience." They are coining a "German Christianity" over there. Italy has her Mussolini as a Dictator. The world gasped when he first began to exercise his authority, but now it appears tame. A European authority recently said, "The small nations of Europe will eventually cluster around one sole Statesman capable of leadership—Mussolini." And now, America is rushing forth into the same form of government. Foster, Communistic Leader in America foretells, "From Capitalism into Communism, through the intermediate stages of Socialism, that is the way America is headed." America is thinking RED. There is a RED MENACE abroad in our land. The "New Deal" is a Socialistic Experiment." Our Government and Land are being surrendered to a Brain Trust composed of pseudo-scientific super-intellectuals. Congress has become a rubber stamp. The Constitution has become a scrap of paper. There are those bold to charge that at least six of the members of the Brain Trust are rank Socialists merging into Communism. Columbia University, a hotbed of atheism, seemed to be controlling our government and moving us about like pawns on a chessboard in their naturalistic, unnatural experiments. We are not headed toward a Dictator form of government, we had one crammed down our throat overnight.

Now, let us study the NRA in the light of Prophecy. We are in most hearty accord with every effort to give work to the unemployed. At one time last winter over 60% of the wage earners of my church had no means of support. It is the inalienable right of every American citizen to have the opportunity of earning a livelihood. We rejoice if the Farmer shall come "into his own." We confess that you cannot put a farmer on NRA hours. While we were at Conference, our home was canvassed for the NRA. A consumer's emblem was left. One of the boys put it on the chicken coop window. When we got home, we discovered the chickens were going to roost at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Down came the NRA emblem and electric lights were installed. Now, we get them up at 4 o'clock in the morning. Even then, they no more than pay for their feed under present prices. We rejoice if greater economic justice will prevail. But, we reserve the right to criticise the NRA as an American Citizen. The FIRST and definite part of the program was the flooding of the country with BOOZE. The government-directed boycott is an insult to individual liberty, the heritage of America. The Gospel Messenger recently wrote, "This is a splendid time for the church to take care not to sell out her conscience to the state, not even for so good a price as loyalty to the NRA. The blue eagle is a fine looking bird. We rather like him. We merely wish to reserve the right to pull his feathers apart and prick his skin a bit, enough to see whether perchance there might be a strain of hawk's blood in him. We'd like to be sure he is a thoroughbred, all eagle." No such power has ever been given to any man as that bestowed upon our President. He has absolute control over banking, all industry, all retail trade. He can fix minimum wages and maximum hours. He can fix all prices. All credit and currency is under his control. He can rearrange the governmental bureaus at will. He has the power of inflicting fines and imprisonments. "This marks a permanent revolution in the U. S." We admire the President's courage. We are praying for him daily. No man, unless absolutely controlled by Jesus Christ, can handle that amount of power safely and wisely. We are praying and hoping that he may be delivered from the snares of the communistic, atheistic members of his Brain Trust. Startling indeed when the greatest industrial nation on the earth surrenders to the Head of the Government the dictatorial powers over all buying and selling. How swiftly the developments are moving toward the hour when the Beast shall demand the visible mark before one can buy or sell.

Is the Blue Eagle the Mark of the Beast? No! but it is one of the forecasts when this Mark of the Beast will be demanded. One claw grasps a cog wheel, the symbol of this machine age. The other claw displays bolts of electricity, the greatest force in the commercial world. There are 12 cogs visible, two sizes. There are six bolts of electricity. Six is man's number and this is Man's program destitute of divine guidance. General Johnson has nicknamed it "The Hawk". He has warned us, "Do not fool with that bird." The nations are fast becoming "mark conscious." Fasces, Nazis, Swastika, NRA, etc. Russia is staining the hand with the insignia of the hammer and the sickle. Before you can receive it you must sign a pledge of hatred and defiance against God and Christ and the Bible. Japan has her Eagle, a golden one with a black-belted jacket. These are emblems of dictatorial powers. Johnson has said, "We will sentence to economic death, all violators."

Brethren, these are the closing days of this age. It may be that we shall go into a period of persecution and be deprived of our religious liberty. The British Weekly writes, "The first step which every Dictatorship will take will be to coerce, or to seduce, or to suppress the Christian Church." Will Dictatorship banish religious liberty? Will there come a Union of the Church and State? We "ought to obey God rather than man." "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and to God the things that are his." "Be patient, therefore, Brethren, establish your hearts, THE COMING OF THE LORD DRAWETH NIGH."

The Curse of Liquor

By Fred Gilbert

A lay evangelist who was once a slave to drink and knows whereof he speaks

Talk about your so-called good old days! Here are some facts from one who knows. It was Saturday evening; we had just got our check. "Come on, boys, let's go over to Dan's place—or some other saloon—and get our checks cashed. Have one on me, boys." The next fellow says, "Come on, boys, have another." The third, "My time to treat," and so on till ten or twelve have treated; so by the time you are ready to start over again, you feel rich, booze having made a fool of you; so on, on you go, till you can hardly get home by yourself, or maybe someone is half carrying you along the street.

Here comes a cheery little woman with a curly-headed babe in her arms to meet Daddy; but oh, horrors! Hubby at it again! You had just promised her a week ago you would quit. Here you come up to her all brazen; booze has made you feel big. She asks you for money; baby heeds some new clothes. You hand her five dollars—all that is left of a check for twenty-five—to pay rent and buy groceries, clothing, and fuel. She thought maybe you would take her to a show that night; but alas, no show. Nothing to do but sit and sob, while you lie and snore, filled to the brim with booze. In the morning you get up, oh! so sick, such a headache! So ashamed to meet wife and baby! But she comes and puts trembling arms around you; you promise never to touch it again; bright hopes for wife until next Saturday night; then the same old thing. Oh, those good old days!

Boys and girls, never touch booze. I know by experience. First, you think it is big to take a glass of beer. You say it won't hurt you. Later you take two glasses. It didn't hurt you at the time, but it is gaining its hold. You grow a little bolder and drink several glasses. Then some smart Aleck dares you to drink something stronger. You take it, and before you know it, it has you in its grasp. Then the troubles I have described begin. You do things when under its influence, that you would not think of doing when sober. Many a lovely young girl has gone wrong because she would not refuse to take the dare of some scoundrel whose sole purpose was to get her in his clutches. Never take the first taste of booze, for it is sure to wreck you, and when it once gets a hold of you, it is a living hell to overcome.

If prosperity has to come by turning booze loose on the young who do not know the curse of it, I say, "Let prosperity stay away." May the God of heaven reward according to his will those who so willfully bring it back to the younger generation. I would like to write more if I were allowed the space, but will thank the editor if he will put this much in. I would like to write one more short article telling how I overcame.

In conclusion, let me beg of you again, never taste strong drink; for only God and its victims know what you are starting; and where it will end for you, and last of all the lake of fire. "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning that they may follow strong drink" (Isaiah 5:11). How truly the old prophet knew and taught the ruin of it!

The great mystery of the life of man is not sin, but that which reveals it, condemns it, and makes it at last unbearable.—J. Fort Newton.

Intercession is a wonderful help to forgiveness of injuries. The personal unkindness of brother and sister stirred up Moses to pray for each, and how repeatedly the wrong feeling, speaking and acting against himself was made the occasion of prayer for them! Let us avail ourselves of this secret of his meekness!—Frances Ridley Havergal.

It is the only way of converting the world, as soul takes fire from soul, and faith begets faith, and the spectacle of righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost awakens desire in those who see. Heights answers height, deep calls to deep, the deep of your Christian experience to the deep of another's need. The only irresistible testimony is that of actual Christlike lives. Are we in any vital sense stating the case for the King?—Hugh Black.

Some Truths of BRETHREN HISTORY

By I. D. Bowman, D.D.

ABRAHAM CASSEL, HISTORIAN

First of a Series dealing with some unpublished facts of history of special interest to Brethren People.

Brother Stuckey of Ashland College gave an intensely interesting message about Brother Abraham Cassel, the greatest historian among the Brethren people. I want to add some additional truths that are but little known of this remarkable man. Long before his death, forty years ago, when he came to Philadelphia, he would usually attend the First Brethren church where I was at that time pastor. He belonged to the Church of the Brethren. Their church was only five blocks from ours, but owing to his nephews, the two brothers, Jacob and Harry Cassel, being members of my church, he would come with them to Tenth and Dauphin. I became very intimately acquainted with him and had many very interesting and helpful conversations with him. He became specially interested in me when he learned that my father was a historian and had corresponded with him for many years.

He told me his father was an old Mennonite and was greatly opposed to all education above merely reading, writing and arithmetic. He had a thirst for education from his earliest recollections. When Abe was but eight years old, his father came to the definite conclusion that he was a black sheep of the family, and treated him as such, because of his thirst for knowledge. He had an uncle, brother to his father, who greatly encouraged him in his thirst for knowledge, and would loan him books to read, which he would hide in the strawstack, or in the hay in the barn, so his father would not discover them. But sometimes he would find them, and into the fire they would go, and he would be punished for reading them.

He began to accumulate a library at the age of eight. He would keep his books at his uncle's, who did not live far away. His father would send him to bed in the dark, for, if he allowed him to take a tallow candle he would read till way into the night. When he got older, he did without hundreds of meals and read while the others were eating. His father would work him all the harder, so he would have little time to study. When he was in his teens his neighbors interfered and interceded for him. His father cried bitterly. He said he did all he could to save the soul of his boy, but since the neighbors interfered, he would now let him go ahead in the satanic thirst for education. But he still denied him of the privileges of all others in the family. He would buy him no Sunday clothes. He would require him to go barefooted till late in the fall and then only furnish him with everyday shoes. Before he was out of his teens he taught school both in German and English.

He topped the climax of his rebellion when he fell in love with an English girl and finally married her. He first saw her on a sidesaddle on a horse. He decided that he would marry her if he could get her. His father bitterly opposed his courtship and marriage, believing as he did that the Pennsylvania Dutch people could get to heaven, but no English people.

Before he was married, he had a very bitter experience. His uncle who encouraged him in education, died; this broke his heart. He had no clothes fit to go to the funeral and no shoes to wear. He went barefooted to view the corpse and then went home and wept over the loss of the best friend he had on earth. When he married his father disinherited him because he married an English lady.

He started to housekeeping with practically nothing. He had one wheelbarrow of household goods and furniture. His table was an empty flour barrel with a board on top. The Lord greatly prospered him. After 60 years he was one of the wealthiest farmers in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, and had accumulated a library of 60,000 volumes, tracts, etc., and became known as the greatest historian of his time. He had his library so systematized and indexed, that in a very short time he could locate any book that was asked for. (All his own method).

He was very hospitable and would entertain visitors for days free of charge, and would take great pains and delight in giving any information possible to all who called.

Brother Harry Cassel and I spent a day and a night there one time. He spent the whole time in showing us everything that we asked for. He showed us the original Catechism of Luther to preachers. On the flyleaf was a picture of a man dipping a child in water in baptism.

He showed us where Luther said the word "tauffe" means to dip and that "deep into the water". Then he said, "we now sprinkle a little water on the child's head, but it ought to be dipped deep, and not only so, but I much prefer to let the child grow up and then be baptized upon its own confession." This was from the first edition of a catechism to preachers. He also read a letter of Luther to a preacher how to baptize a Jewish lady who was too tall to be baptized in the fonts of the churches. He told the preacher how to make the baptism so that when she knelt the water would come up to her neck and then immerse her three times according to Matthew 28:19. Then Cassel said I have the historical proof in my library, so plain that you had just as well deny that Luther ever lived as to deny that his favorite mode of baptism was trine immersion.

He told us a very interesting and amusing incident. A rather young, inexperienced Baptist preacher had a controversy with a very able scholar, a clergyman of the Lutheran church, on Baptism. Week after week it was published in a county paper in Bucks County.

Cassel said he saw that the Lutheran preacher was getting the best of the Baptist. He wrote him a card, "Come over and see me." He came. The Baptist got such a victory over the Lutheran preacher that the latter went down to the great Lutheran college at Mt. Arie, Philadelphia to see if the Baptist rightly quoted Luther. They said that there were no such statements in any of Luther's books in their library.

The greatest historian in that famous school spent several days in Cassel's library. After he had finished his research, Cassel said to this great Lutheran scholar and historian: "Was not Luther's favorite mode of baptism trine immersion"? After much hesitation he replied, "True, unless original leaves were cut out and forged ones inserted." After furnishing the proof that such was impossible, he replied, "that doubtless what those books said was true."

He also read and interpreted a sermon that Luther preached on feetwashing. Cassel said we have no historical proof that he practiced it, but if he did not practice it, he did not practice what he preached.

I will later, the Lord willing, write about other characters of the Brethren Church as well as the Church of the Brethren, given history that is not generally known.

It is not mere eternity which the thoughtful man desires, not even the perpetuity of things as they are; but eternal life worthy of the noble name, and in harmony with his highest nature, in which the good he aspires after shall be attained, and the evil he deplors be removed, and the unseen God be beheld with joy and served with undecaying energies.—T. Professor Black is asking you--

DO YOU KNOW?

THAT you received a copy of the New Series of the Ashland College Bulletin because your pastor or other friend had your name placed on the free subscription list?

THAT the first issue of 3,000 copies was quickly exhausted and that 1,000 people will never receive the September number?

THAT you should ask your pastor if he has sent your name so that you will be sure to receive the November issue?

THAT all but about 30 pastors in the entire Brotherhood have already shown a vigorous enthusiasm about endorsing the work of their College and Seminary and are encouraging their young people to look forward to the day when they can enter and enjoy its opportunities?

THAT Ashland College was established as an institution dedicated to the training of the young people of the church for entry into the various professions, — not alone to enter the Christian ministry?

THAT there are almost no professions that your College does not give part or all of the required courses? Naturally such courses are fully accredited because of the standard rating of the school. That means much.

THAT many young people of other denominations prefer your College to their own, or even the state colleges? There is a reason. Your young people should learn what it is.

THAT the environment, the Christian attitude of the professors, the ideals manifested, the very atmosphere on the campus, are of as much value as the facts and principles learned in the courses?

THAT more opportunities for self-expression and participation in student activities are possible in a college with a limited enrollment? This added value is recognized and encouraged by your college.

THAT academic standards of the school are equal to those of much larger colleges and universities? But in addition, an attempt is made to maintain highly elevated moral and spiritual standards.

THAT many parents are saying, "Why pay more elsewhere for an education"?

THAT your College and Seminary desire to give as wide and useful a service to the young people of the church as they can render?

No Response from These

No response has been received from the pastors of the following churches to a request for names of members who are, or would like to become, interested in the work of the College and Seminary. Also it was suggested in a letter to your pastor that the names of high school juniors, seniors and graduates would be much appreciated. Literature will be sent them when we know who they are and where they live. Will some one kindly respond with such names from the following congregations? The new Bulletin will be mailed to all.

I Thessalonians

"Hark! what a mighty sound, too divine for hearing,
Stirs on the earth and trembles in the air!
Is it the thunder of the Lord's appearing?
Is it the music of his people's prayer?"

"Surely he cometh and a thousand voices
Call to the saints, but to the deaf are dumb;
Surely he cometh and the earth rejoices
Glad in his coming who hath sworn, 'I come.'"

"This hath he done, and shall we not adore him?
This shall he do, and can we still despair?
Come let us quickly fling ourselves before him,
Cast at his feet the burden of our care."

More than any other poem known to the writer, the above lines significantly peal forth the ringing message of Apostle Paul to the afflicted Thessalonians—babes in Christ—yet zealous lovers of the Word. The saintly Frederick W. H. Myers caught the song of Paul's heart as it is revealed in the literature of his famous first epistle.

Those Christians who have never learned how to listen for his Advent feet, will find great news to console and comfort their minds and hearts on their pilgrim way to the Upper Sanctuary, if they turn anew to the lustrous revelation of First Thessalonians. One thing is certain, namely, the Thessalonian converts thrived on the Blessed Hope and established a testimony for his Name forever.

Without any embellishments, without any explanation concerning the date, composition, circumstances, object, and results of this writing, permit the writer to plunge into the heart of the book and unwind in a brief way the layers of truth embedded therein.

I

It will strike the beginning student of this epistle, when he first catches glimpses of the cardinal fact of the Pauline message, forcefully and peculiarly, that such a writing should be given over to a declaration of ideas pertaining to the Second Coming of Jesus for his saints. In a five-fold way—once in each chapter, and that at the very end in each case—are the facts of the book consummated with steallar truth concerning the Advent.

In chapter one, wherein the "model church" is described, we learn how the Thessalonians "turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come." (1:9, 10).

To the young convert no greater message can come than this. He is to separate himself from the world, serve patiently and nobly, waiting until the Savior shall arrive to dramatically close the world program. It is the hope of hopes that the One in Whom all virtue and justice lies, shall come to conquer and control when awkward and grandiloquent statesmen no longer can solve the problems which they and wicked humanity raise. Great inspiration lies in the simple contemplation of the Great Event. The early Christians so regarded it. So also should we.

II

The model servant has a reward awaiting him in the Great Day, according to St. Paul. The nature of the Apostle's Service is succinctly set forth in chapter two—a service in the midst of opposition; frank, gentle, righteous, and successful. There it is announced, "For what is our hope, or joy or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy."

Here is an encouraging hope for the servant of Christ. Paul's greatest reward in the day of Jesus' return will be to look upon his face, bringing many converted souls with him. "He that winneth souls is wise," so wisdom dictates. For faithful servants like Dwight L. Moody, Jonathan Edwards, John Wesley, John Calvin,

Martin Luther, Alexander Mack, and countless others, such a text was a bracing tonic and a heavenly elixir.

III

The model Christian constantly lives in the world, or should, a life of purity, honesty, integrity, and love. He is aided in such living, if he keeps looking heavenward for the Coming Prince, in holiness, in straight walking, in purity, and in industriousness; the godless, crooked devils, impure rascals, and lazy scoundrels shall have no part in joys of the elect. "And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you; To the end he may establish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints," so Paul advises the saints of the first century (3:12, 13). Loving hearts and holy living will abound where model brethren live. For belief the Lord's return becomes a purifying hope inasmuch as he has learned to "Do noble things, not dream them, all day long;

And thus make Life, Death, and that vast Forever,
One grand sweet song."

IV

The fourth chapter of the Thessalonian letter has a startling announcement concerning those "loved long since and lost awhile." The "sleeping" saints and the living saints, shall simultaneously meet the Coming Sovereign. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

"Wherefore," Paul concludes, "comfort one another with these words." (4:16-18).

In the hour of bereavement, sorrow, and distress, there is a rainbow on the cloud. There is the promise of a reunion in the first heaven. That is final and authoritative; it is revealed, not speculative truth. It is but an echo of him who said "And if I go . . . I will come again." There is certainty here; there is comfort here; there is undying consolation here. Indeed, the bereaved may dry those tears and learn anew that life is not made for sorrow.

V

Finally, we hear the last peal of the prophetic bell announcing "the standing orders of the Christian Church." We are to "watch and be sober" concerning "times and seasons," etc. In that respect some men have erred greatly and reduced the successful promulgation of this blessed Advent truth by leaps and bounds. God pity them—they do work for the Devil by erecting calendars, publishing almanacs, setting dates, making clocks whose hands must reach the midnight hour according to the whim of the designer! O the foolishness of it! And the tragedy of it! We still have clay—proud clay which dictates to the Potter. Is it too much to, ask for "millstones" for such necks?

In spite of the perversions of the truth, Christ will come at the behest of the Father, "like a thief in the night." It will be unexpectedly to the world, but expectantly to us. We are not in the darkness; we are children of light. How alert Christians ought to be, therefore, knowing that we shall "be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." (5:23). Most of all—let us work and pray; serve and wait; live and let live—until he comes. And on his Tomorrow he that shall come will come. May we be ready to welcome him.

"I woke, and the night was passing,
And over the hills there shone
A star all alone in its beauty
When the other stars were gone—

"For a glory was filling the heavens
That came before the day,
And the gloom and the stars together
Faded and passed away.

"Only the star of the morning
Glowed in the crimson sky—
It was like a clear voice singing,
'Rejoice for the Sun is nigh!'

"O Children! a Star is shining
Into the hearts of men—
It is Christ with a voice of singing
'Rejoice! for I come again.'"

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

By Rev. Milton Bennett Lambdin

VI. Jerusalem, "The City of the Great King"

Jerusalem crests a distinctive luster among all the great cities of ancient days. None like it, though it be Nineveh, the Magnificent. Babylon, the Golden, Thebes, the Peerless, or Rome, the Queen of the Nations. For the Almighty himself has invested it with the regal corona, "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the North, the city of the Great King."

Jerusalem was

on a rocky plateau, 2,500 feet above the sea level, some twenty-six miles from the Mediterranean, and practically centering Palestine; its natal date so remote in the past that it is hidden in the mists of unrecorded prehistoric times. While many other great cities have entirely vanished from the earth, or are hidden deep in its underground ruins, Jerusalem yet abides, for the Lord has decreed, "Judah shall dwell forever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation" (Joel 3:20).

Its unbroken history and legends cover uncounted generations in its varied and wondrous fortunes. In the day of Amenhotep III and IV, as far back as the eighteenth dynasty, Jerusalem was a strong fortress city under the control of Egypt. When Joshua invaded the land of Canaan it had fallen into the hands of the Jebusites, a warlike people, and was then carrying the name of Jebus. The Jebusites held it tenaciously in its grasp for 400 years thereafter, though the city was right in the heart of the Hebrew captured territory, and successfully defied all attempts in its complete subjection, until David wrested it from the Jebusite control in 1048 B. C. and made it his royal capital, residential city, the religious center of the nation. It then took the name of "Zion, the City of David."

Captured by David

Under the first monarch of the Unified Kingdom of Israel, and particularly so under Solomon, Jerusalem rapidly rose to a prominence of beauty and grandeur possibly unrivaled by any other capital city of its times. Especially when Mount Moriah was crowned by the Temple of Solomon, all ablaze and glorious in the glitter of polished marble, its decorations of cedar, and gold, and gems, as it outruled all the sacred edifices of surrounding and distant lands.

This splendid structure was destroyed by the Babylonians 588 B. C., and succeeded by one of an inferior character built by Zerubbabel upon the return of the Jews from the seventy years captivity 519 B. C. The third and last temple was reared by Herod the Great, yet more glorious, if that were possible, than that of Solomon. It was said to have been covered with plates of gold, which almost blinded the eyes of the beholder as it reflected the dazzling glare of the rising and meridian sun.

Jerusalem has passed through a long-drawn-out series of marvelous experiences and tragic vicissitudes, beyond that recorded of any other of the world's great capitals. Its enemies have thrown their conquering legions around its walls, with battering rams and catapults, with all the ancient up-to-date machinery and military methods to batter down its fortifications some twenty-six or twenty-seven times, and successfully destroyed it seventeen times. It has been sacked, and burned, and leveled to the ground, its soil plowed and sown with salt, its inhabitants butchered or sold into slavery. It has been mastered by the Egyptians, Jebusites, Babylonians, Greeks, Romans, Syrians, Persians, Saracens, Crusaders, Turks, English. And yet, like the fabled Phoenix, it has risen from its ruins instinct with a life that defies its extinguishment.

The present city is

The Gravemound of Eight or Nine Previous Jerusalems, which lie crushed and buried far below its modern grade. The Jerusalem of Solomon, Nehemiah Ilerod, Hadrian, Constantine, Omar, Godfrey, Saladin, Suleiman.

A literal fulfillment of the prediction of Jeremiah 9:11 and Micah 3:12. If you want to strike the level of the days of David and his successors, you have to go deep down, anywhere from seventy-five to one hundred feet or more below the present level.

Its crowning tragedy was when it was captured and destroyed by the Romans. It was during the Passover period, when the city was filled to the overflowing with devout pilgrims from the four ends of the earth. Josephus tells us that 2,700,000 were packed within the city. Uncounted multitudes perished in its destruction, while 100,000 were carried into slavery, and an incredible number crucified; to such an extent that the very forests were stripped to supply sufficient wood for the needed crosses; an echoing fulfillment of the desperate malediction shrieked upon themselves by the rulers of the Jews, as they brought the Christ to his Cross, "His blood be upon us and our children!"

Rich spoils from the city and temple were carried through the streets of Imperial Rome to grace the triumphant return of the conquering legions. Conspicuous among the trophies was the sacred seven-branched candlestick of pure gold, ravished from the Holy Place in the Temple of Jerusalem, as it is seen figured upon the Arch of Titus in the Forum at Rome. The torch was put to the Hebrew sacred edifice, and eventually the whole city, "the joy of the whole earth," was converted into a harrowing scene of abject ruin and desolation. More likely than otherwise, every atom of its soil has been over and over again saturated with the blood of besieged and besiegers. With Jerusalem, the Aceldama of Aceldamas.

It is said that when Titus had finally ended up his devastating work at Jerusalem there was but little left save one tower and the shattered walls of the Temple. And, from that crisis event in her history, through the long intervening centuries from that time to this, Jerusalem is

A Somber Fulfillment of the Words of Christ,

"Trodden down of the Gentiles," with its ancient glory and grandeur of its prosperous days, faded out "like the baseless fabric of a dream." And thus she sits, through the on-passing centuries, drab and drear, as though clothed in its widow-like sable garments of mourning.

And with a never ending multitude of the sons and daughters of Abraham and Isaac, and Jacob, flowing in from all the nations of the earth, to lament its desolations, as they gather at "the Jews' wailing place" in "the Holy City." And yet, withal, there is a wondrous fascination that the old and decrepit city holds for us each. It grips your heart, it lures your mind, it appeals to your pious imagination, and it thrills your historic sense, as you are held a willing captive in its meshes, and surrender yourself to its mystic sway and witchery. For— it is, Jerusalem! "The City of the Great King," Jehovah, and whose name he has chosen to typify the Heavenly Jerusalem above, the capital city of God's trackless universe.

And it carries the title of "the Holy City" of the world's three great religions, the Christian, the Hebrew, and the Moslem, and is held in veneration by the whole race of mankind. Drab and drear and unkept though she be within, Jerusalem possesses yet no little exterior attractiveness.

The View from Olivet,

where the writer had the rare and never-to-be-forgotten experience of taking in the perspective of the old city from the top of a Mohammedan minaret, where the muezzin calls the followers of the Prophet to prayer, is impressive and thrilling. As your eyes drink in the still panorama of walls, and gates, and domes, and pinnacles, and towers, and citadel, it serves to you, in some concrete conception, what it must have looked like in its more prosperous days of beauty and glory.

And it was easy too to visualize the scene when Christ approached it from "the descent of the Mount of Olives" and "when he was come near, he beheld the city and wept over it." "And when . . . the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God, . . . saying, Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord."

The intervening drop curtains of the listed centuries fade away as you gaze in mental retrospect upon the vista of that thrilling scene in the epic life of the nation. The city lies four square, shut in with walls hardly more than several miles in extent; you can easily "walk about Jerusalem" within the hour or so. Its walls about forty feet in height, broken with eight gates. The five principal ones, the Jaffa Gate, the Damascus Gate, Herod's Gate, the Sheep Gate, and St. Stephen's Gate, all open, about a like number closed.

While the present walls are not the original walls of the previous Jerusalem, for the prediction of Christ has been fulfilled to the letter, that not one stone shall be left upon another, the stones themselves are undoubtedly the original ones that have found their place in the more modern walls, that were built by Suleiman the Magnificent, A. D. 1536-42.

You can see all varieties of stones used in the construction of these walls. Some of them not at first hand designed for this purpose, but stones of marble, with ornate and chaste carvings, evidently salvaged from the rubbish heaps of palaces and public buildings that had been destroyed in one or more of the destructive calamities that had fallen upon the city in days gone by.

Just as Nehemiah and his co-patriots did, when "they revived the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish," in the rebuilding of Jerusalem upon their return from their Babylonian exile. Nehemiah 4:2. Following the sordid trend of up-to-date practices and activities in money getting, Jerusalem is largely commercialized as a sight seeing "show city."

Spirit, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things." Vs. 29.

WEDNESDAY

Spiritual Aspirations. Philippians 3:13-21

If material gain were all that one could look forward to in Christian living, one might question the wisdom of undertaking such a life. But it is written "Man shall not live by bread alone," which surely implies that man has a nature that physical or material food does not sustain.

The apostle in writing to the Philippian brethren in the verses referred to for today's reading calls attention to this higher life, this spiritual life, the aspirations of which, are in marked contrast to the aspirations of those referred to in verses 18 and 19.

THURSDAY

The Lord's Supper. First Corinthians 11:23-34

Emblems, forms, ceremonies may be especially adapted to teaching great truths to children and to races that are still passing through the childhood period of civilization; but are such methods essential to our coming to a fuller knowledge of the great God who has provided a way for our salvation?

Some may answer no, but since we are all called "children of God", why not accept his plan or method for imparting both TRUTH and STRENGTH to us as his children, and find in this blessed service the nourishment we so greatly need?

FRIDAY

Paul's Charge to Timothy. Second Timothy 4:1-8

Paul has spent many years of arduous toil for his Master, and he now realizes that he is near the end of his journey; but he has not lost his interest in the work that he has been doing at so great cost to himself, nor has he lost concern for the well-being and the faithful performance of those who have entered upon the ministry as the result of his own leadership. He knows that perilous times are at hand, and that it will require unusual courage for a young minister to hold a true course in the face of a growing coldness on the part of professing Christians. So he seeks to encourage Timothy to stand firm.

SATURDAY

Church Officials. First Timothy 3:1-13

After forty years spent in the Christian ministry the writer of these notes is still unable to understand the WHY of many things. One of these things is why so many people who have the qualifications to function as officials in the church hesitate so much about accepting the responsibility, and another is why an equal number who seem lacking in these essential qualifications are so anxious to be called to a place of distinction or power in the church.

It is our conviction that Paul's admonition in this third chapter of his first epistle to Timothy should be observed to the very letter in the choosing of all church officials.

SUNDAY

The Law of the Spirit. Romans 8:1-11

In this passage the apostle Paul is contrasting the life of the Spirit with the life of the flesh; and he points out in a clear and definite manner the advantages that come to one who chooses to live by the law of the Spirit rather than by the law of the flesh.

The law of the flesh must ultimately lead to death, while the law of Spirit leads to life and peace, but the only way by which this law of the Spirit can be observed is by having the "Spirit of God dwelling in you." "If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

The Council at Jerusalem. Acts 15:1-6

There come times in practically every new movement when some unforeseen problem presents itself, the right solution of which is extremely vital to the success of the movement. Such a problem developed in the early Christian church when Gentiles were first admitted into its fellowship.

Should these new converts be required to observe the ceremonial law of Moses before they could become Christians? This was the question. Some answered yes, while others answered no. Success or failure depends upon the right answer to these questions. The church in Antioch did not feel competent to make the decision, so the matter was referred to the church in Jerusalem.

TUESDAY

The Decision of the Council. Acts 15:22-29

"The multitude kept silence." That is the record of the word as a report is given of this first Christian Council in Jerusalem. Paul and Barnabas rehearsed what signs and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles through them, and in the presence of the apostles and elders, after much questioning Peter made a most concise, yet effective plea for tolerance, and James called their attention to the teaching of the prophets bearing upon such a question, and the "committee on resolutions" presented its report, "For it seemed good to the Holy

My Ideal Intermediate C. E. Society

By Susie Snyder, Superintendent Dayton Intermediates

The ideal Intermediate C. E. society is a society where every young person is enthusiastic about their prayer meetings socials, etc.

Intermediates must be interested, and the best way that I have found to get them so, is to let them do things for themselves. Let them plan their own programs, having them to think the program will not be planned unless they do it. Of course, the superintendent should help them and guide them, and sometimes offer suggestions.

Let them elect their own officers and name their own committees, plan their own socials, games, eats, etc. with the aid of the superintendent of course but nevertheless having them take the lead in it all.

I think a prayer meeting program is ideal when every boy and girl takes part by offering a short prayer besides reading Scripture verses and taking part in the discussion and other parts on the program Dayton, Ohio.

MISSIONS

SOCIAL SIGNS

By Juan Pisani, a Brethren Missionary in Argentina

One of the Prophetic Studies given at Workers' Conference at Rio Cuarto, and translated from the Spanish by Johanna Nielsen, Missionary from Long Beach.

Society is an organism, with its signs and infirmities. The signs of the last days are signs of sickness, as foretold in the Scriptures. An organism is composed of many members functioning together for the mutual good. Even so in society the various societies and guilds were founded to meet some need,—some for the good of the country, its industries, etc., others for more personal benefits, and if they functioned perfectly would be of real help to humanity.

An organism, on breaking certain rules as to proper alimentation, must suffer the logical consequences. Such is the condition of society. Instead of feeding its sympathies, interesting itself in the common good, working under the impulse of love, there is selfishness, self-seeking, exaltation of the ego; and not only this, but those institutions that were really founded for the common good have lost sight of the ideal and end for which they were founded, and instead of the men who were capable of self-sacrifice for the good of all, their places are occupied by men who appear well perhaps, but who love selfish comfort and well-being, personal aggrandizement, rather than seeking the common good.

If a member of the body becomes diseased it is necessary to give it the proper attention and apply the needed remedy, and not to try first one thing and then another to see if by chance you may hit upon the proper one; rather, the right one must be applied early, or death may result. And this is exactly what is happening in society: having long ago rejected the real remedy, it now tries first one thing, and when that fails places its hope in another. From the lips of the Lord Jesus came the cry: "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life". The Bible is of little importance to the bulk of humanity. Rejecting, not only the Bible, but also the Lord of the Bible,—the only remedy,—society is in danger of death, but does not believe such danger exists.

Truly the picture which presents itself is appalling, and yet, in a sense, consoling; for they are the signs of the last days, that indicate the near return of the Lord. that he is at the door; the time when, from the ruins and debris of the evil and corrupt state of society of the present, there shall arise a much better one.

EXTERNAL SIGNS

1. Pestilences. Matt. 24:7; Isa. 1:5-7.

"There shall be famines and pestilences." Looking at this, the view that presents itself is truly terrifying. In spite of the advancement of medical science, humanity is smitten with new and dreadful diseases that cut down the population without mercy. At no other time has the world been so smitten as at present; and not only man, but also animal and plant.

2. Famines.

There have been famines in other periods, but never like now. The population has increased,—true,—but so has the cultivated area and the means of production. Nevertheless in many places multitudes are hungry, but not because the land is unproductive: as, for example, Russia, that sells grain to other nations, while her children wait for a limited, scanty ration each day: hunger, while there is abundance and granaries are filled, is inexplicable.

3. Riches Concentrated. James 5:1-9.

Wealth is concentrated in the hands of a few, and the great majority of the rich have acquired their wealth by dishonest means; by violence, by exploiting the worker, etc. They have become the lords of the world, forgetting their fellow-man, living in pleasure, as though they were the only ones who have a right to live; thinking only of their own well-being; heaping up treasure for the last days. To live in luxury, they have enriched themselves at the expense of others; living in opulence, while beside them others are crying out for justice. While they neither feel for nor listen to the cries of the suffering, there is one who hears today as in the days of old, and the cry for justice has reached the ear of the Lord of Hosts, and he says: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, . . . Your gold and silver is cankered." How falls the rich man! In spite of having thought that from the pinnacle reached he would never fall, that he might remain always surrounded by gold,—in a moment he is reduced to misery, while we see "upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth" (Luke 21:25, 26).

We are exhorted to "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. . . . Establish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James 5:7, 8). Yes; he comes to relieve the oppressed, and to punish the wicked. Praise his Name!

4. Armaments. Matthew 24:6, 7.

"Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom". This is precisely the panorama that presents itself around us: wars and revolutions. It is dreadful to think that with civilization and culture almost reaching the peak, and with society very proud of the fact, nevertheless man rises up against his fellowman more than ever, and the specter of war hovers over a world that is still suffering the consequences of the last great war. But still they go on, some nations at war, others preparing more armaments than ever.

Statesmen trusted in the League of Nations, thinking it would safeguard against war; but we are seeing its failure. Japan, when not allowed to fight as she pleased, withdrew. The League has been impotent in solving the Paraguay-Bolivia conflict. It has failed in its plan of reducing armaments. Thus we see man's efforts failing, while conflicts multiply, and will continue to do so as we near the end-time.

Not even Argentina has escaped the contagion of war, and wishes to be on a par with the rest of the nations. This is the condition of a world that talks of peace. While the conference speakers prepare their eloquent discourses in favor of peace, more cruisers, and greater, as well as many of the so-called pocket size are also being prepared. At the same time warplanes increase in number, and the chemists are busier than ever in the preparation of new gases and other inventions to be used in the coming conflicts. Man says, "peace"; but God says: "There is no peace to the wicked". The world does not wish to be converted, but rather continue in evil ways, while the heart is unchanged, there can not be peace. There can not be peace on earth until the Prince of Peace, the Lord Jesus Christ, comes. He will bring the longed-for peace, giving the world the government needed.

5. Knowledge Increased. Daniel 12:4.

"Knowledge shall be increased." This we see on all sides. It is really astonishing what man has been able to do, and the heights of knowledge to which he has attained. Distances that formerly took months, today are covered in a few hours. But the sad thing is, that the best talents are not employed in the good and useful, but rather in manufacturing weapons of destruction. Science and knowledge have advanced, but as man does not know God and the wise man is so puffed up with his knowledge that he does not need nor wish to know anything about God, we soon shall see just where such knowledge leads our society.

INTERNAL SIGNS

1. Moral Conditions. Matt. 24:37-39.

The present condition of things social is near its end. The external signs are the result or effect of the things that are within. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh", said the Lord. That heart of the individuals that form society is evil, selfish, envious,—in a word,—corrupt: and until the individual is changed, the heart renewed, it is impossible that the conditions that affect society shall greatly change.

(1) As it was in the days of Noah.—Absorbed in material things. According to the Word, in those days God said: The end of all flesh has come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and, behold I will destroy them with the earth." We notice, in the first place, that they were very comfortably engaged in material things: given over to a life entirely evil, far from God, but tranquilly eating and drinking, until the day that Noah entered into the ark. Thus at the present time society is given over to vice, and entirely ignorant of the fact that punishment approaches with giant strides.

(2) Ignorant. We notice, in the second place, that in the days of Noah they remained in ignorance until the flood came and took them all away. Because of evil in the human heart, the tendency to do evil rather than good was at its zenith, nor did they believe their mode of life evil, and only laughed to scorn Noah, the preacher of righteousness; but the day of judgment arrived, sweeping away all the wicked. And at the present time the world believes itself good, paying no attention to the warnings of the Lord, going on, day after day, and generation after generation, in the evil and perverse ways of the natural heart; and even more, wishing rather to deny the existence of a God that will punish the wicked: believing that each may go the way he pleases, and only man may do and undo. In a considerable part of our society, deceit, lying, and immorality, are almost popular virtues today, and the person who tries to live on a higher plane is considered more or less of a fool. Literature is full of unspeakable impurities. This entire sowing will bring a terrible harvest in the future, and constitutes a sign of the times in which we live. But they tell us the world is getting better, and even more, they say in their ignorance, "The way of the Lord is not right", though it is the way of man that is not right. "And knew not until the flood came and took them all away"; and thus it will be when the Son of man comes.

2. Spiritual Attitude.

The inclination of the unconverted heart is toward evil, and so tends to go further and further from God. The Lord himself has painted a terrible picture of the conditions that will exist in the last days. We find it in Revelation 3:14-20. Here we see the last phase of the Church on the earth. Christ has no relation with her. He is outside, knocking at the door, asking entrance. This reminds us of the words of the Lord, "When the Son of man cometh, will he find faith on the earth?" (Luke 18:8). If in this the Lord refers, not to personal faith, but to faith in the entire body of revealed truth in the Scriptures, we see clearly and with amazement that the church militant has gone far away from the truths that the Lord has revealed in the Bible; for some deny the existence of God; others, atonement for sin and the supernatural birth of Christ; others the personality of the Holy Spirit; and others the need of the new birth, giving in its place education and religious culture,—yet all these bear the name of Christian.

This in regard to the church; and as to the world we are witnessing the great trend of the masses away from God. We all know Russia's attitude, and it seems that other nations, and the whole world, are disposed to follow her example.

In Daniel 11:36-40 we have a description of the conditions that will prevail in the last days, and the attitude of man toward

God. We see, too, that materialism and atheism are finding free course everywhere. Many say, to believe in God and fear him was all right for the days of ignorance, but now it is a disgrace, especially in these days of advanced knowledge.

The world refuses the Light, and though it believes it has light, it remains in utter darkness. All these things, and others that we shall be studying, show that we are approaching the time of his coming. And though we know neither the day nor the hour, we do know that we are rapidly approaching that glorious time. It behooves us to be ready to exclaim, and not only to exclaim whole-heartedly, "Come, Lord Jesus", but also to expect him. For he is coming, and coming soon. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

WEST HOMER BROTHERS CHURCH

We are rejoicing in the Lord for the mighty work wrought in our midst. For the two weeks of October 2-15, Dr. J. C. Beal from the Canton church was with us and was definitely blessed of the Lord in the ministry of the Word. We wish to thank both the Canton church for permitting Dr. Beal to come and Dr. Beal for coming over to help us. We had two weeks of wonderful services. The Lord gave us fine weather and the Holy Spirit created an unusual interest in the entire community.

When we decided to have the meetings, in keeping with the Evangelistic program of the church, it was decided to have Bible study and prayer meetings each week to prepare for the services. Then on Sunday morning of the first week Dr. Baer came out and brought a stirring message. In the afternoon the church members visited the homes of the community, distributing the cards and inviting them to the services.

The attendance was fine from the start. There was a gradual increase in numbers and interest. On the last night the house was packed. Many visitors came from other churches. The Fairhaven Brethren were in the meetings with great regularity.

During the first week, Dr. Beal taught the Word and laid the foundation. Each day as many calls were made as time permitted. Even in the absence of the pastor, the work was kept up, and Dr. Beal averaged about eight hours of talking each day. This personal work is a great thing. Dr. Beal is an expert at personal work. Real permanent results are obtained when you present the Bible to people in the home, and carefully go over all the problems they raise. The writer can testify that this work was most profitable, especially since it was always hard for me to do. I never knew what to say or how to approach the subject. It is as natural as preaching and certainly blessed of God in winning souls to Christ.

Almost all of Dr. Beal's messages were expositions of the Scripture or treatment of great Bible doctrines. A great conviction came upon the whole community. As a result, when the invitation was extended, people came almost every night. For a church and community as small as ours the results are exceptional. Twenty-seven came forward to draw near to God. Of this number sixteen confessed Jesus Christ as personal Savior for the first time. Ten came into the church by letter and baptism. And one young lady, a public school teacher, presented herself to the Lord for definite Christian work wherever the Lord calls her. So the results are very gratifying. Then, too, great good was accomplished in the church. Every member came closer to the Lord. It deepened our knowledge of the Word, and gives us a new start.

On the last Sunday night, Dr. Beal asked all the members to come forward and pledge their support to the work. This was heart-stirring. Pastor and people are united in the ministry of the Word, and we know that there are great things ahead.

Words cannot express our appreciation to Dr. Beal for his untiring efforts, and his splendid messages. But in all of this we realize that it was not the work of men, but of God. The Lord honored his Word. The Holy Spirit used that Word, and our Father was glorified through all. Therefore, we give him the praise, for he is worthy of our adoration.

WEST HOMER BROTHERS CHURCH CAMPAIGN

It was the writer's privilege to share in the blessings of a special meeting at the West Homer Brethren church where Rev. Floyd Shierly, one of the students in our Seminary, is pastor. The two weeks spent with these people and their pastor were weeks of real blessing and rejoicing. The Holy Spirit worked in a really remarkable way, manifest in the deep interest and the conviction that gripped the entire community. He honored his Word and decisions were made which should mean much for the work in the days ahead.

Due to the obligations resting on the pastor in connection with his work in the Seminary he was not able to be on the field much of the time during the day but whenever it was possible for him to give his time in personal work, he did it and made a real sacrifice to be in the services each evening. Brother Shierly is loved by his people and is held in high esteem by the people of the community. He is faithful in his presentation of the Word and there is a definite heart-hunger for the Word that added much to the success of the campaign. If this church will arise to its opportunity and make arrangements for services each Sunday a strong work can be built up.

During the meetings my home was in the Hastings home in Lodi—and a real home it was, indeed. Everything possible was done for my comfort. Besides caring for the evangelist in this wonderful way they placed at his disposal a new Plymouth with a driver, thus making possible much visitation which was a potent factor in the success of the campaign. Many of the homes of the members were open where entertainment of the finest kind was enjoyed. The writer desires to express his appreciation and thanks for all these kindnesses. His heart was warmed as he found himself the recipient of the good things made possible by real sacrifice.

On the closing day of the meetings an offering was made the evangelist for his services, an offering that meant real sacrifice in many cases and it is a real joy to know the Lord always richly repays any sacrifice on the part of his children, and may he in his own way richly repay all those whose cooperation and sacrifice made possible the success which attended the effort.

WATERLOO, IOWA

The Brethren church at Waterloo is thriving and making permanent growth. This church did not experience a "Summer Slump" this year. We maintained our own services throughout the summer with fine attendance and good interest, with the exception of two Sunday nights during the pastor's trip to Winona.

Since conference a new Intermediate Society of Christian Endeavor has been organized, making three societies now actively functioning in this church and also a new orchestra organized which plays sacred music and accompanies the choir for Sunday evenings. These two organizations are real assets to our evening services.

We have adopted the National Evangelistic program and have set ourselves with a number of committees toward preparation for a real New Testament Revival campaign to start November 12th. The pastor will do the preaching. The choirs and orchestra will handle the music, under the direction of Mrs. McCartney-Smith, with her two assistants. We are blessed also with fine personal workers and many people who are powerful in prayer. Will we have a Revival Campaign? We will try with the Holy Spirit's leadership. The first year of this pastorate 49 were added to the church.

In this connection, we take pleasure in informing our brotherhood that we have two people in our church who are willing to be used anywhere in the field of Evangelism. They are in earnest about the new program of Evangelism and are offering themselves to the Church without any guarantee whatsoever, except traveling expenses and their keeping while on a field. Dr. and Mrs. Owen McCartney-Smith are well prepared and fully consecrated for such service. Mrs. McCartney-Smith has taught music and directed choirs in colleges and different cities; most recently in Detroit. They have also made a thorough study of church and citywide surveys and have conducted several such surveys. The pastor of the church will be pleased to answer any personal inquiry.

We are praying for a great year for ourselves and the entire brotherhood.

IN MEMORIAM—ELDER J. W. CLARK

John Walter Clark was born in Lakeville, Saint Joseph County, Indiana, January 27, 1876 and departed from this life on Thursday morning, October 12, 1933, at his home in South Bend, Indiana. His age was 57 years, 8 months and 17 days.

On December 17, 1902, he was united in marriage to Miss Florence Williams. Mr. and Mrs. Clark have lived most of their married life in South Bend.

On June 19, 1913, Brother and Sister Clark were baptized and received into membership of the Brethren church in South Bend. Immediately after entering the Christian life, Brother Clark began active service for his Lord and Master Jesus Christ.

Elder John W. Clark

He began testifying to the saving power of Christ and preached the Word of God and taught it to Bible Class groups. For several years he was identified with Rescue Mission work; soon he received calls to minister to outlying churches. On May 13, 1917, at the suggestion of his pastor, he was ordained to the Christian ministry. During more than sixteen years, Brother Clark has proven himself to be a man of God. Hundreds of people to whom he ministered will rise up to call his name blessed. During his ministry he served the following Brethren churches: Teggarden, Denver, Tiosa, Brighton, North Liberty, Twelve Mile, Center Chapel, Mexico, all in the state of Indiana.

Surviving are his wife, four sons, D. Wesley, Theodore, John Walter, and Robert. Four sisters and three brothers remain to cherish his memory, together with a host of devoted friends.

"Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Matthew 25:21.

The funeral was held at the First Brethren church in South Bend, Sunday, October 15. Services were conducted by G. W. Rench, R. F. Porte and Frank Gehman. Burial at North Liberty.

R. F. PORTE.

ELKHART, INDIANA

The Elkhart church is under way in the winter's activities—the various organizations of the church and Sunday school are carrying on their work with the old-time zeal and double the energy of prosperous days.

Our strength and loyalty are being tested. It requires greater courage to accomplish a small part of former years, but our people are not throwing up their hands and saying, "It can't be done," but are going on, forgetting there has ever been such a thing as a depressor.

With Divine leadership and with our capable pastor, Brother Stuckman, and the loyalty of our people, we cannot fail in our purpose of "Maintaining God's Work."

Rally Day, October 15, we had 411 in Sunday school—ninety visitors, which means just that many new contacts.

Our mid-week prayer service continues to be our outstanding service. Our young people make up the major part of this service.

The regular morning and evening services are largely attended. Our choir is a strength to these services and their members are faithful in attendance.

We are happy to have "our missionary" from Africa, Sister Bickel, at home. She is one of our girls and we regard her with unusual pride. Her presence is a source of inspiration.

The work in general over our brotherhood has but one real hindrance—courage. At the command, "arise, cross the Jordan." Joshua did not argue the impossibilities. God gives no impossible commands. He commanded, "Go" and there was but one thing for him to do—execute the command.

Faith, trust, and obedience qualify men for the hardest tasks. He clears the way and accomplishes his work.

The same voice that commanded, "Arise, cross over," promised also, I will be with you; I will never fail or forsake you.

May we all execute the command, and claim the promise, that his work may not lag in these perilous days.

EDNA NICHOLAS.

CARLTON CHURCH, GARWIN, IOWA

The church at Carlton, southwest of Garwin reports a time of blessing in special meetings with our dear Brother R. Paul Miller. We consider it a great privilege to have had such a wonderful man as Brother Miller with us; truly his coming has done wonderful things for the church. To have Brother Miller with us was just like "old times" to us, for we had the privilege of sitting under his teaching in the Philadelphia School of the Bible for several years, and it was he who baptized us into the faith, and since has been sort of spiritual advisor.

The folks here were loyal to the meetings, this was in a measure the reason for such a successful meeting.

Brother Miller's powerful messages brought folks from all over the county and even the weather failed to stop the wonderful spirit of the meetings. The fearlessness of the evangelist's messages, fearless admiration from the people of the church and had much to do with the response they gave. Men went away speaking most highly of his preaching.

The question box was used freely, and wonderful help was obtained for many through this means.

The weather was wonderful until the last day, when rain came down all day, and if you know Iowa, you know that mud prevails, particularly in this rural community, and makes the roads almost impassable. But this did not stop many. In visible results the last day was exceptional. There were 39 confessions and reconsecrations, twelve never having made the good confession before. There are others we believe and who were under the conviction of the Spirit, but were prevented from coming because of the weather. These we feel will come out for the Lord in our coming services.

We want to express our appreciation to Brother Miller for his untiring efforts, and his zeal for the souls of men. We need to praise the Lord for a man like our Brother Miller. We commend him to the brotherhood as a man who has no fear and will help the field to which he is called as the evangelist. May the Lord bless you, Brother Miller, as you serve Christ, is our prayer.

PREACH!

We can get along without a lot of things regarded as essential in modern church life and not be very much the poorer. But we cannot get along without preaching. Our great General and Commander has commissioned, "Go and preach." The wisdom of that plan in establishing and extending the Kingdom of God in the world through the conversion of men has been demonstrated and proved in every age. Preaching has succeeded in any and all sorts of conditions. It has never failed when done in the power and under the direction of the Holy Spirit.

Perhaps we need assurance of that and place more emphasis in our own thinking upon this means of promoting the work of the kingdom. It is the means that is always available to us. Whatever of support may fail us, we have this mighty instrumentality always as our chief and supreme means of attacking the power of evil and winning men from the ways of death and destruction.

To preach effectively and powerfully should be the overmastering desire of every man called to this sacred office. Into its performance he should pour every power at his command. There should be no sparing of one's self, either in preparation by prayer and study, or in the delivery of the message. He is the representative of the greatest cause and he speaks for the mightiest and greatest of all potentates and powers. He cannot afford to give the impression of carelessness and indifference. But men should be impressed, both by his attitude and by the dignity of his words, that he is an ambassador from the highest court in the universe and bears the most important message that can engage the thought of men. That is, of course, the fact. No great preachers have arisen and challenged the attention of men who have not felt it so. Like Paul they have regarded themselves as having been sent forth by the direct command of Heaven, that they were apostles "by the will of God."

This age and these days through which we are passing demand the preacher. Needed as he has been in every day and in every crisis, he confronts an unusual opportunity today. There never was a time when the prophet of the Lord could perform a greater service to humanity than the present. His voice and message is needed to clear the air and dispel the clouds of doubt and uncertainty which hang low upon the horizon of human affairs; and to call men to repentance and salvation through Jesus Christ whose blood alone is able to cover men's sins and cleanse their hearts of their defilement.

Preach! There isn't anything else that can effectively take its place. Thunder out the judgments of God against sin. Send out the wooing call to men to return to God. The fate of the world and the destiny of men depends upon preachers and preaching.—Evangelical Messenger.

CONFESSIONS OF A LUNKHEAD

By Sam Walter Foss

*I'm a lunkhead, an' I know it; 'tain't no use to squirm an' talk,
 I'm a gump an' I'm a lunkhead, I'm a lummux, I'm a gawk,
 An' I make this interduction so thet all you folks can see An' understan' the natur' of the critter thet I be.*

*I allus wobble w'en I walk, my j'int's are out er gear,
 My arms go flappin' through the air, jest like an el'phant's ear;
 An' w'en a woman speaks to me I stutter an' grow weak,
 A big frog rises in my throat, an' he won't let me speak.*

*Wall, thet's the kind er thing I be; but in our neighborhood Lived young Joe Craig, an' young Jim Stump, an' Hiram Underwood.
 We growed like corn in the same hill, jest like four seprit stalks;
 For they wuz lunkheads, jest like me, an' lummuxes an' gawks.*

*Now, I knew I wuz a lunkhead; but them fellers didn't know;
 Thought they wuz the bigges' punkins an' the purtiest in the row,
 An' I useter laff an' say, "Them lunkhead chaps will see W'en they go out into the worl' w'at gawky things they be."*

*Joe Craig, he wuz a lunkhead, but it didn't get through his pate;
 I guess you've all heard tell of him—he's governor of the State!
 Jim Stump, he blundered off to war—a most uncommon gump—
 Didn't know enough to know it—an' he come home General Stump.*

*Then Hiram Underwood went off, the bigges' gawk of all.
 We thought him hardly bright enough to share in Adam's fall;
 But he tried the railroad bizness, an' he allus grabbed his share—
 Now this gawk who didn't know it is a fifty millionaire.*

*An' often out here hoein' I set down atween the stalks, Thinkin' how we four together all were lummuxes an' gawks,
 All were gumps, an' all were lunkheads, on'y they didn't know, yer see;
 An' I ask, "If I hadn' known it, where in natur' would I be?"*

*For I stayed to home an' rastled in the cornfiel', like a chump, Coz I knew I wuz a lunkhead an' a lummux an' a gump;
 But if on'y I hadn't known it, like them other fellers there,
 To-day I might be settin' in the peresidential chair.*

*We all are lunkheads—don't git mad—an' lummuxes an' gawks;
 But us poor chaps who know we be—
 We walk in humble walks.
 So I say to all good lunkheads: Keep yer own selves in the dark;
 Don't own or reckernize the fact, an' you will make yer mark.*

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE ANIMALS' PICNIC

By Elizabeth Roberts, Fort Gaines

Once Brother Fox was very mad with Brother Rabbit. He was mad with him for stealing some nice fresh butter out of his spring.

So one day Brother Fox thought he would catch up with Brother Rabbit. He sat down and thought and thought, and after awhile he said, "I know what I will do. I am going to give a picnic and invite all the animals in the woods, except Brother Rabbit."

He invited all the animals to go with him on the picnic, but did not invite Brother Rabbit.

A few days before the picnic Brother Rabbit told Brother Fox where a honey tree was. But Brother Rabbit thought he would get to the tree and cut it down and get the honey before Brother Fox could get there, but he did not. Brother Fox got up very early one morning and went and cut it down and got the honey and carried it home.

Then Brother Rabbit got mad. He was standing up against the house thinking about this dirty trick that Brother Fox played on him.

But all of a sudden he heard the people as they started for the picnic. Brother Rabbit quickly ran into the bushes and hid. All of the animals went down the road laughing and talking together.

When they were out of sight Brother Rabbit went to the door of Brother Fox's house and tried to open it, but it was locked and he could not get in. He went to the window and tried to get in but he was not tall enough to reach it. So he got a ladder and climbed up to the window and went in the house.

He looked all around but could not find the honey. He looked and looked and after a while up on a high shelf he saw a large can and said, "There is the honey. I will just get it."

He got a chair and climbed up in it. He pulled the can toward him and then the can fell, upside down on his head. If you ever did see a sight in all your life he was one.

Brother Rabbit licked the honey and listened. Finally he heard them coming back from the picnic. He said, "What am I going to do? Brother Fox will sure get me this time, for I can't run now."

But he jumped out of the window and thought he could get to the spring and wash off the honey before Brother Fox got there.

They came nearer and nearer but Brother Rabbit could hardly move, he was so stuck with honey. Then he rolled in the leaves until he was covered in them. He jumped up and started down the road toward Brother Fox and all his friends.

The animals were scared of such a funny looking animal and turned around and ran the other way. The little foxes went, "Boo! hoo! wait for me, mamma."

When all the animals were gone, Brother Rabbit crawled down to the spring and washed off the honey. Then he hid behind a bush and laughed and laughed because he had fooled the other animals.

Days passed and Brother Fox talked about the mean, strange animal they had seen. When he at last found that it was Brother Rabbit he grew madder and madder with him.

Brother Fox decided he would set a trap and he did. Brother Rabbit saw the trap and while he was playing around it, got his foot caught in the trap. Brother Fox got him for the first time.

Brother Rabbit begged Brother Fox to let him go. He said, "I will be your friend and brother." He begged so hard that Brother Fox let him go, but he said, "If you ever steal anything from me again or turn my honey over on the floor again I will kill you and eat you for dinner, if it's the last thing I ever do."

And that's why Brother Rabbit is still afraid of Brother Fox.

ILLIOKOTA DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Illiokota District Conference met with the Milledgeville church, on October 10 to 12. The conference was well attended throughout and a very splendid interest prevailed at all sessions. There were forty-four registered delegates with a goodly number of others from the Lanark and Milledgeville churches. The messages brought by the several speakers were true to the Word, and every interest of the church was given the place that it merited. Sermons were brought to the edification of all by Brethren E. ANNOUNCEMENTS

STERLING, OHIO

The NRA, Is It the Mark of the Beast?

By Russell D. Barnard

From a sermon preached at Dayton, Ohio in the First Brethren Church, Sunday Evening, September 17, 1933

Because of discussions of the NRA at National Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, a few weeks ago, and because everywhere about us today we see the sign "NRA," we are led to discuss this theme this evening. Many of the members of this congregation have asked me personally, "Do you believe the NRA is the Mark of the Beast?" I shall seek to answer these questions this evening and also to give some Scripture teaching of the End-Time conditions in which the Mark of the Beast will find its place.

Many will not agree with my treatment of this subject. I have never asked you to. I only ask you to consider the subject with me. I am a Fundamentalist, but not a fighting fundamentalist. I am a Pre-Millennialist, but I do not cast those who disagree with me into The Infernal. I am not in the date-setting business, although I do believe that we are in the end-days, even the very edge-days of this order of life. These personal positions naturally will effect my views with respect to the theme I am discussing this evening. It is only fair that I should tell you these things. We will understand each other better.

My convictions are not final. Conditions changing the NRA in the future may change the Christian's view of it. If, as the President is quoted as saying, his statement really was, That the "couldn't be expected to be right more than 75 percent of the time," and if as Ambassador Richard Washburn Child said in speaking of the President's personal policy, "I was wrong yesterday, let us try this other thing tomorrow"—we may expect great changes in the future. My convictions with respect to the Bible Account will probably not change, but my convictions with respect to the NRA may change quickly.

This evening I am not speaking concerning the political or industrial aspects of the NRA. That is a theme in itself, and should be discussed by one who knows more about it than I do. Please do not feel, either, that I consider myself a final authority in any part of this subject. I know so little about the inner workings of the NRA, and I know so little about the Mark of the Beast. I should like, now, to approach this subject as an individual who is attempting to interpret facts just as they manifest themselves. I realize that in the case of either the NRA or the Mark of the Beast it is easier to understand looking back, than looking ahead.

The Scriptures that we are giving special consideration to this evening are Rev. 13:16-18; 14:9-11; 15:2; 16:2; 19:20; 20:4. The stem of the same Greek word translated "Mark" in these Scriptures is translated "graven" in Acts 17:29. This may give us a hint in our interpretation later.

Who is the Beast?

Naturally before we can study the "Mark" of the Beast, we must find out something about the "Beast" himself. We refer to Revelation 13:1-10 and to 2 Thess. 2:3 ff. in this regard. We believe that the Beast is the Final Anti-Christ who will rule in the world as a Dictator in the period just before Christ is revealed from heaven. There are six conclusions we have reached concerning The Beast. (1) He represents, or is, political sovereignty. "Horns" indicate this. (2) He is a picture of world power in it's Final Consummation. (3) He is a realization of World Administration embodied in One Man, "Man of Sin," (4) He is a super-human personage, at least his prime minister (False Phophet) is of such a character, (6) He will be attractive, bewitching and beneficent until those living will cry out, "Who is like unto the Beast?"; (6) He will supplant everything that is holy and good.

Roots for the Tree

Every tree must have roots. Even the Final Anti-Christ Rule must have it's precedent conditions. We find abundant mention of this in the "Apostate" conditions foretold for the end-times. In 2 Thess. 2:3; 1 Timothy 4:1-3; 2 Timothy 3:1-5; 4:3-4, and 2 Peter 3:3-4. We find these conditions very vividly set forth. It seems to me that any student of world conditions would have a difficult time in proving that there is not great similarity between these Biblically foretold conditions and the world conditions of our own day. But it will be better that you shall read these and other Scriptures and make your own deductions.

Points of Likeness

We want now to enter into a definite study of the NRA and the Mark of the Beast. First we want to consider the Points of likeness between the two. We shall consider five of them, there are doubtless many more. (1) A SIGN IS EVIDENT. In the case of the NRA it is in almost every window, it is on the wrapper of almost every piece of merchandise. In the case of the Mark of the Beast it is to be in the palm of the right hand and on the forehead. The point here is that it is evident. Anyone going anywhere can see it, and in each case at the appropriate time, will understand its meaning. (2) BOTH HAVE TO DO WITH BUYING AND SELLING. "That no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the Beast, or the number of his name". This is the Bible record concerning the Mark of the beast. We are all very well acquainted with the great effort that is now being made and will yet be made to bring every part of buying and selling under the NRA. This point is self-evident. (3) IT IS FOR RICH AND POOR ALIKE. The Scripture is very clear in this, and surely it is the purpose of our government to accomplish the same thing. Shameful, indeed, is the fact that the rich and poor alike will use the NRA as a place to hide from doing the right. (4) BOTH ARE IN A TIME OF CRISIS. The picture of the times immediately preceding the revealing of Anti-Christ are surely crisis times. They must be to bring a freedom loving world into any likeness of united power in which the Anti-Christ might fittingly work. No one will question that these days are days of crisis. As great as the War Days? Yes, many believe greater. It is a common statement even among the Modernists of our day that "civilization is hanging in the balance". (5) BOTH ARE ORDERS OF A DICTATOR. Is anyone offended by that implied thought that our land is under a virtual dictatorship today? A Dictator need not be bad. It is surely far better to live under a virtual Dictatorship than it would be to live under a government that had no power to enforce its desires. In the time of the Mark of the Beast the rule is an absolute Dictatorship. There is a difference between the two periods and types however. Ours is a Dictatorship granted willingly by the people for a specified purpose, and that, in the day of Anti-Christ is one usurped. One, we believe is in the interest of the people ruled and the other is really a persecution of the people ruled.

Points of Difference

There are points of difference. We desire to discuss five classes of differences and then draw some conclusions. (1) DIFFERENCE IN CONDITIONS. The Mark of the Beast is Worldwide and the NRA is only National. We realize that there are similarities to the Mark of the Beast in several countries, that in Russia, being reported, as being more strikingly like the Mark of the Beast. But today the Nations are at sword-points and it is impossible for me to see how the NRA could become worldwide without some drastic changes. Again, the failure to comply with the Mark of the Beast means death (Rev. 13:15). In our land there will doubtless be a severe punishment for those who do not live up to the provisions of the NRA after they have signed it, but surely nothing like the death penalty is anticipated or planned.

(2) DIFFERENCE IN POINT OF TIME. The Mark of the Beast, if our interpretation of Chapters 6-19 of the Book of Revelation is true comes during the Tribulation Period, possible after the Anti-Christ has revealed himself in his true colors about half-way through that period. There will be saints in the world then who will need to die to be saved, and multitudes of them will die rather than receive the Mark of the Beast but these will be Tribulation Saints and not Saints of the Church, members of the Church, the Body of Christ. Facing the Fact and Seriousness of Sin

Sin is real, and the world needs to be convinced of it and brought to seek freedom from it. That is a truth that must be loudly proclaimed; it must be an outstanding note in our message. It is one of the real needs of our day. of every day, in fact, but there never was a time when the need was greater than now of bringing men to face the fact and seriousness of sin. Men treat sin lightly. They do it in the movies, and in many homes and schools. Even many religious teachers are wont to deal apologetically with sin, and some actually deny its existence. The Christian Scientists do. Following the lead of their patron saint, Mary Baker Eddy, they say: "The notion that both evil and good are real is a delusion of the material senses which Science annihilates. Evil is nothing, no thing, mind, nor power" (Science and Health, page 330). But the influence of that false cult is small compared with that wielded by the Protestant pulpits—not a few throughout the land—that give forth an uncertain sound about the reality and seriousness of sin. When the voice of the prophets is muffled with doubt and expediency, what can you expect else than that the rank and file of men and women, both within the church and without, shall tolerate and apologize for evil and take a cynical, challenging attitude toward any serious effort to combat it?

The Universality of Sin

Men need to be reminded of the fact that they are sinners, that they are engaged in sin and living in sin, until redeemed and transformed by the grace and power of God. Men rarely know it, if they are honest with themselves; they do not need to be convinced of it. But they do need to be stirred up about it, brought more fully to realize it, and moved to do something about it. They grow dull toward sin; they become so used to evil and evil ways and standards that they lose their sense of the sinfulness of sin, and forget the fact that they are sinful in their very nature and unable of themselves to rise above it. They need to have brought to their attention what the Word of God says about human sinfulness. No man can escape condemnation as he stands before that revelation of divine truth; there are no possible exceptions. For it says: "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned" (Rom. 5:12). Again the Word declares: "There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one" (Rom. 3:10-12). "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23). And if those words are not definite and all-inclusive enough, consider these: "But the scripture hath concluded all under sin" (Gal. 3:22), and "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (1 John 1:8).

It is not a pleasant thing to do to tell men they are sinners, but that is the position of the Word, and that is the message we are commanded to give forth. And what can the messenger do but speak forth the words that are given him? and let us bear in mind that "The servant is not greater than his Lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him" (John 13:16).

The Seriousness of Sin

The extreme seriousness of sin is the thing that makes it so important that men shall be warned. If it were a light, trivial matter to commit sin and to live a life of sin, then would we not need to bestir ourselves about it, nor would Christ have resorted to such measures to deal with the sin problem. But nothing is more terrible in all the world than sin; nothing has such far-reaching and disastrous consequences. A man cannot sin with impunity. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6:7). Sin brings men into slavery. Jesus says: "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin" (John 8:34). And Paul asks: "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" (Rom. 6:16). Sin makes men hard and unresponsive to the overtures of mercy. Hear what the prophet said concerning the Israelites, on whom the judgments of God had fallen because of their wickedness: "O Lord, are not thine eyes upon the truth? thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them but they have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return" (Jer. 5:3). Sin brings upon itself divine hatred, for we read: "Six things doth the Lord hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him; a proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, an heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren" (Prov. 6:16-19). And it results in separation from God: "And I will profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity" (Matt. 7:23). Sin causes destruction, says Isaiah (1:28): "And the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed." And further they shall be cast into hell and torment: "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God" (Job 9:17). "And the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from the just, and they shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth" (Matt. 13:49-50). And finally, death is the end and wages of sin, even as Paul says: "For the wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23). From such terrible consequences it is impossible for men to escape, except by the redeeming grace of God. And concerning the seriousness and fatality of such a course it is the church's most urgent duty to be continually warning them.

The Remedy of Sin

The remedy has already been mentioned, but it must be stressed and some of the scriptural assurances pointed out. There is but one way of dealing with sin, and that is by repentance and acceptance of Jesus Christ by faith as the sin-bearer and Savior. Jesus himself began his ministry, as did John the Baptist, with a call to repentance. Matthew tells us that when Jesus began to preach he said: "Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. 4:17). That kingdom began, not with pomp and power, as the people then were expecting a new kingdom of Israel to be

Our Moral Recession

We have turned back upon the past; we are no longer going forward morally, nor yet spiritually. We think we are suffering dreadfully in a material way. And there is hardship abroad, and in many quarters chaos reigns. Some think we are about to end in a smash-up, so gloomy and despairing the outlook seems to them.

But serious as is the case in a material way, it is not half so chaotic and hopeless as is the moral situation. We are letting loose on every hand in matters of morals, losing much that has been gained in the way of standards of restraint and ideals through years of struggle. We have receded sharply and tragically. We had lifted high the torch of prohibition, but we are about to extinguish it and let the people wander in the darkness of unrestraint and drunkenness. We had come to the point where vice was losing caste and honest efforts were being made to clean up the cities and towns and protect our young people against many traps and temptations, but in recent months and years we have thrown down the bars and are letting carnality and reveling and indecency assert itself. We had sought to smother the gambling instinct and especially to protect the innocent and unwary from unprincipled sharks, but we are now turning to licensing gambling and are ready to give almost any vicious agency its day if it will make a considerable contribution to the public treasury and chip into the private graft fund. Movies and salacious and crime magazines are becoming steadily more poisonous, while things heretofore held sacred and inviolate, or largely protected, are being laid bare to the greedy despoiler or godless desecrater. The Sabbath is becoming the common property of selfish industry and commercialized sports.

And so it goes. And we have not seen the worst. The repeal of Prohibition will multiply the reactionary tendency. The country is already beginning to get boozed up. What will it be when we get really started? Hundreds of millions of gallons of strong liquors will be dumped upon our shores before Christmas, and that hallowed day will be the occasion for drunkenness, lust and murder, unless a miracle of law enforcement should be accomplished. We know of no place that contemplates such an event, but rather a progressive loosening of the ropes.

For example, Connecticut plans to issue various kinds of licenses for "taverns," "hotels," "restaurants," "package shops," "clubs," etc. A small fee of fifty dollars will be charged. Boys and girls and men and women can form clubs and drink themselves drunk. And most selling places will be located irrespective of schools and churches. There will be no limit to the alcoholic strength of wines and equally as great liberality will be exercised with regard to other liquors. Eventually that will be the prevailing attitude throughout the land, and there will be no effective restraint. State control will be a joke, and federal supervision will be a thing of the past.

That is the condition of things that the wet leaders and the wet press are fighting for, and to which vast numbers of church members have been deceived to fall in line with, without so much as a decent fight. That is the sort of conditions that may be expected to return when the liquor traffic has again become familiar throughout the land. It is in the interest of such an accentuated recession of morals that the states have been voting, and some are yet to vote. God give us a keener sense of wrongness of the wrong and the destructiveness of drunkenness and vice and corruption.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Christian Endeavorers have an interesting page this week, written by Brother Paul Davis, pastor of the Corinth, Indiana, church. Every live member and worker in Christian Endeavor is concerned about making the meetings more interesting. Brother Davis gives some good suggestions, growing out of his experience in the work.

Dr. A. D. Gnagey, whose resignation of his Altoona, Pennsylvania, pastorate at the close of fifty-five years in the ministry, was announced a few weeks ago, is now located in Ashland, Ohio, and gave the Publishing house a call this week. It was good to see Brother Gnagey about here again where he spent so many years of valuable service to the brotherhood as editor.

We are glad to extend our congratulations to Brother and Sister Arthur Carey, who were united in marriage on Saturday morning, October 14th in the College chapel. They are located at Lake Odessa, Michigan, where he is pastor of the Campbell Brethren church. May God give them a long, happy and successful life of service together.

Brother R. Paul Miller, Home Mission Secretary, reports his meeting at Garwin, Iowa, concerning which the pastor, Brother Raymond Blood, wrote last week. Brother Blood is a capable worker and, as Brother Miller suggests, he has found his way into the hearts of the people and is leading them on to victory. According to last week's report, there were thirty-nine confessions and reconsecrations, most of which came on the last Sunday.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes of the continued progress of the Lord's work in Argentina. Evangelistic work is going on continually, and with good influence, in spite of the hindrance of the Catholic priests, most of whom seem not to be worthy of the priesthood from the standpoint of morals, to say nothing of their ignorance and wilful mis-leading of the people. God certainly needs some true witnesses in that land of superstition and immorality. Thank God that he has given us that opportunity. Fourteen baptisms are reported.

Brother J. G. Dodds, secretary, and re-elected for another year, gives us a good report of the recent Mid-West district conference held at Beaver City, Nebraska. The church was commended for its efficient entertainment, even though without a pastor. Brother H. H. Rowsey was the director of the conference, and the newly elected moderator is Brother L. G. Wood, while his assistant is Brother J. S. Cook. The next year's conference will be held at McLouth, Kansas. The sessions are said to have been well attended and of much interest and inspiration.

Brother D. R. Murray, pastor of the Cooperative Brethren church at Columbus, Ohio, reports a successful evangelistic meeting recently conducted under the leadership of evangelist E. S. Coffman of the Church of the Brethren and Dr. Charles A. Bame and Brother R. D. Barnard. The writer also had the privilege of being on the field a little while. Fifteen confessions were received, ten of whom came by baptism and one by a former baptism. Others were reconsecrations. Brother Murray is carrying this work along with his high school teaching and is rendering a splendid service.

Our correspondent from Uniontown, Pennsylvania, tells of a victory of a financial character in their church, climaxed on October 15th, when, with Dr. W. S. Bell present for three services during the day, they asked for $1,000 to clear the indebtedness on their church building and went $1,160 over the mark. Brother W. H. Clough, their devoted pastor, had so planned the venture in co-operation with his church officials, as to be assured of success in advance. A remarkable growth has been experienced under Brother Clough's three years of service thus far, the membership having been increased from 70 to 300. Their set goal for 200 converts during their coming evangelistic campaign to be conducted by their pastor, indicates something of the daring faith that has made possible such success.

From an item in the Roanoke, Virginia, church calendar, we learn what is "the spirit of the Roanoke church". A call was recently made upon the members for an emergency offering of $1,000 to meet a payment on their building fund debt. They got the amount needed, though they had been giving during the year as much as they "possibly could", so they thought, both to the building fund and the current expenses. They had been doing some real sacrificing in their giving, too. But when this new call came, as one of the members remarked to another, "We realized that here was a crisis that must be met, so we just went down deeper in our giving." Do you wonder that this church is making good on a task that would have staggered many a congregation with such a sacrificial and loyal spirit prevailing widely among their members? They are not out of the woods yet, but they will get out, by the grace of God.

President E. E. Jacobs reports the total regular enrollment of Ashland College this year to be 261, with an additional 86 in two departments, bringing the total in attendance up to 347, which, while it is a decrease below last year, is yet a right respectable enrollment for times like these. Very likely there are a goodly number of Brethren students in other schools who ought to be in our own college, if only more effort were put forth on the part of pastors and other local leaders, and especially parents, to direct Brethren young people to their own church school, which, by all odds, is the best place to get a Christian education under denominational influences. The opportunities here presented that are nowhere else available ought to mean much to every real Brethren. You can help to make the attendance larger in the immediate future by cooperating with Prof. Black by sending in names of persons who might become interested, particularly young people, in Ashland College.

Why Brethren Churches?

By Charles A. Bame, D.D.

An attempted explanation for the call to heroic action and sacrificial service for the evangelistic program of The Brethren Church.

I have been requested from an unexpected source, to write on the above topic and am happy to respond. We are admonished to be able to "give answer to every man that asketh you a reason for the hope that is in you". 1 Peter 3:15. I have a good many reasons why there should be more Brethren churches and many attempts at organizing and establishing new ones this year. Into this reasoning must come more than sentiment and history both of which must largely be omitted from this article for the sake of necessary brevity.

If the Brethren Church is even to remain in its present position of force and power (small as that is) it will be because more of our people see a reason for it. If it does not grow larger and mightier, it will grow smaller and weaker. It can not remain static in this moving world.

Any discussion of this topic that will mean anything to ourselves must at once profess preferment and compel comparisons which we are slow to make. But if Brethren do not believe their church is preferable, they may very well resolve to dissolve and spend their money more advantageously through the channels of the larger denominations and save much loss through overhead. If they do believe that they have something superior to give to the world and yet, do not give it, they are cowards and unworthy. From that, we recoil and desist; we must preach it.

Our Claim to a Whole Gospel Message

1—First, then, we believe and profess that we are the modern repositories and representatives of the Whole Gospel. Nor are we the only ones who make this profession and it thus becomes quite necessary for us to establish our claim by our sacrifice, devotion and courage; and by preaching and teaching our message. It may be admitted that some other divisions of the church preach more grace, even though some of our people would not admit it. But if others do preach more grace, they depend almost entirely for their presentation of Christianity on this subject alone. I believe that it can be unequivocally stated that the Brethren preachers are entirely and wholly committed to the doctrine of salvation by grace. But while it is so, it is not so that they believe or make grace their entire gospel. It is not the Whole Gospel. Grace is the whole of salvation. Salvation is wrought and God's free gift given when men confess sin and surrender to Jesus as the Christ; but perfection goes on. The whole gospel does not end with salvation and neither must the wholeness of the message of Brethren preachers stop there; attaining perfection is a life process. Heb. 5:11-6:3; Phil. 1:6; 3:13-16.

Again, it may be admitted that some preach more works—at least give more value to works in obtaining salvation. But they who make works a part of salvation also contradict the Scripture and thus emasculate the Whole Gospel. In the same breath, we are warned against either extremity. Rev. 22:18-19. The gospel is a balanced message and they who preach it should preach it entire. As our own predecessors in the progressive ministry said it: "more than the gospel is too much; less than the gospel is too little; but the gospel is just right." With the Brethren, it is not grace alone nor works alone but the proving of our faith by our works. James 2.

Alexander Mack, recognized organizer of the Brethren Church, who must be given much credit for clearness of thought as well as courage to say it, said: "We do not expect to merit salvation by works, but alone through faith in Christ, which faith must have works of obedience in order that it may be saving faith. And when there is no such faith which worketh obedience (not because of the edict of the pope, but because of the command of Christ the crucified) there is no salvation to be hoped for from any act that is performed without faith". That was the Brethren position before the church left its home-country to find a place to grow in the colony of William Penn; it is the Brethren position today. Any other representation is false to the founders and false to the history of the Brethren peoples of all groups and divisions.

It may be admitted even, that some preach more rigorously and vehemently entire surrender and complete unworldliness of the Christian who deigns to repeat the incomparable separation of Jesus Christ from the world. But to my knowledge all are of a type that divests the gospel of some of its wholeness. One of the Dunker groups is of this class but their mis-interpretations of what "separation" in the gospel means, is so far-fetched and peculiar that it has become a losing cause and as such will soon disappear. It is constantly diminishing. Another group in this class are so emotional that they seem to forget in the summer, all the professions of sanctification they made at the revival time. In each case, it is not the Whole Gospel but man's interpretation of it. The latter, by their profession of happy experiences thus easily play into the chief tenet of Modernism making their religion entirely one of "experience" and their failure to evaluate all of the Word is apparent and damaging to the disciple's progress to a "perfection" that is Biblical.

Thus, I contend that our claim for the necessity of a Whole Gospel message is established and we can really give a reason for the hope we have. Our position is clear and it is our responsibility to herald it to the world.

Content of Whole Gospel Message

2—The content of that Whole Gospel message is not in a written creed. This, also is a guarded heritage of the Brethren peoples. The content of the Whole Gospel is of course, whole Gospel. From the very beginning, Brethren Conferences have been loath to write down a statement for future Brethren. Recently, our ministers have written a "Message of the Brethren Ministry" and various statements have been made from different other sources, but no one has yet attempted to promote their own ideas as those of God. Neither has any conference or group of Brethren peoples. It may be said that the Brethren have a growing or progressive creed for they have decided to do certain things and not to do others from year to year, but never from century to century or decade to decade.

Some of our own people have erred in saying that the "Message of the Brethren Ministry" is a creed. But not a single thinker whom I know among us would sign that as a final interpretation of the Whole Gospel Message. There are notable omissions and the very fact of its acknowledged incompleteness is assurance that while we are agreed on all the necessary, great fundamentals, we do not desire to formulate a final written creed because the Bible is that to Brethren, always.

This supreme regard for the wholeness of the Biblical message is set forth in a paragraph of the "Message of the Brethren Ministry" which no Brethren preacher would desire or to dare to deny and is stated as follows:

"The Ministry of the Brethren Church desires to bear testimony to the belief that God's supreme revelation has been made through Jesus Christ, a complete and authentic record of which revelation is the New Testament; and to the belief that the Holy Scripture of the Old and New Testaments, as originally given, is the infallible record of the perfect, final and authoritative revelation of God's will, altogether sufficient in themselves as a rule of faith and practice."

There is little need for hair-splitting definitions when the preachers of a denomination subscribe to that declaration.

The Need of Our Message

3—The peculiar need for the continuation of our message centers in this whole acceptance of the teachings of the Word of God. When it was much less popular than it is now, the Brethren were separated from other Protestant churches by their teachings against Liquor, War, Oaths, Divorce and the Second Coming of the Lord. We are now, no longer peculiar in many of these teachings because others preach them with vigor and faithfulness. Our cause has grown mightily outside of our own organization and in some cases it has advanced beyond us. But we still have a reason for our message that is not fulfilled otherwheres.

This is not to say that Brethren do not preach the great basic fundamentals. They do with all the power they possess. Great Bible teachers who have attended and spoken at our Conferences in special addresses have borne testimony to our ability and faithfulness on these lines. It is further evident that no periodicals are truer to the faith once for all delivered to the saints than ours. Our church has great and sufficient reason for existence in this message, but it is the message omitted in fulness from other pulpits that make the Brethren more responsible and it is to this peculiar message that we desire to direct considerate attention. Not that we shall preach the fundamentals of all faiths less but that we shall preach the fundamentals of all faiths and our, too, more.

a. The Brethren message is still "peculiar" on the subject of Baptism. I know of no single church in our country save the Brethren that has clung to the original mode. No scholar who knows original Greek nor yet, who knows history, disputes that Trine Immersion is the original method. The only and original "way" to baptize is that given in the Great Commission. Matt. 28:19. No construction can be put on that sentence that will admit of any method of baptism save Trine Immersion. If the "and of's" were out of it, then single immersion might be argued but still there would be the frequentative verb demanding frequent and not single action.

Besides, the Greek Orthodox church practices the Trine Immersion method and if any should be able to interpret the meaning of their language, it is those who speak it and know it. Moreover, those who use the triple action far outnumber those who use the single, including the Roman Catholic church. There is something for Brethren to contend for, even in this.

b. The Whole Gospel must also give meaning to the communion. Any one who will take the time to study John 13 and Luke 22 will discover that the last night our Lord was here before his crucifixion that he gave certain commandments which are not being carried out save by the smaller groups of Christians among whom the Brethren are the most numerous, perhaps.

Some indeed, practice feet-washing; others have a Lord's Supper and most, have the emblems of the communion called by them, the Lords Supper. But none of which I know, have all three in their proper relationship and order as Jesus gave them and commanded them. I shall not here try to produce the arguments for these ordinances but simply say that they were given as plainly and apparently, as commandments, as any part of the Bible. The supper for fellowship; the feet-washing for a symbol of cleansing and the emblems for a "remembrance" till he comes.

"What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder". Multitudes of people outside the Brethren church have testified to the great blessing obtained in keeping these commandments even as Jesus gave them. He knew what was good for man and what symbols were essential to a correct experience and interpretation of the Christian life. We shall never try to take away from him his right to command and direct. He is our Lord and his subjects do not rebel.

c. Turning now, away from the doctrinal, let me stress the need to "carry on" for the sake of our forbears. We have a heritage of truth and heroic defenders for two hundred years. Let not their sacrifice be squandered. Let us be a worthy progeny of these brave men and women who dared all for the sake of the truth. To us they bequeathed this Whole Gospel message. If they were right, who are we that we should allow their sacrifice to go unrequited? To us they also bequeathed the beginnings of our College, Publishing House and our Missions. Shall we now walk away from this inheritance and forsake the objects of their devotion and love? Shall we desert the thousands of heathen already won to the Lord Jesus Christ and the sacrificing workers already on the field, and some under the sod? Nay! We must carry on for their sake, as well as our Master's sake.

Our task may be hard in the times ahead. But I dare say that none of us who labor or give in the Master's name will ever have reason to repent or regret. Who knows but that we have come to the kingdom for a time like this? Who knows? Not many years since, one of our former good preachers believed that he should go to another denomination to be better able to serve his Master. He died in that faith; but not long before I was called to preach his funeral sermon he said to me, "Stick to the Brethren Church. I believe it to be the Millennial church". I was not ready to make such a claim for my own denomination, but I have not been able to forget his amazing statement, nor can I now deny that in so far as there is a Millennial church, it will have to be like the Master gave, and we believe he will say to those who follow him, "all ye are Brethren." Matt. 23:8.

And so, I have found good and sufficient reasons to my own way of thinking, why we should make the effort to drive on and on and on. To me, there is not a single reason or argument for delay, retreat or pessimism. It is a time for advance, courage and sacrifice. I am glad that our National Conference has sanctioned such a program. Almost daily, I am getting letters and cards from Ohio Brethren agreeing devotedly and sacrificially to attempt to forge forward in this year to new conquests and re-

SEEKING THE LORD

A Sermon—Text: Hosea 10:12

By W. R. Deeter

Men dissatisfied with God's Way
But no real gain in man's way neither for the church nor for the world.
Time to seek God's way at Calvary

Hosea finds a parallel between the battle of vengeance against the Benjamites in Gibeah and the judgment that is coming against Israel. There may be some delay, but when God wills the judgment will come. Ephraim is like a heifer which has been used only to the threshing floor, but now she must bear the yoke with Judah,—the weight of a foreign oppressor.

In verses 12 and 13 the metaphor of plowing leads to sowing and reaping. Hosea uses it to make another appeal for righteousness and for repentance. If they will devote themselves to righteousness they will receive mercy. They had been choosing their own path instead of allowing themselves to be directed by the Lord. They had misplaced confidence. Their fortress manned by mighty men would be destroyed.

Now from this "cloud-burst" we select the clause "It is time to seek the Lord" for a Text. The people were not content to take the path laid out for them. They sought to break away from God and ignore his instructions. So do we. We become dissatisfied with God's ways, the ways of righteousness and justice and truth. We spend much time in seeking out God's laws in nature; we delve deeply into the physical universe; we seek and obey God's will there, but when it comes to accepting and obeying the divine will for our lives and their relations to God and men, we ignore it or pass it by lightly. We are not satisfied with God's plan for Life. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is the way of death." Jesus said: "I am the way, the truth and the life."

Men everywhere hesitate to obey God. It is man's nature. He drifts away from the Bible and begins to build for himself. God is not in his considerations. He is only a far-off sovereign, perhaps, to be called when needed. We should think of God as a Provider for our every need, then when we come to know him, we will have no difficulty with him.

Many who entered the year of 1933, have now made their exit. Others will follow, we have no doubt. The year has been eventful. Change has been in the air. The daily routine of governmental and local affairs have all experienced this change. How unlike even ten years ago!

There has been a lot of human love in the world, and happiness. The more happiness the better. And the best place to find it is in the church of Christ. Multitudes go into our churches on the Sabbath, and there join in the singing of "How Firm a Foundation", "Rock of Ages", "The Old Rugged Cross", and "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow". Many hearts are strangely warmed. Some may not detect it that warmth; others go away with a holy glow in their souls. When we get on the INSIDE of things we discover that God's plans are not arbitrary, but were given because he loved us, and knew what we needed. There never was a time when we needed to seek the Lord more than NOW.

I. It is time to Seek the Lord NOW.

Have we discovered how little progress we made during the years of prosperity? What did we gain that remains?

It is true we have great buildings of architectural grandeur, and beautiful churches built when money was plenty but when vital godliness rested lightly upon us. But what a change! Many are running on "half rations" now, others are wondering how they will get along at all, and some have abandoned their work. In the former years the church's gains were too much material and not enough spiritual. It was not seeking the fulness of God dwelling in Jesus Christ so much as the fulness of the treasury. It is time we were turning back and seeking the fulness of him who is the head of all principality and power. To make this possible he crowned Golgotha with his blood.

And the world—what has it gained? It is very largely at war with God. It is in a state of rebellion against the King of the Universe. And no real progress, or prosperity or peace can be gained when such a condition prevails. Desirable as peace is and horrible as war is, the nations of the world are fostering a state of mind that leads to bloody conflict. There are good and honorable men who say the reasonable course is the course of peace and some insist on peace at any price, but there are selfish, angry men who would cease to reason and resort to war. And their counsel will prevail so long as God is left out of account. The world may go on and build, and work for prosperity and progress, but it will gain nothing that will abide, because it persists in leaving God out. He will not be left out, nowhere. You cannot think of a Creator being so prodigal as to allow himself to be left out of the affairs of his world. And a world order that attempts it he will make to suffer the consequences.

Consider how men are mocked by their evil course. Out of the eternal hill they are panning gold. Old timers are at it; young men are at it, and many of them are getting a good yield. The granaries are bulging, the cattle are many and sleek; the swine are ready for pork-chops; products are gathered in store. Yet many have not enough to eat and wear. What a mess we are in! But it is man's mess, not God's. Men will be hungry and cold in the midst of plenty. Why? Because of an unjust economic system, because of selfishness and greed, because men will remain spiritually impoverished in the midst of abounding grace.

Men try to help themselves out of the situation in many foolish ways. For instance they try to economize. A man said to his wife, Let me run the house and economize a bit. So he started out to save, here a little, there a little, agreeing to buy only the necessities of life. He went into a store and said, "I just want one of the necessities—a little tobacco." I had just purchased some bread, meat and cheese, and said to him, "These are some of the necessities for me." That is a sample of the wisdom of men. They are foolish in the things they seek, foolish even in their material quests, and much more so in regard to spiritual things. They seek life without Christ. They seek salvation without the Savior. They seek eternal riches without his abounding grace. They seek a Jesus who is not the Son of God. They seek Bethlehem but not Calvary.

If we deny Christ as the Son of God, we will never discover the God of the New Testament. In reading John 1:1ff, we were led to ask, "Where do we find Christ?" the Christ of the New Testament?" The answer is AT CALVARY! Not in the Manger; not in Jerusalem, but at CALVARY. THERE we will find his FINISHED WORK for US.

II. WHERE Shall we Seek Him?

"Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near". Seek him with the whole heart (whole being). You are the sinner, not he. He gave himself for the sinner. Seek him like the Prodigal; seek him from the pig's sty; seek him amidst the filth and rags. He is waiting your call.

Seek him like the woman of Samaria; seek him like the Rich Young Ruler—only go with him all the way.

III. WHY Should We Seek Him?

It is the grossest ingratitude to refuse to seek him. I consider it ungrateful if I refuse him. When I remember his admonition, "Seek ye the Lord while it is day"—the day of opportunity—"the night cometh when no man can work . . . etc." I am sure we ought to seek him because it's the wisest thing to do. And a thing everyone can do. I know a man who is greatly handicapped physically, but he knows the Lord. He is poor, but yet because he knows God, he is a millionaire.

Ah, the cupboard may be bare; the children's toes may stick through their shoes, and our clothes may be threadbare, but if we still have two knees on which to kneel, and two eyes with which to read the Bible, let us thank God. O dear friends, there is nothing like a Faith that can reach a hand out in the dark when the shadows deepen, and sorrows come and touch Christ. Such a faith in God, in Christ, in the Holy Spirit satisfying. It gives us something that abides.

This World-order is tottering, and there is to be a new Order. It is time to seek the Lord. Our souls are trying to get out onto the Mountain tops, where there is freedom and free range with God and his Son Jesus and all the saints. But somehow we seem manacled in a cage. We seem tied with pride, with dress, with fame and success.

Not many moons ago the nation was shocked when over the ethereal waves was carried the news "Calvin Coolidge is dead". A nation mourned, but his spirit lives on. The end came suddenly, but he had sought the Lord. Life is uncertain. Now is the time for you to seek the Lord. Wherever you are, seek him now. Whoever you are, seek him now. It is the wise thing to do. If an intellectual problem troubles you, let the Word speak. If it's lack of faith, let the Spirit convince you. If it's sin that troubles you, let Christ bear your burden. Seek the things which cannot be shaken. Some things do and will abide. The word of God cannot be overthrown. God himself will continue to be our refuge. Christ will remain "the same, yesterday, today, and forever." The Holy Spirit is in the world, faithful to his appointed task. "Seek him."

Why Brethren Churches?

Facing the Fact and Seriousness of Sin

launched, but with humility, sacrifice and suffering. He was to gain his kingdom by means of the cross, on which he as the all-sufficient sacrifice was to be offered, the Lamb of God, to take away the sins of the world. His portrait is found in Isaiah 53:3-6, the most impressive and appealing word-picture contained in literature:

He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from him: he was despised and we esteemed him not.

Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted.

But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace is upon him; and by his stripes we are healed.

All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.

He is the one who is become our sacrifice, the one "Who," to use Peter's own words, "his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye are healed" (1 Peter 2:24).

Having accepted the divine sacrifice, we must depend on the renewing power of the Spirit to enable us to stand clean and strong, enabled to throw off the old ways of the world, and to be holy and fit for service. Paul admonishes "That ye put off concerning the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; that ye may put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness" (Eph. 4:22-24). Again in the same epistle, he writes: "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. But God, who is rich in mercy, . . . hath quickened us together with Christ" (Eph. 2:1, 2, 4, 5). We must seek God for that cleansing, renewing power.

But, being renewed, we must continue in the power of the Spirit, if we would keep free from the allurements of the world and the temptations of the flesh. Paul's counsel is vital; no Christian can afford to ignore it. "This I say, then, Walk in the Spirit and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh" (Gal. 5:16). Every hindrance must be cast aside and never allow ourselves an off moment. "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us" (Heb. 12:1), and not only so, but "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil" (Eph. 6:11). That is the one and only way to deal with this serious sin problem.

SOVIET FAILS TO BREAK RELIGIOUS ZEAL

Religious faith is not extinct in the Soviet Union, even though the Soviet government for the last fifteen years has been carrying on with varying degrees of intensity a systematic anti-religious drive, writes the Moscow correspondent of The London Sunday Observer.

Although many churches have been torn down, especially during the last years; although priests and ministers are deprived of food cards and subjected to various social discriminations, although the Soviet citizen who professes religious faith is often at a disadvantage as regards preferment in the state service, one can still see signs of surviving religious belief in the Soviet Union.

What gives special concern to Soviet anti-religious propaganda is that religious practices can be found not only among the members of the pre-war older generation, but also among younger people, who have been brought up under the Soviet regime.

Young peasants and young city office workers, together with students and workers, in a few cases, have formed sectarian circles with strict requirements as to sexual purity and abstinence from alcohol and tobacco. These attract some young people who are not satisfied with materialistic philosophy of Communism.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

II Thessalonians

"No man," says Paley, "writes unintelligibly on purpose." St. Paul wrote his first letter to the persecuted and afflicted Thessalonian saints and encouraged and comforted them with the Blessed Hope. But they, like many others who are infants in scripture knowledge, failed to understand some things which he spoke and wrote to them. Accordingly the Apostle penned a second letter in which he answered more fully how Jesus Christ would come with his saints to set up his glorious Kingdom on the earth.

They had listened to the famous missionary's instruction concerning the order of events involved in the Second Advent; they had assured themselves that they understood it; but the more they pressed the idea of the "Man of Sin" the more they became perplexed. They also, in view of the very-immediate-coming-view which they held, developed busybodies—men who asked, "Why work, why save, if he is coming so speedily?" It was a real question calculated to tax the ingenuity of St. Paul. The famous advice concerning working and eating given in this writing will stand as long as the world stands.

The Proper Attitude

It is a positively dangerous thing to get unduly excited over the Second Advent. The reader of these lines will recall how some of the old American Puritans and statesmen were greatly alarmed over the sudden darkening of the azure skies and the unusual darkness manifested in nature at one of their gatherings. When the Assembly had become sufficiently excited to produce a near hysteria on the part of some who felt assuredly that the day of Judgment was at hand, one wise senator rose up and exclaimed: "If this be indeed the Judgment Day, it cannot find us better employed in any respect than in quietly doing our duty. I move that the candles be lighted." That gentleman certainly summarized Paul's excellent advice in a very practical way to those legislators. He must have been a reader of the Epistles, to say nothing of the Gospels.

A letter of General Lee's quoted by the Bishop of Derry contains the above quotation. It no doubt appears elsewhere—as the writer has read it and heard it often. However, the same Bishop adds another interesting fact. He tells how the famous St. Francis de Sales was approached by a friend while he was playing a game of whist, asking him what he would do if Christ were at hand. The Bishop intelligently responded, "Finish the game; for his glory I began it."

The prayer of the Thessalonians and ours should be:

"Draw nigh, draw nigh, Emmanuel,
And ransom captive Israel,
That mourns in lonely exile here
Until the Son of God appear.
Rejoice! Rejoice! Emmanuel
Shall come to thee, O Israel.

"Draw nigh, draw nigh, O Morning Star,
And bring us comfort from afar;
And banish far from us the gloom
Of sinful night and endless doom.
Rejoice! Rejoice! Emmanuel
Shall come to thee, O Israel.

"Draw nigh, draw nigh, O Lord of might,
Who once, from Sinai's flaming height,
Didst give the trembling tribes thy law
In cloud and majesty and awe.
Rejoice! Rejoice! Emmanuel
Shall come to thee, O Israel."

The Object of the Letter

To discover the object of this letter, one must observe the doctrinal and practical sections. In the teaching section, he reminds them that while the coming is near (eggus) it was not instant (enesteken), that is, had not begun. In the practical section, he points out the necessity of living righteously whether that coming was immediately at hand or even more remotely so. The Second Letter is not written to obscure the First Letter, as some suppose, but only to evince its true meaning.

The Man of Sin

The "Man of Sin" is the Antichrist; "the Lawless One;" (cf. Daniel 7, 8, 11 with 2 Thess. 2:1-12) and "the Son of Perdition." He is "the deceiver" and the "liar." To use language of a great American Bible Scholar, "He is represented as a consummate flatterer, a brilliant diplomatist, a superb strategist a sublime hypocrite. For he is the Antichrist, the Vice-Christ, alter Christus, the rival of the Son of God and his Adversary." Satan will give to him a throne, power, authority, and all the necessary devilishness to carry out his program (Rev. 13:2).

The writer of these articles does not believe that "the Man of Sin" is the Pope of Rome, as many allege. He is to be revealed in the future and the character and history of Romanism is not such as would allow a student of the Word to reach such a conclusion. Remember that that Man is yet to come. The Scripture so asserts.

Philip Mauro interestingly observes: "The sin of man has its outcome in the 'Man of Sin.'" Again, he says: "Not until the Lord has caught up his own will the Lawless One come into public view."

Dr. A. J. Gordan used to say: "The mystery of godliness is God humbling himself to become man; the mystery of iniquity is man exalting himself to become God." Truly the program in the direction of the deification of man is on the way to nearer fulfillment than it ever has been.

The Pope and the "Man of Sin" may parallel each other in certain respects in their world wide program. That is a self-evident fact. And the Pope, to use Richard Baxtor's quaint remark, "has bad luck to be so like him." Yet one must hesitate to identify the two as one and the same person. Historic attempts to do so have failed miserably.

The Essential Lesson

The essential message of the book of II Thessalonians is summed up admirably by Dr. Farrar in the following paragraph:

"Be ready. To us, as to the world, Christ shall come as thieves in the night—"In an hour when ye know not the Bridegroom cometh." "The last day is hidden, that all days may be observed." The attempt to calculate the day by Apocalyptic dates is distinctly anti-scriptural, as well as foolish. Christ "puts down the childish fingers that count the number of the days." The lesson to us, the lesson to all, is, Watch. One of those old Jewish Rabbis—the Rabbi Joshua Ben Laive—whose lives were spent in watching for the coming of that Messiah, whom, alas! though he had come, they knew not, tells how once in a vision he asked the Prophet Elijah when should Messiah come? "Go and ask him," said Elijah to the Rabbi. "Where shall I find him?" "He sits among the beggars at the gate of Rome." The Rabbi went and found him, and asked when he would come. "Today," was the answer. The Rabbi returned to Elijah the Prophet and told him the story; but even while he was telling it, the day was over, and the sun had set. "How?" exclaimed the Rabbi. "The day is past, and he has not come! Has he then spoken falsely to me?" "No," answered the Prophet; "what he meant was, 'Today if ye will hear his voice.'" Yes, and that too is a summary of the Second Epistle:—"Today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

"So even I, and with a heart more burning,
So even I, and with a hope more sweet,
Groan for the hour, O Christ of thy returning,
Faint for the flaming of thine advent feet.

Ah, what a hope! and when afar it glistens
Stops the heart beating and the lips are dumb:
Only my spirit to his silence listens
Faints till it find him, quivers till he come."

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

It would be more than "a twice told tale, weary to the dull ear of flesh," were the present writer to attempt a detailed description of the narrow winding streets, its bazaars, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, the Church of the Redeemer, along with others more modern. As you fall into the covetous hands of the ubiquitous, ignorant, professional guides, who conventionally seem never satisfied with the generous backshish you hand over to them for their questionable services, but always stretch out their itching palms for "more," you are shisked around here and there to take in the numerous sacred shrines of reputed legendary interest. Without a quiver of the muscles of their face they will point you out where the palace of Caiaphas stood, the place of the Last Supper, the Via Dolorosa, the Ecce Homo Arch. and so on. Some sight seeing objectives are undeniably genuine, the ground under your feet, the sky over your head, the solemn looking mountains and hills, the brilliant silver-like paschal moon, the Mount of Olives, the Valleys of Jehosaphat and Hinnom, and hardly beyond question, the Garden of Gethsemane.

An outstanding object of interest is the mosque of Omar, also known as the Dome of the Rock, erected on the site of the Temple of Solomon, built by Abd-el-Melek. A. D. 686. A pretentious looking building, sixty-seven feet above the floor, railed in to protect it from profanation, is a large rock, superstitiously reputed to be suspended upon nothing, but in fact, nothing more than the top of an underground rock, or cave.

Jerusalem and the numerous points around would make

to "get busy." And the archaeologists, and learned societies of Europe and America have responded to the summons. One of the most outstanding efforts of the kind was when in June, 1867, Lieutenant Warren of the Royal Engineers of England, undertook a systematic excavation of underground Jerusalem and continued the work energetically until April, 1870. The results of this effort are embodied in a charmingly written volume entitled, "The Recovery of Jerusalem."

Driving a perpendicular shaft deep down through the age long accumulated mass of stone, and brick and earth, that represented the many destroyed and leveled over Jerusalems of other days, he reached the original walls of the Temple area. To realize a splendid confirmation of the Bible statement, that while the Temple was in the course of construction, "No sound of hammer, or axe, nor any tool of iron was heard" (1 Kings 6:7). The purpose being that the stones must have been previously prepared elsewhere before they were brought to the place where they were to go into the walls, and so accurately cut, that they required no alteration whatever. Far down underground to the depth of one hundred feet and over, where they had lain all these long centuries, we beheld the uncontested and conclusive witness to the accuracy of the Divine Word. Here they were, "the great stones, the costly stones, the hewed stones." The cornerstone is from fourteen to fifteen feet in length. One stone at the southeast angle is estimated to weigh one hundred tons. Another, at the southwest corner is thirty-eight feet long. Another interesting thing is, that upon these stones were mysterious letters and marks. And, notice, not in Hebrew. But these red marks were Phoenician letters and numerals, placed there by the Tyrian masons to indicate, just as it is done today in extensive building operations, where they were to be placed. The Jew was not a builder, nor is he largely so today. The temple was of heathen construction. Under Jerusalem, near the Damascus Gate, is a vast excavation, or quarry, where many of these stones were cut and prepared for use.

This discovery of underground Jerusalem has proved how vast were the walls of the temple, as they lifted themselves from deep valleys on three sides, and surmounted by the leaning white marbles of the Holy Shrine, with its pillars, and porticoes, its several courts and its altars.

An interesting and valuable "find," associated with Jerusalem only incidentally, but of historic interest by reason of its connection with one of its kings, Jehosaphat, confirms the story recorded in 2 Kings, the third chapter, that Mesha, the king of Moab, tributary of his suzerain, the king of Israel had rebelled against his overlord in a refusal to render the annual payment of 200,000 lambs and rams. And, in a desperate effort to defeat the combined attack of the allied forces of Israel, Judah and Edom, in the supplicated intervention of his national god Chemosh, he made a sacrificial offering of his eldest son, the crown prince, upon the city wall, in full view of the invading forces. The inscribed stone that he prepared and set up to commemorate this crisis event of his reign was about four feet high, two feet wide, fourteen and one-half inches thick, with thirty-four lines containing one thousand words in Phoenician lettering. It was found in the ancient territory of Moab, in 1868, by Dr. Klein, missionary of the Church of England, and fully fits in with the scriptural record.

Another "find" of exceeding interest and value is that of what is called

"The Temple Tablet"

In the days of Christ and the apostles the temple area, according to Josephus, was about fourteen acres in extent, with its several courts of the priests, the court of Israel, and the court of the women. In addition there was an outward court called the Court of the Gentiles. This separate court was provided with numerous porches of surpassing magnificence, and also with lines of Corinthian columns, of a single piece of white marble twenty-five feet in height. At regular intervals on the elegantly constructed stone wall separating the court of the Gentiles from the sacred enclosure, were placed tablets of stone bearing inscriptions. Some in Greek and others in Latin letters, which warned foreigners against an attempt to go beyond their own court upon penalty of death. You may recall an event that came close to ending up in a tragedy, when Paul, in company with some Hebrew worshippers entered the court of the Jews, and when the rabid Hebrew zealots charged that he had been accompanied by Gentiles.

One of these inscribed temple tablets of warning was found in 1871, by Monsieur Gnanneau, near the northwest angle of the old temple area. It is three feet long, two feet wide, and fifteen inches thick, and reads: "No foreigner is to pass within the partition wall and enclosure around the sacred court. Whosoever is caught there will be responsible for his own death, which will ensue."

These prohibitive tablets were doubtless in the mind of Paul as he wrote to the Gentile converts, "Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh . . . aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise. . . . But now in Christ Jesus . . . ye are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us. . . . For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father" (Ephesians 2:11-19).

It is not at all unlikely that the eyes of Christ frequently rested upon this tablet.

In 2 Kings 20:20 but more fully so in 2 Chronicles 32:30, we have the record of the completion of an engineering scheme of prime importance to the interests of Jerusalem. To insure the city an ample supply of water in the event of the invasion of the land by a foreign foe. The record of 2 Chronicles reads, "This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourses of Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city."

An inscription commemorating its success was accidentally run across by some boys, pupils of a German architect, Professor Schiek, in 1880, as they were playing in the Pool of Siloam. "The Siloam Inscription," by which name it goes, reveals the remarkable fact, showing a high degree of engineering skill at that distant date, that the workmen began simultaneously at each of the two ends of the long excavation of 1,708 yards in length and met accurately at the projected point of connection.

Another discovery made at Jerusalem by the Frenchman, Professor Ganneau, in 1874, is the reputed Statue Head of Hadrian. The imposing statue of this Roman emperor was erected somewhere about 131 A. D. on the sacred site of the Holy of Holies as an affront to the helpless and enraged Jews. It precipitated such a high pitch of frenzy that it brought on an insurrection, headed by a Jewish zealot who gave himself the title name, Bar Cocheba, "Son of the Star," and claimed to be the Messiah predicted in Numbers 24:17, "There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a scepter shall come out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of

PAUL IN MACEDONIA

(Lesson for November 12, 1933)

Lesson Text: Acts 15:36 to 17:15. Golden Text: Acts 16:31)

Paul Begins His Macedonian Ministry. Acts 16:9-15

After completing his first missionary journey Paul and Barnabas went up to Jerusalem, where the burning mission problem was solved as to admitting Gentiles into the church. Returning to Antioch in Syria, the two leaders separated, each taking a helper; whereupon Paul began his second missionary journey. Under the impulse of the Spirit Paul altered his plans and went to the seaport of Troas, where he was joined by Luke, and here he received the Macedonian call to come over into Europe to plant the Gospel. This was the beginning of that far reaching work.

TUESDAY

The Philippian Jailor Converted. Acts 16:25-31

The first fruit of Paul's preaching in Macedonia was the conversion of Lydia and her household. A very happy occasion for the evangelistic party. But the next results were not quite so agreeable in one way. The casting out of the evil spirits from the "sooth-saying" girl got the missionaries into trouble, and they were cast into prison for their good deeds. But here they had a most unusual opportunity to witness for their Master in prayer and praise of song, and after the earthquake which opened their prison doors, they found it meant more than opening a door to let them out of jail. It opened a door to another opportunity to preach the gospel, and as a result of this preaching another man, the jailor and his family were converted and baptized.

WEDNESDAY

The Macedonians. 2 Corinthians 8:1-8

In Paul's letter to Corinthian brethren he finds occasion to mention some of the graces that had been developed in the churches of Macedonia, graces that would give prestige to any church, and especially to the church in Corinth, and to many of the Brethren churches in America.

This is especially true of the great grace of giving, which had been so highly developed in the churches of Macedonia. First the giving of self, after that the giving of material support to the Lord's work.

THURSDAY

Paul's Prayer for the Philippians. Philippians 1:1-11

It should do any believer good to read carefully and to consider prayerfully these few verses that Paul addressed to his Brethren at Philippi. They had been faithful and true, not only to their Lord, but to their human leader as well, and the apostle in these verses tells them how thankful he is at all times, even to the extent that he feels called upon to thank his Heavenly Father every time he thinks about them, and he continues to pray that their love may more and more abound. What a wonderful fellowship must have existed between them.

FRIDAY

The Philippians Care for Paul. Philippians 4:10-20

In yesterday's study we learned how the Apostle appreciated the high spiritual quality of the believers in this church, and we learned how much he had them as a cheerful burden upon his heart when he held communion with the heavenly Father, and now in these verses we learn of the deep concern these faithful followers of the Lord had for their much loved teacher and earthly leader. Their concern for the physical wellbeing of Paul found expression in many gifts they sent unto him that he might not suffer from hunger and cold. For all this Paul is thankful and takes occasion to tell them so.

SATURDAY

The Gospel and World Peace. Isaiah 55:6-13

Much talk is heard these days about "world peace," while it seems too many nations are preparing for war. In a recent survey of the student body of the great universities of America. it was found that a very large majority of them are strongly opposed to war, and in Oxford, England, we are told the student body declared they would not enlist in war under any circumstances. On the other hand one of the most popular books that has come out in Germany in recent years declares that England and America have become "soft" as a result of their peace doctrines, and that to grow strong' young men a nation must have ever before its people the idea of war to make its young men realize their own part in the development of national life. Women are urged to bear children with the thought in mind that they are contributing in a heroic manner to the future of their country.

Evidently the only way that world peace can be secured is the Gospel way, the way of love.

SUNDAY

Blessings for the Persecuted. Matthew 5:10-16

The Apostle Paul was persecuted, Silas was persecuted, Stephen was persecuted, Peter and John were persecuted, and we presume faithful men and women will always be persecuted in this unregenerate age when they cry out against its iniquities. And were it not for such promises as these verses hold out to the faithful, we might ask, "Who then is that faithful servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh will find watching?"

Just what comfort those people get out of throwing this part of the Gospel into the discard, by saying it is not for this age, and still call themselves fundamentalists, is beyond my weak comprehension. There are consoling thoughts in these verses. Let us hold on to them.

How I Can Make My C. E. Meetings More Interesting

By Paul A. Davis, Pastor Corinth Church, Indiana

This is a subject of much concern among the officers, and others who are connected with such an organization as Christian Endeavor. This question should be in the minds of every Christian Endeavor member especially, since so many are not taking an interest as they did; and since outsiders are not being interested enough to become active in the work of Christian Endeavor.

The question is before us, How can I personally, individually make my Christian Endeavor meetings more interesting, in other words what should I do that I haven't done to attract to Christian Endeavor and give something to all that will be worth while.

I can make my Christian Endeavor meetings more interesting by being as regular as possible in attendance, for if I don't attend regularly how can I make the meetings interesting to myself and others because I will not have a close relationship to the members or anything that might be done.

2. I can make my Christian Endeavor meetings more interesting by learning about and studying the theme and topics for each meeting. If I don't know what the meeting is to deal with, how can I interest myself or others in the meeting. I think every C. E. member should, upon finding the main subject for each meeting, study, meditate and secure material upon the subject. They will individually be inspired and have a zeal to make the meeting beneficial to all in attendance.

3. I believe every Christian Endeavor member should and could make the meetings more interesting by praying for the success of the meeting, and all who engage in the meetings. If I am not willing to intercede with and petition our Heavenly Father for our fellow-workers and for meetings which are conducted in the interest of developing men and women for the service of the Master, I cannot interest others in the meetings.

4. I can make my Christian Endeavor meetings more interesting by advertising them by means of posters; and invitations sent out urging the members and those who should become active in the Master's service. If I am not zealous to see others attending the meetings, what good will the meetings be to me; if I do not express by my interest and anxiety to share with others what there is to be found in the subject, how will it greatly benefit life.

5. I can make the Christian Endeavor meetings more interesting by giving of my talent; of my time, and my portion of wealth which God has blessed me with for his glory. If I depend on others, and do not offer to help in any way in the meetings, it seems and looks as if I expected others to serve for me. We find that as a rule we obtain in proportion to what we put into anything. According to the Master's words as recorded in Luke 6:38, if we give anything to others something will be given to us in like measure. According to Acts 20:35; it is more blessed to give than to receive, so if we give of what we have to the Christian Endeavor meetings we shall be blessed more than by sitting back expecting others to give to us always. Each of us who professes to follow the Master, and serve in this organization has a place to fill, has something to do, and is responsible for what some one else does not do. Therefore, I can make my Christian Endeavor meetings more interesting by personally contributing to the meetings in whatever way possible. Peru, Indiana.

the food supply was getting low. He could only remain another night and day and then go home, even so, traveling hungry.

Might one gently enquire the meaning of this long vigil through freezing nights and burning noons?

He was praying.

To what spirit?

He did not know.

The mountain spirit perhaps. Tiger, or dragon or horse, he was not certain which. Certainly the spirit of the place. The water on the rock and the rice grains were for the spirit of the place.

What earnest desire led him to this rigorous form of devotion?

No particular desire. He wished to please the spirits.

Were they good or evil?

He did not know. They might give blessing. Certainly they could bring disaster if neglected.

How did he pray?

He had no method. He tried to keep his mind as free from thought as possible. He had heard from Buddhist monks that this was true religion.

Would he like to know how to pray, truly?

Surely he would. But where could one find a teacher.

Had he ever heard of the great God who made the earth and the sky and the mountains, the clear water for man's drink and rice for his food; or of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who came into the world that men might learn about God and go to Him in prayer?

Truly he had never been caused to hear such words as these. What was the meaning of them?

Jesus Christ is the son of God. He came into the world to save men from their sins. He is our go-between with God. The Orient's great teacher Confucius is reported to have said, "If a man sins before God there is no place in his life for prayer," but our sacred writings have a more helpful word for sinners. In our Book it is hopefully written, "If any man sin we have a go-between in the presence of God the Father, even Jesus Christ the Sinless One." You can pray to God even now if you will. Close your eyes to shut out the sight of the world around you and repeat this prayer after me...."

O God who created all things, our Father, open my dark mind that I may understand thy truth. Help me to understand that Jesus Christ is my Savior from the guilt and power of sin. Help me to trust him now and forever. Free me from all fear of evil spirits and save me for Thyself. I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

To our amazement, sentence by sentence he repeated the prayer.

"I ask in the name of Jesus Christ...." Clearly and carefully the words fell from his lips. Strange, was it not? A young man who, until that moment, had never heard the name of Christ, willing to repeat a form of prayer suggested by an unknown stranger of a different race?

It was time to go down the trail again. We could not stay for a longer talk. One final question and we would go. Would he like some leaflets which would tell him more about God?

He would but he could not read.

"Take them anyway," we said. "Ask someone in your village to read them aloud

A KOREAN AT PRAYER

Seeks the Unknown God
There are many lonely
Seeking Hearts

By Rev. Walter
C. Erdman

In "Missionary Review of the World"

A young man was sitting cross-legged on flat-topped boulder, his hands upon his knees, immovable in meditation. He might have been a "White Buddha" on its pedestal. He did not glance at passers-by and his unseeing gaze was not disturbed by the brightness of the noonday sun.

The ashes of a dying fire were just below his feet. On another boulder near at hand were a brass bowl and spoon and in a bag a few handfuls of rice. A dozen yards away in a hollow place at his right an ice-cold spring bubbled out among the roots of a hazel clump and slipped away in the bamboo grass. On a slightly higher rock behind him was a small white china bowl filled with clear water from the spring and a few grains of cooked rice were scattered over the surface of the rock.

The young man was worshipping an "unknown god," the spirit of the mountain. The rock was his altar. The limpid spring water and the rice grains were his offerings. His ascetic fare and his self-discipline were his devotions. He was waiting....

Our mountain climbing party of missionaries, suddenly emerging from the thicket across the glade, neither aroused his curiosity nor disturbed his concentration. He made no movement to observe us, though it must have been startling to have a group of foreigners, barbarians from beyond the Great Peace Ocean, in strange outlandish attire, suddenly break into the sunny silence of that secluded hollow far up among the hills.

The more ambitious of the climbers went on to the summit of the peak. Some remained to rest and eat a noon-day luncheon on the edge of the cliff beyond the spring and to await the others' return. A deep valley wound away among the mountain ridges below. Behind us rose steep mountain slopes covered with thickets of scrub oaks and beeches with clumps of azalea and patches of bamboo grass between the cosses. From time to time we glanced across at the ascetic. An hour passed. He made no movement. He must have seen us but he made no sign. The sun was hot but he sought no refreshing shade. He seemed far away in some other world of thought.

Finally I went and sat beside him on the boulder. He eyed me calmly and dispassionately but waited for me to speak. I confess to a curiosity far greater than his own. With proper form and polite phrase I introduced myself, speaking his language and following his country's custom. Gravely and with no show of irritation he returned the salutation. His name was So-and-so from Such a village. Was I honorably in peace?

I was at peace. Was he willing to be interrupted in his meditations and to talk to a mannerless foreigner?

Certainly; he had no other work in hand. Had he been sitting there long in this manner?

Long? No, assuredly not. Only three days and nights.

Nights? Surely he does not pass the nights there in the cold without shelter or covering?

Yes, is was cold but he did not mind it particularly. It is warm in the daytime.

But what about the tigers? They prowled continually in these wild ravines. There were bears in the thickets and wild boars in abundance. The signs were all about us. Was he not afraid?

Not particularly. The tigers did not seem to molest him. The wild boars grunted and passed by.

Was he fasting? Not entirely. Twice a day he cooked a handful of rice from the bag and drank water from the spring. But and then reader and hearer both can learn the truth. Is it not a good plan?"

"It is well."

"Do not forget your prayer. Perhaps God sent us to meet you here to teach you how to pray. Remain in Peace."

"Even so. Go in peace."

We turned and left him on the boulder, commending him in our heart to the Great Spirit of the place. He remained through that night, but two days later woodsmen who had passed that way said that the young man had gone.

Millions in the world seem indifferent to God. Amateur atheists in America and virulent Reds in other lands may bitterly oppose him because his Word is a condemnation of the life they wish to lead, but here and there in the world are lonely, seeking hearts. Shall we carry to them the message of God through Jesus Christ?

we have a most excellent place to shoot. It is fine, clean and interesting sport.

The Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. have been helping with the inauguration of similar organizations in the high school at Nankin.

Dr. W. S. Bell, president of the Board of Trustees, recently visited the College on his way to Pennsylvania.

Other activities of the College move off about as usual. The general state of the country is reflected in many ways in a college such as this, not the least of which reflection is the spirit of general discouragement in both Faculty and students. It is a day for the exercise of good sense, taking situations as they are rather than to go off on any tangent cure-all. And this latter plan is always inviting.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

ARGENTINA, SOUTH AMERICA

The past few months have been busy months in this northern part of our Argentine field. Brother Sichel has held meetings in each of the four towns, Almafuerte, Rio Tercero, Tancacha and Hernando. In the first two places the meetings came during the epidemic of influenza and during cold weather but notwithstanding these hindrances the series of sermons were very helpful to the work and we greet that Brother Sichel could not remain longer. The priest who has charge of these two points is one of the worst in the country, a notorious libertine and exploiter of people, he is equally unscrupulous in his shandorous attacks on our missions. Fortunately many people have no faith in him, but there are still many who refuse to listen to anything that the priest does not approve. This country has the appearance superficially of being civilized, but there are many that are as ignorant and superstitious as the people of Africa. When the priest tells them that the long drouth was due to the presence of the missionaries they think it must be true. They forget that the drought began at the same time that they installed an image of the virgin in the church and announced that it was famous for giving good crops to the farmers.

Recently it was announced that the 24th of September the virgin would bring rain. That day they made a procession with the virgin carried in the lead, but to date there is no rain. The failure of course, according to them, is due to the sin of permitting the Protestant heretics to labor here. But we labor on knowing that the end of these things is near at hand.

In Hernando the large hall was filled to overflowing as usual and the large group there is being prepared for baptism. In Tancacha, where the meeting has just closed, the weather was beautiful and the attendance was large. Another family of believers has come to live in Almafuerte where work is more plentiful.

In addition to our work here I have held a series of meetings in Buenos Aires which resulted in fourteen baptisms and Brother Farre preached for several weeks in Realco and Huinca Renanco and will go again soon to preach in Villa Mercedes and Rio Cuarto. His sermons are much appreciated and his fine Christian spirit wins respect. In Realco the priests from Rio Cuarto preceded him by a few days in order to slander him to the people but their campaign only served to show the difference in spirit between him and them.

Besides the economic distress there is a great deal of political unrest in this country and the government is constantly suppressing movements tending to revolution.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Since college news appeared in this column the last time, the enrollment in the various departments has been completed. As the figures now stand, there are 261 enrolled in the regular work, 61 in the Saturday classes, and an enrollment of some 25 or more for night school. This is a new departure but since times are as they are, we are trying the night school idea. Also, we are in line for some night classes in Mansfield.

The College defeated Kenyon College, tied Kent State and was defeated by Wooster College.

I recently gave the morning address to the students of Wooster College at their Chapel hour.

The Faculty has organized and is now under way with various studies in school problems, etc.

Dean Benschoff, the new assistant to the Bursar, teaches two classes both of which are good enrollments, showing that the addition of the commerce work was a good move. Mr. Benschoff was married recently.

Rev. Arthur Carey was recently wedded to Miss Clara Belle Carter. The ceremony took place in the College Chapel before a limited number of guests. The bride's brother, Rev. Don Carter, performed the ceremony. The newly married couple will live at Lake Odessa, Mich., where he has charge of a church. To both of these couples, the College extends congratulations.

I recently made out what is called the triennial report to the North Central Association. This is our second triennial report.

Three thousand copies of the new bulletin were mailed out. The next issue will be about 4500, as the list of names is growing. The next issue will be before Thanksgiving. The addressing machine, the gift of the mid-summer graduating class, makes possible this bulletin. We hope to reach the interested members of the church, the alumni and prospective students. A committee with Professor Black as chairman, has charge of the general publicity, a very necessary feature today.

The gentle sport of archery has been added to the sports of the College. With our sunken lawn in the west part of the campus,

UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Sunday, October 15, 1933, was truly a red-letter day, a day of great achievement and victory financially, socially, and spiritually for the First Brethren Church at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, where Rev. Wm. H. Clough is pastor. Upon this occasion the Church was freed from every dollar of debt standing against it. The day closed with $1,160.00 more than the amount needed to clear the obligation. Several weeks prior to October 15th, Rev. Clough conceived a plan of a Harvest Home-coming Day in which to stage one great effort and drive to raise sufficient money to liquidate the debt, that had been hanging over the church for several years. The pastor submitted his plan to his board of stewards and officers of the church which plan was unanimously adopted by the church officers and the congregation. And the date for the drive was set. Both pastor and people realizing their financial weakness and inability to cope with the situation in their own strength, resolved immediately to earnest, imploring prayer to Almighty God for His help in the worthy project.

The writer does not hesitate to say that in all of his more than fifty years of service in the church he never witnessed such fervency of spirit, earnestness in prayer, and demonstration of faith in the prosecution of the work to the attainment of the goal set—"A Church free of debt and not another dollar to be owed." Long before the approach of the day set for the drive Pastor and people rejoiced in the assurance of answered prayer, and converted their pleadings with Almighty God into praises and thanksgiving for the matchless and marvelous victory the God of all mercy and goodness held in store for them.

The pastor with his co-workers set about to arrange a program for the auspicious occasion. They decided to secure the service of Dr. W. S. Bell, a noted preacher-evangelist of Milledgeville, Illinois. Dr. Bell very graciously responded to the invitation and was present for all the services, beginning with the Sunday School at 9:30 A. M. At 10:45 A. M., Dr. Bell preached on the subject "God's Church." In the afternoon preliminary to the sermon a sacred concert was given by the United Brethren Sunday School Orchestra of Scottdale under the direction of Mr. Ewing McCloy. This magnificent concert was followed by a group of numbers played by the Harmony Trumpeters—a quartet which was highly appreciated by the audience. The Trumpeters were under the direction of Mr. Herbert Franks, the local choir director. A duet by Mr. and Mrs. George Gerhart of Mt. Pleasant, and a solo by Mr. P. L. Dally of Baling were especially beautiful numbers, highly entertaining in character. At the conclusion of the splendid musical program responses from former pastors and members of the church from the oldest to the youngest followed. After scripture reading, prayer and singing "How Firm a Foundation" and "Onward Christian Soldiers" by the congregation Dr. Bell plunged into his afternoon sermon subject, "A Church free from debt and not another dollar to be owed." Dr. Bell did himself great credit by delivering a forceful sermon which was freighted with sound reasoning, logical and convincing arguments designed to arouse enthusiasm and interest on the part of the people to bring forth their gifts and cast them into the treasury of the church. Dr. Bell's masterful efforts did not go unheeded nor without results, as the cash contributions and subscriptions began to pour in at such a tremendous rate that all the stewards and workers were kept busy handling the situation. And within one half an hour, not only the goal had been reached as afore stated, but $1160.00 more than the goal had been given. The afternoon session closed with the entire congregation standing and joining hands and singing, "Blest be the Tie that Binds" and "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow."

At 6:30 in the evening a joint C. E. service under the leadership of Smith Rose and the president Mrs. Nelson Porter was held. And at 7:30 a grand Jubilee and evangelistic service was conducted by the pastor, with Dr. Bell preaching the sermon on "The Cross of Jesus Christ." At the close of the evening service another opportunity was given the people to contribute and the cash and subscriptions mounted to the grand total of $2160.00. Showing the surplus of $1160.00 in excess of the amount needed to liquidate the entire debt of $1000.00. The day was not only one of financial triumph but one of great spiritual blessing and uplifting. During the service of the day several persons confessed Christ and gave their names to the church. Much credit is due Rev. Clough for his untiring efforts to accomplish the object he had in view, that of lifting from the church the burden of debt and setting it free from every encumbrance which is always a handicap to the spiritual growth and progress to any church. All honor to the official members who so valiantly and faithfully cooperated with the pastor in accomplishing the work. In passing we must not fail to mention that a large group of little children individually brought their dollars and laid them at the Master's feet. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven—" Jesus.

Special mention is due the choir, under the able direction of Herbert Franks, for the splendid and efficient manner in which they conducted the musical program, Mrs. Franks presiding at the piano. And to those loyal women—Mrs. Trader, Mrs. Porter, Mrs. Moser and their noble assistants, the Dorcases and the Lydias of the church, much praise is due for the successful manner in which they entertained and fed the hungry multitudes at both noon and evening meals. We also observed that notwithstanding their strenuous labors and apparent exhaustion gathering in the money, both preachers and all of their helpers were still able to participate in this part of the program.

Under Rev. Clough's ministry, loyally supported by his faithful wife, we are happy to report that the First Brethren Church is in a splendid spiritual condition, all the services being pervaded with an evangelistic atmosphere to such a degree that almost every Sabbath witnesses seekers of salvation and confessions for Jesus Christ. In the Sunday School, Mid-week Prayer and Bible Study, Cottage Prayer Meetings, and in all the services the Holy Spirit is manifestly present in his convicting and converting power. Under the present pastorate the church and Sunday School are enjoying a phenomenal growth. The Church membership having grown from 70 to nearly 300 communicants in the space of three years. The Sunday School under the efficient superintendency of Brother Elijah De Bolt this day reached the high water mark of 320 exceeding Brother De-Bolt's goal by 20 pupils. Brother De Bolt is a faithful, enthusiastic superintendent and is supported by a Corps of loyal teachers—saved men and women who teach the word in fear and trembling with a definite aim to win their pupils for Christ and the Church.

In the very near future the Church will enter upon a revival and evangelistic campaign in which the Pastor and people are claiming at least 200 souls for Christ. God grant that it may be so. The revival will begin Sunday Evening, November 26 with Rev. Clough serving as the Evangelist.

E. E. Dilliner, Uniontown, Pa.

P. S.—At the evening service October 22, 1933, in the presence of the congregation the Moderator, Richard Umbel and Rev. Clough, the pastor, burnt the note which represented the debt against the church.

THE REVIVAL AT GARWIN, IOWA

This field is truly rural. This church is several miles to the nearest town. A typical American farming community makes up the countryside. The Brethren Church practically dominates the situation for it has practically no competition. Almost every one in the community is or has been a member of the Brethren Church. In some respects a situation like this seems good in others not so good. But the Lord works everywhere his message is faithfully given and we were glad to see the hand of the Lord work in this meeting.

The pastor of this church is Raymond Blood, a former member of the First Brethren Church of Philadelphia while I was pastor there and is also a graduate of The Philadelphia School of the Bible. He is an accomplished musician, a man who knows his Bible and knows how to preach it. He lives the Gospel he preaches and that explains the secret of its effectiveness. Under his leadership as he is led of the Holy Spirit, the church has seen splendid renewal of spiritual life and interest.

It was my privilege during this meeting to share the home of Rev. and Sister Blood. It is not the first time and it was indeed a pleasure to return to their fellowship.

The people in and about the Garwin church are very generous and hospitable and manifested the best of fellowship as they invited us to their homes.

The weather was simply marvelous all the way through until the last day. On that day Jupiter Pluvius opened up and gave us a deluge that rendered practically impossible a congregation over Iowa dirt roads. If you can imagine anything as slippery as grease, as sticky as gum and as tough as rubber you have some idea of how dirty when it gets wet. So instead of having a house full as we would have, we had a hand full. It may have been all of the Lord. Even though but few attended there must have been twenty or twenty-five decisions that day, which will likely bring about great changes in the spiritual life of the Garwin church.

Here is one church which we do not believe could be aided by moving to a local town. So long as dirt roads prevail the Garwin church will have no problem of church attendance.

May the Lord richly bless these dear folks and keep them until he comes.

BRETHREN CHURCH OF COLUMBUS, OHIO

The Cooperative Brethren Church of Columbus, Ohio, enjoyed a very successful two weeks revival from October 8 to 22. These meetings were conducted by Evangelist E. S. Coffman of the Church of the Brethren and Brethren Charles A. Bame, Geo. Stanley Baer, and R. D. Barnard of the Brethren Church. Each of these brethren contributed a very vital part to the success of the revival. Brother Baer gave the meetings a good start by inspiring the members of the church to do their part in this campaign for righteousness. Through his leading in devotions and prayer services a fine spirit of worship was created, which continued throughout the meetings. Brother Coffman did the preaching each evening during the two weeks. He preached strong soul-convincing messages based solely on the inspired Word of God. His sermons contained spiritual enlightenment for both adults and children. During the latter part of the first week Brother Barnard was with us and gave some very instructive Bible studies before the sermon. Dr. Bame came to us the second week. By his enthusiasm and deep concern for the success of the work here in Columbus he added much to the meetings. He led the singing as only a great song leader can, getting everyone to really feel the message of the song. All of these brethren did much visiting, both in the homes of the members and in the homes of the community around the church.

The spiritual good of these meetings will only be fully known in eternal glory. The visible results were fifteen added to the church; ten by baptism and five by re-consecration. We, the Columbus Church, greatly appreciate the sacrificial services of Brethren Baer, Coffman, Barnard, and Bame during our revival. We thank God and the Mission Boards for sending to us these brethren. May God richly bless their further efforts for the upbuilding of His church here on the earth and the preparing of souls to meet the Christ when He comes again.

Fraternally,

D. R. Murray.

MID-WEST DISTRICT CONFERENCE of the Brethren Church, Beaver City, Nebraska, October 10 to 12, 1933

Another Mid-West District Conference has become history. The program committee is to be commended for the high order of the program arranged for this conference. Every session was enjoyed by the delegates and visitors privileged to attend. The numbers were well rendered and brought inspiration and help to all. The Beaver City Church is to be commended for their fine hospitality and optimistic spirit of Christian loyalty. The people at Beaver City have a fine Church plant and also a parsonage with a splendid field for a great work for the Master. Not having a pastor to welcome the conference the membership made up for this deficit in their interest and hospitality. The delegates returned to their homes with a warm spot in their hearts for the Beaver City Church.

Rev. Rowsey was the moderator when the Conference began on Tuesday evening. After the devotions, Mrs. O. S. Baer gave the address of welcome, followed by a duet by two small boys "Welcome to All." The children's talk on "Time" by Rev. W. R. Deeter was enjoyed by old as well as young.

After the children's talk Rev. H. H. Rowsey delivered his address on "The Fool Hath Said in his Heart there is no God." He told of the atheistic organizations and their efforts to abolish Christianity. He laid down a mighty challenge to the church membership to arouse to its responsibility. Blot out faith in God and at the same time you will blot out decency and shame. We see God's glory in every place. We find sufficient proof in the Bible. The believer knows there is a God. We cannot look upon the mighty marvels in the human race without seeing his glory in every place. Those who walk and talk with him know there is a God. The address was closed with the poem "Crossing the Bar."

WEDNESDAY

Mrs. W. R. Deeter opened the session with the hymn "Glory to His Name," and J. S. Walters read the scripture from the second chapter of Philippians. This was followed by prayer. Business consisted of elections and reports.

The Credential committee reported 10 ministerial and 11 lay delegates. Informal balloting resulted in the election of the following: L. G. Wood, Moderator; J. S. Cook, Vive Moderator; J. G. Dodds, Secretary-Treasurer; F. S. Lichty was elected to succeed himself as College Trustee. J. S. Cook was elected a member of the Executive Committee—National Conference; L. G. Wood was elected to succeed himself as a member of the Ministerial Examining Board. J. G. Dodds was elected to succeed himself as Church School Supervisor. Miss Mary Moore, Young Peoples Supervisor; N. P. Eglin, District Mission Board to succeed himself.The District Mission Board decided to pay the support of the work at Ft. Scott, Kansas five dollars per month, and also to continue the payment of a like sum to the work at Mulvane, Kansas. Apportionments for the coming year to remain the same as last year.

The Boys' Council Program was approved and the following committee appointed: W. R. Deeter, 3 Years; H. H. Rowsey, 2 years; Robert Williams, 1 year. The Evangelism Program was commended and its application urged for the Mid-West District.

After the business session Rev. Cook spoke on the theme, "An exhortation to Fundamentalism." His text was Romans 12:1, 2. There is need of conviction on moral questions. The Church should arouse to a more awakened preaching of the Gospel.

Rev. W. R. Deeter delivered the evening sermon on "Faith in Action." Using several Bible characters as examples he said, "Faith active is evidence of God's power and salvation."

THURSDAY

Rev. L. G. Wood opened the session with the hymn, "Love Divine," and delegates quoting Scripture passages and offering prayers. After a short business session D. G. Lemon, Portis, Kans., and N. G. Eglin spoke on the Church School. The needs and the community life were stressed. Needs: 1. Increase enrollment with increased attendance. 2. More consecrated workers and better Christians as officers. How can needs be supplied? 1. Increase Spirituality in Church. 2. Increase feeding of Bread of Life. 3. Special work done by Christians. 4. Higher standards of Christian ideals in workers and teachers. 5. Teachers stay for preaching services. 6. Use Bible as source of information. N. P. Eglin gave an interesting history of northeast Kansas churches, showing relation of church development to community life.

Encouraging reports were given from Mulvane, Ft. Scott, McLouth and Carleton churches. At the 1932 conference four churches were reported pastorless; only two were reported this year. Rev. J. G. Dodds took charge of the work at Hamlin, Kans., on Mothers' Day this year; Rev. Geo. Cone was installed as pastor of the Mulvane, Kans., church Sunday, October 8, 1933.

The closing sermon was preached by Rev. L. G. Wood on, "The Evangelism of Christ." Scriptures: Matt. 24; Luke 4:16-20; 2 Tim. 4:2, 3. He said in part: Lay evangelism is important. Evangelism is Divine imposed function upon Christian Church based upon the right and Divine use of the Word of God. Doctrine of sin, salvation, regeneration are fundamental to evangelism. Man is a sinner—God has provided a remedy. Evangelism brings the two together. God is equal to all emergencies. You cannot think of needs of world without thinking of Head of Church. You cannot think of the Church today without thinking of Africa and all the world. Teach the Word. Be conscious of his presence. The Church today has greatest opportunity of all history.

This was indeed a great challenge with which to close the district conference.

The courtesy of the conference was granted to Rev. Fish, pastor of one of the Beaver City conferences, who led us in the closing prayer.

The conference will go to McLouth, Kansas next year.

May the blessings of God be with you all, is our prayer.

J. G. Dodds, Sec'y.-Treas.

Only by constant communion with the Savior are we immune from the soul's diseases.

THE NOT-SO-DARK CONTINENT

"There is life here in Africa—vitality that survives misunderstandings, oppressions of other races, ability to toil through long hours of blazing heat, to work without pay, and to throw off the weight of care at the end of the day. Here in Africa you can see the life of the spirit breaking through the restraints that hedge it around. Here you see congregations of hundreds, sometimes thousands, in churches built by the loving service of African Christians, or gathering out in the open. The sky and leaves for a roof above, the trees for walls.

And in hundreds of little villages congregations meet together in mud-walled, grass-thatched churches to receive the Living Bread and the Water of Life."—Lida Russell of the West African Mission.—The Congregationalist.

CITIES IN BIBLE LANDS

Sheth." He defeated the Romans, took Jerusalem, but eventually was defeated and his deluded followers dispersed.

To sum up: All of these discoveries and "finds" are not of course as numerous in quantity, nor imposing in quality, as those made in Nineveh, Babylon, and in Egypt. But none the less, as far as they go and as to what they have to tell, they are exceedingly valuable in their way. They are of rare worth in their historic bearing upon what the Divine record has to say about Jerusalem and its contiguous points.

Think what it means to have the very foundation stones of the Holy City laid bare, deep down under ground. The high state of engineering skill existent in those far off days. That the art of writing was in existence. That in inscribed stone was digged from the debris of Jerusalem that fitted into the theme of an inspired letter to Paul's heathen converts for their assurance and comfort in the new found faith of the Gospel. And Jerusalem, hoary with age, with towering walls made up of the very stones that were anciently handled by Jubasite, Egyptian, Hebrew, Saracen, and Christian builders, echoes back the joyous refrain as we wing—

"Zion stands with hills surrounded,

Zion kept by power divine.

All her foes shall be confounded,

Though the world in arms combine.

Happy Zion.

What a favored lot is thine!"

The NRA Is It the Mark of the Beast?

saints have been caught away to be with Christ before these terrible conditions prevail upon the earth. In my judgment the reason things will be able to shape up so quickly under the Anti-Christ's power is because Christ and the Church Saints and the Holy Spirit as a Restrainer have all been called away from the earth, and evil, unhindered can shape up quickly. But, now, viewing our day and the time of the NRA. The Church is still here. The Holy Spirit is still working in the world and restraining evil, and the Christ has not yet come for the living or called forth the dead. The time element of the NRA and the Mark of the Beast is completely different. (3) DIFFERENCE IN AUTHORITY. As we said a few moments ago the Mark of the Beast is the order of a WORLD dictator, and the NRA is only a National Order. The Dictator of the Mark of the Beast usurped his authority and the power of our American System has been delegated. The Dictator of the end-time is an Anti-Christ against God in everything. Our President, although not standing as we could desire in certain moral situations is at least a man with Christian Affiliations, and came into his place of High Authority after first having attended a worship service. I rejoice in this. The Dictator of the end-time will be a miracle worker, or will have a Prince-Minister who is. Nothing of this kind is claimed in our present governmental order, although if our government can bring our land out of its chaos it will, using the word loosely, be a miracle. (4) DIFFERENCE IN THE MARK. The NRA is only a printed sign for show-windows and package wrappings. The Mark of the Beast will be a mark in the very skin of the very flesh of the body, in the right hand and in their forehead. Of course we can easily see how that in a short time if some tattooing company should make it patriotic to have an NRA tattooed on the very flesh of the body that many thousands, possibly millions would soon do it. The Mark of the Beast is permanent, even some indication in some of the Scriptures that it may be eternal. The NRA is only a RECOVERY mark and will be completed when the recovery is accomplished. The Mark of the Beast indicates personal denial of Christ and a definite allegiance to Satan's power. I do not know of anything in the NRA that has any religious bearing, i. e., so purposed by the promoters of it. There is surely a difference in the two marks and their purposes. (5) DIFFERENCE IN RESULT. In the case of the Mark of the Beast inhabitants of the earth are killed if they don't receive the Mark and Damned if they do receive it. As I said before, I know of nothing purposed in the NRA that has religious aims or tendencies.

Some Personal Conclusions

(1) END-TIME CONDITIONS ARE POSSIBLE. A few years ago we would have said that a Dictator, a depression, or an NRA was impossible. We have come to believe that almost anything is possible. I can easily see how, with Christ and the Church and the Holy Spirit removed, and with a supernatural power from Satan on a world ruler, everything told of the Great Tribulation would take place in a remarkably short time. Whether all will be willing to agree that we are in the very end-time or not, surely each one will be willing to agree that the conditions are very similar, and because of the similarity are worthy of study. (2) I SHOULD BE READY. "watch and Pray" was never more fitting than today. If Christ comes shortly I want to be ready to meet him. I want my friends, and this First Brethren church, Dayton, Ohio to be ready. And if he tarries longer, I want to be ready to do great service for him. (3) I SHOULD BE DISCERNING. I should read the times in which I live. I should read my Bible. Especially should I study carefully Daniel, Revelation and other prophetic Scriptures. We are either in the end-times, or we are in times very like the end-times. In either case the Bible will throw light on our situation. (4) MY DUTY TO THE NRA. Here many will probably disagree with me, but that is all right, just consider with me. My duty as I view it is to cooperate and help. Romans, Chapter 13 is my Scripture for this. Of course I do not see the NRA as a National Savior, but if it will help, and not be unalterably opposed to my Christian Convictions, I am for it. To me, it is a part of being in "subjection to the higher powers". The government of which Paul must have been thinking when he wrote this was surely not perfect, nearly so high a type as ours. There must have been many unchristian practices in that government, yet obedience to the government, up to the place that it did violence to the rule of God in a man's life, was considered as a Christian duty. May I illustrate my attitude. There are many things in Taxation that I do not believe are right or Christian. yet I pay my taxes. So there are many things in the NRA—apparent Boycott, at least an approach to the boycott spirit, and many other things that I consider as unchristian, yet I believe it is my duty to cooperate here as I cooperate in paying my taxes.

I do not believe that the NRA is the Mark of the Beast. I can see how that with increasing depressed world economic conditions a plan like the NRA of world proportions might prepare for the Mark of the Beast. I see the many faults of the NRA. I see faults everywhere else. We live in a faulty world, needing a Fault Remover. But if the NRA will help in furnishing men work, in feeding hungry families, and in restoring confidence in this world, I am willing to cooperate, until the time that it may assume Anti-Christian proportions in a far clearer way than it now has them.

IN THE SHADOW

BRENNER—Jestina Brenner, known as "Tiny", the daughter of Michael and Sidney Brenner, was born in Alliance, Stark County, Ohio, December 7, 1853, and passed from her sufferings at the Brethren's Home at Elora, September 4, 1932, aged 79 years, 8 months and 27 days. She never married. She moved to Sidney, Indiana, in 1914, where she was a member of the Brethren church. In April, 1923, she came to the Brethren's Home to reside. Though very small in body and afflicted physically she was ever cheerful and secured great comfort in her religion. Nearly twenty months before her death she fell and fractured her hip which caused her to be confined a helpless invalid to her bed. In this she suffered until she was ever cheerful and happy still. Services were held in the parlor of the Brethren's Home by the writer. Burial was at Sidney, Indiana, by the side of her father and mother. FREEMAN ANKNUM.

STRINE—Mrs. Ida Strine was born in Fort Scott, Kansas, February 25, 1856, and departed this life at her home in Fort Scott, on October 17, 1933, at the age of 47 years, 7 months and 20 days.

She married Fred Strine at Council Bluffs, Iowa, July 15, 1881. She has resided in Fort Scott all of her life, and had many friends.

She is survived by her husband and two sons: Frank Julian and Earl Flowers, of Fort Scott, and one daughter, Sadie Fitzgerald of Pocatello, Oregon; also one sister, Mrs. Mary Anderson of Fort Scott, and eight grandchildren.

Mrs. Strine had been a member of the Christian church for many years, and was a kind and loving wife and mother. Her funeral was conducted by the writer from the Cheney Parlor, October 19. Burial was made in the Grove cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

PARKER—Mrs. Martha Jane Parker, who has resided in and near Fort Scott, Kansas, for many years, departed this life October 5, 1932, at the age of 83 years.

For several years she had made her home with her son, Will Parker of the Gardner neighborhood.

She is survived by the following children: Will Parker of Fort Scott; H. L. Parker of Ponca, Oklahoma; C. S. Parker of Las Vegas, New Mexico; Mrs. Charles Hill of Los Angeles, California; Sherman Parker of Fresno, California; also a host of nieces and nephews and grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Mrs. Parker had been a Christian from girlhood and a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. A good wife and mother and very devout to Christ, home and family. Funeral by the writer from the Brethren church of Fort Scott, Kansas, Saturday, October 8, 1932. The body was laid to rest beside that of her husband, in the family lot in the Grove Chapel cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

LOVE—Again death has entered the list of the membership of the Ashland, Ohio, congregation, and this time the dread messenger has taken from our midst Sister Emma Love, relict of Brother Harris Love of the Bethel Brethren church of the Glenford circuit of other years. She was a daughter of Joseph and Nancy Dunbar, pioneer residents of Perry county, Ohio, and one of a family of four children, of whom but one, a brother, remains. Sister Love passed to be with the Lord on October 16, 1933, aged 69 years and eight days.

Emma Dunbar and Harris Love became man and wife on August 10, 1892, to which union five children were born. The union was broken by the demise of the husband in 1916. One son, Oscar, also preceded her in death. Sister Love had made her home in Dayton, Ohio, for many years ago, when she removed to Ashland, Ohio, where she has since resided. Upon her removal to Ashland, she transferred her membership to the First Brethren church, and passed away in full fellowship with her church and had the high esteem as a Christian woman, and one who honored the name of Christ by her consistent life and character.

Two daughters, two sons, one brother, twelve grandchildren and two great-grandchildren, especially a large circle of more distant relatives and friends mourn the departure of one whom they have known but to love and revere, and who, having departed to be with her Lord, leaves on earth a worthy and well-remembered example and precept for the emulation of those who remain.

Sister Love went to be with Jesus from the home of her son, in Ashland, from which home funeral services were conducted at ten o'clock on October 19, with Dr. J. Allen Miller officiating and singing, and the presence of many who to the influence and life of the deceased, from his more than forty years of acquaintance with the family. At 2:30 P. M. of the same date, further services for the deceased were conducted at the M. E. church in Somerset, Perry county, with her pastor, the undersigned, in charge, and assistance in the service rendered by Rev. John L. Landstetter, pastor of the church. "The Friend of God" was the topic used by her pastor at the afternoon service, and comfort for the occasion was found in Hebrews 12:1. Burial was made in the Somerset cemetery beside the remains of her husband, to await the call of the arch-angel and the glorious return of the Lord. DYOLL BELFLOTE.

MILLER—Anna E. Miller, daughter of Abraham and Fannie Livengood of wife of W. E. Miller of Milledgeville, Illinois, passed to her reward from the family home in Milledgeville, Illinois on October 16, 1933 at the age of 79 years, 10 months and 16 days. To them were born three children, one of which died in infancy. The two remaining are, Ichora Miller of Sunnyside, Washington, and Mrs. Ruth Poole of Milledgeville, Miss. Miller was a charter member of the Brethren church in Milledgeville, Illinois, and was deeply interested in all of its activities and one of its staunch supporters. She loved the house of God and her place was seldom vacant. She filled a large place in the community, in the church, and in the home.

Besides the above mentioned children and the companion, with whom she had walked through life for more than fifty years, she leaves the following brothers and sisters: F. E. Livengood of Albany, Oregon; Mrs. Samuel Fleckinger of Milledgeville, Kansas; Samuel Livengood of Milledgeville and Elder Z. T. Livengood of Lanark. There are also six grandchildren. Every aching heart finds comfort in all the promises that our Heavenly Father has made to those who "die in the Lord." Thus blessed, the knowledge in the morning of the first resurrection we shall meet all our loved one. Peace to all until then.

Funeral services were held from the Brethren church in Milledgeville on Friday, October 26, in charge of the writer, assisted by Rev. J. H. Mathas of the Church of the Brethren. C. C. GRISSO.

Signs of the Times

REVIVAL of the "Iron" Kingdom

The second and seventh chapters of Daniel forecast a revival of the Roman Empire in the last days of the present age. Careful Bible students have seen this for centuries. Unbelieving historians have scoffed at the idea, calling it an impossibility.

Dr. W. E. Enfield, head of the famous laboratories at Nela Park and spoken of as an expert in historical and social trends, has recently expressed an interesting viewpoint. Having spent four months touring Europe, he came back "with the definite impression that if a strong man can arise and consolidate the Fascist states into a central European Fascist League, stretching from Italy to Germany, the old Holy Roman Empire will be restored after several centuries of experimentation with liberal monarchies and democracies." (Black-letter mine)

I do not know whether Dr. Enfield is a Christian or not. Probably he knows nothing of Daniel's prophecy. Yet he looks for the revival of the Roman Empire if a "strong man" arises. Well, the strong man will come. Bible students have known this for a long time. And when he comes, the fourth Beast Empire will rise once more to confound the experts. The whole world will wonder at the marvel (Rev. 13:3).

MUSSOLINI also Speaks

While Dr. Enfield predicts the revival of ancient Rome, Mussolini speaking in Rome to 50,000 cheering Romans thunders forth his determination: "Italy must be the first nation of the world—in the skies, on land, and in spirit. Past glories should be surpassed by future glories."

In order to carry out this prophecy, the Duce launched a new organization named significantly "Universality of Rome."

THE Last Laugh

Other men before Mussolini had dreamed of restoring the glory of Rome, and they failed. Perhaps Mussolini will fail. But the Christian knows that the "strong man" will come some day upon the stage of human history, and he will not fail. "The Scripture cannot be broken." The predictions of the experts have failed more than once, but the "sure Word of prophecy" has never failed.

We should not forget that some of the men who laugh today at the suggestion of a revived Roman Empire are the same men who yesterday laughed at the idea of Mussolini succeeding with his Fascist program, the same men who laughed at the idea of the fantastic Hitler succeeding. Mussolini has lasted in Italy for twelve years, which is a long time in our changing world. And Hitler seems to be fairly well established. And Stalin will not be overthrown immediately. Bible students have been looking for the rise of the "iron" of dictatorship in Europe for a long time. It has arrived.

The man who believes the Bible, and waits patiently, will always have the last laugh. We may not know the "times and seasons", but we know the divine philosophy of history.

President Roosevelt might do well, among his "brain trust" advisors, to include someone who knows the prophetic Word of God. The court of Babylon found Daniel a very useful man. But the modern economic magicians and political wise-men, as in ancient days, are very much prejudiced against giving Daniel any hearing at all. The prophet Daniel, however, will have the last word.

NO Smoking in the Air

The great air-ship Graf from Germany arrived the other day in Akron and its captain Von Schiller pleasantly submitted to a radio interview. The reporter asked whether any of the passengers complain as travelers generally do. No complaints, said the Captain, except one: they do not like to stop smoking while aboard, as they must do because of fire hazards. "But," observed Captain Schiller, "it does not hurt any of them to have their cigaret cases locked up for a little while." He hastened to add, however, that a new air-ship now under construction will have a special fireproof compartment with a bar for those who find it impossible to stop smoking and drinking while in the air.

There is coming one journey in the air when nothing like this will be provided for passengers. Read First Thessalonians 4: 16-17. We shall all be changed in a moment, Paul says, before we begin that great journey. A good thing, certainly, for many professed Christians who, if unchanged, might not enjoy leaving behind some of their beloved habits. But why wait for that last great change? The power of God is available NOW to change our lives in such things.

A SCIENTIST Flips Pennies

For several months Professor Hill of the University of Georgia has been flipping pennies, assisted by his students. No, the Professor is neither crazy or a gambler. He is testing what is called the "Law of Probabilities." Two hundred pennies were assembled and weighed carefully to see that they were all alike. Then the flipping began. After 40,000 flips they find that heads have come up exactly the same number of times that tails appeared. Thus the Law is demonstrated, at least within limits.

Now that the Law has had a proper demonstration, the Professor and his class might read Proverbs 16:33—"The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord."

The so-called "laws" of the physical universe, after all, do not operate themselves. A very wise man once said that he had never seen or heard any theory of the world that did not need a God to make it go. Modern materialistic investigators quite often worship the "laws" which they discover, though perhaps unconsciously. It would be more sensible to worship the God who made the laws and who upholds them. "The whole disposing thereof is of the Lord," whether it be the movement of the stars, the path of the meteor, the fall of an apple, or the flip of a penny. The laws which control are God's laws.

Best of all, this God is above his own laws, a fact sometimes overlooked even by those who believe there is a God. They think that God can do nothing outside or beyond the working of his laws in the natural world, that he is locked up forever within the compass of his own natural laws. Hence they deny the possibility of miracles. If they were wise, they would understand that the God who operates the Law of Probabilities which appears in the flipping of pennies could, if he wished, reverse the fall of any particular penny, or even suspend it forever in the air. Such an action would not abrogate either the Law of Probabilities or the Law of Gravitation; it would only overcome them by the interposition of a superior force. Something like this happens every time a small boy throws a stone into the air. The Law of Gravitation goes on operating, but the boy happens to be a bit stronger. Yet we have grave faced savants who will tell you that God cannot do as much as this little boy.

NO Wonder it didn't Work

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, daughter of the late Theodore Roosevelt, in a recent series of articles relates some interesting things about the great and near-great in Washington. We learn, for one thing, that the Hardings used to call frequently on the Longworths. The men played poker. Mrs. Harding acted as bar-tender.

My only reason for recording this bit of scandal is to point out the kind of political rulers to whom America committed the enforcement of the prohibition law in 1920.

Prohibitionists may learn some time the folly of committing their issue to parties which accept it on the ground of political expediency. Moral reforms put through by such means do not last.

AN Ambiguity Cleared up

In an article in this department, issue of October 7th, the name of "Mrs. White" was included among the names of other feminine religious leaders whose marriages had ended in discord. By some inadvertence the first name was omitted, leading at least one reader to think the reference was to the prophetess of Seventh Day Adventism, Mrs. Ellen G. White.

I had in mind another person, Mrs. Alma

Warrant for Refusal to Engage in War

That war is wrong, that the Brethren church accepts the Gospel position of the wrongness of war, and that the church has a long history of refusal to engage in war, are facts that ought to be declared more frequently and taught more faithfully than they are at present. If such is the real Christian attitude toward war, if such is our faith and if it is indeed a part of "the faith once for all delivered unto the saints", we ought more widely to know it and to be more strongly convinced of it. These are ominous and uncertain times, and no one can tell when we may be called upon to bear witness to our faith. And it is to be feared that many of us would scarcely be able to give a reason for the faith that is in us, if in very truth it is our faith. Especially among young people does there exist a great lack of conviction in this regard, and the fault rests largely with the pulpit, press and conference platform, let us confess. This note has been too often absent from our message. No time is more opportune for reminding ourselves of our neglect in this matter than this armistice season.

WAR IS WRONG

1. War is wrong because it violates the sacredness of human life. Life is a sacred thing, priceless and wonderful. Man cannot give life, nor has he the right to take it away. God who bestowed life also hedged it about by a "Thou shalt not kill." That barrier has never been removed. It is an eternal restraint to the rash hand, and protects life which is infinitely precious. It is not an arbitrary injunction, but a moral law, founded in the very nature of things. To murder, to destroy life, is wrong; and it is just as wrong when perpetrated by governments in wholesale fashion as when done by an individual. And the individual is not guiltless who consents to become a party to a national slaughter.

2. War is wrong because it destroys love and promotes hatred in human hearts. War simply cannot be carried on in the presence of love, because men who love one another will not fight and kill. When a nation decides to launch a war, the first thing necessary is to build up hatred in the hearts of its citizens for the citizens of the other nation it would make war against. That is the purpose of war propaganda, which is always so prolific during international conflicts. Every nation was engaged in the fearful task of dethroneing love and goodwill, and exalting hatred during the World War. Our own nation was as guilty as the rest. Let us not deceive ourselves; we knew then, as we know now, that hatred was necessary to the successful killing of our fellowmen. Hatred is the essence of murder. So true is it that the Word of God says, "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer" (1 John 3:15). Such a spirit contravenes the spirit of love which Jesus set going in the world, and which he has declared shall be the distinguishing mark of his disciples. "A new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another, . . . By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:34, 35). That principle absolutely unfits the Christian for combatant service in war.

3. War is wrong because it is destructive of everything that is noble and good and worthwhile, and encourages and gives occasion for everything that is harmful and cruel and vicious and evil. Poets sometimes become thrilled with beautiful sentiments related to war when they look at it from a distance and through the colored glasses of their imagination, but the men who engage in the reality, curse war and loathe it. And everyone who has any sense of the value of our civilization, must lament the destructiveness of war.

4. War is wrong because Jesus told his disciples they should not fight, nor make resistance and strike back at him who would do them evil. "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, That ye resist not evil (him that is evil); but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also" (Matt. 5:38, 39). Again, "Render to no man evil for evil. . . . avenge not yourselves" (Rom. 12:17, 19). Jesus said to Peter, "Put up thy sword, . . . they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword" (Matt. 26:52). And Paul was inspired to say that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal" (2 Cor. 10:3, 4).

5. War is wrong because it is incompatible with the example Jesus set and the spirit he displayed. Jesus patiently endured the bitter persecution and ignominy of the arrest and unjust trials with the attendant mockery, and went to the cross without a word, and at the last prayed the Father to forgive his malefactors. Peter writes, as if to shame us of our retaliatory spirit, "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps" (1 Peter 2:21). The Christian being bound to follow the example of Jesus cannot engage in carnal war because Paul says, "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Rom. 8:9). And he exhorts the Christians at Philippi to "have this mind in you which was also in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 2:5).

THE CHURCH'S HISTORIC STAND AGAINST WAR

God has had a witness to his hatred for war through many years in the Brethren church, and thank God, it has not been entirely alone in its stand against war, for the Quakers and the Mennonites have also borne a similar witness. From the days of the church's founding in Germany in 1708 until the present day the Dunker fraternity has steadfastly resisted all efforts to entangle it in carnal warfare, though, undoubtedly some of its members have at times broken over the standard. But the church has never ceased to cling to the Christian standard and to urge and even to insist on obedience on the part of those who remained in its fellowship.

Some Early Expressions

The records show that the early Brethren refused during the Revolutionary war days to have anything whatever to do with actual fighting, not even by substitute. We read in the "Minutes of the Annual Meeting of the Church of the Brethren" (page 6) that in the

THE POWER OF LOVE

Were half the power that fills the world with terror,

Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,

Given to redeem the human mind from error,

There were no need of arsenals and forts,

The warrior's name would be a name abhorred,

And every nation that should lift again

His hand against his brother, on its forehead

Should appear forever the curse of Cain.

Down the dark future through long generations

The echoing sounds grow fainter and then cease,

And like a bell with solemn, sweet vibrations,

I hear once more the voice of Christ say "Peace."

Peace! and no longer from its brazen portals,

The blast of war's great organ shakes the skies,

But beautiful as songs of the immortals,

The holy melodies of Love arise.

—Longfellow.

Annual Meeting of 1781 the question was raised about substitute money being paid, and the reply was given that "it has been unanimously concluded that we should not pay the substitute money, . . . we exhort in union all brethren in all places to hold themselves guiltless, and take no part in war or blood-shedding, which might take place if we would pay for hiring men voluntarily; or more still if we would become agents to collect such money." Again in the meeting of 1785, at Big Conewago, Pennsylvania, we find the Brethren setting themselves unequivocally against engaging in carnal war, saying in reply to a query concerning the meaning of 1 Peter 2:13, 14: "We do not understand at all, from the words of Peter alluded to, that we can give ourselves up to do violence, or that we should submit to the higher authorities in such a manner as to make ourselves their instruments to shed men's blood, however it might be done" (Minutes of Annual Meeting, page 9).

The Brethren Church Stand

When we come down through the years to the history of the two separate branches of the Brethren, we find both maintain the old anti-war stand. From the "Minutes of General Conference for 1915" (page 61) of the Brethren fraternity we read, "We reaffirm the scriptural and historic principle of the Brethren church concerning war". In the 1927 "Minutes" the statement is more definite: "That we assert our time honored position as being opposed to members of the Brethren church going to war as combatants" (page 11). The attitude has not always been a negative one, as we discover in the "Minutes" for 1928 (page 10), where we read in part as follows: "Resolved that this Conference send a telegram to the State Department at Washington, congratulating this government on its instrumentality in bringing about the multi-lateral pact to outlaw war as an instrument of national policy, . . . that we condemn war as an unchristian way of settling international disputes, and commend the way of justice between nations; that we go on record as a non-resistant body; and that we urge the government to use every means possible to propagandize peace, pledging ourselves to do all in our power in this respect, in order that this diplomatic triumph for peace may be made permanent through education and religion". Another outright statement was made at the General Conference of 1931 in these words: "That we affirm the position of our church as unalterably opposed to Christians engaging in carnal warfare, and as committed to the New Testament principles of 'overcoming evil with good.' In this particular we urge the stressing of our pilgrim character as citizens of heaven and maintain our separation from the world as set forth in Phil. 3:20 and 2 Cor. 6:14-18."

Church of the Brethren Statement

The Church of the Brethren also has kept its anti-war attitude fresh in mind in recent years. It was at the Goshen Conference on January 9, 1918 that the following statement was issued: "Therefore this Conference of the Church of the Brethren declares

EDITORIAL REVIEW

In a recent communication from Brother W. S. Crick, pastor of the church at Fremont, Ohio, we learn that they are observing homecoming on the Sunday preceding Thanksgiving Day and that Dr. C. L. Anspach of Ypsilanti, Michigan, is to be the speaker of the day.

Brother J. S. Bowman reports his work at the Richpatch church in the Alleghenies, where his brother, Dr. I. D. Bowman, held an evangelistic meeting last August, resulting in one addition to the church by baptism. We are glad to note that nearly every member of this little band is a reader of the Evangelist. We congratulate them on their loyalty.

The La Verne, California, church continues to go forward with splendid interest and attendance under the capable leadership of Brother A. L. Lynn. Not even the heat of the summer months caused them to slacken their zeal. During that period they enjoyed messages from two of their own very promising young men who are preparing for the Gospel ministry. During the quarter for which the report is made, seven new members were received by baptism into the church. The Sunday school attendance is good and several new teachers have been required.

On Prof. Stuckey's Sunday school page, he provides us with an original article by Brother N. V. Leatherman. Not only the Sunday school workers, but others also will be interested in the subject of the polity of the Brethren church. This splendid article is a real contribution to the subject and you will find it well worth your reading. Because of its length we cannot publish it all this week, but preserve your paper and next week we will give you the rest of the discussion.

From Dr. Bauman's Long Beach church calendar we learn that 1035 were in attendance at that great church's Sunday school on October 15th, and we read that it was "just a regular service." That is the largest school in the brotherhood, so far as our knowledge goes. We congratulate pastor and people on the great work they are accomplishing. Now that Brother Alan S. Pearce has been inducted into the position of associate pastor, their work will doubtless go forward all the more efficiently and successfully. On the above mentioned Sunday there were four baptisms and on the following Sunday there were seven.

Brother Leslie E. Lindower, pastor of our church at Warsaw, Indiana, informs us that the ownership and editorship of the BIBLIOTHECA SACRA has been transferred from the Pittsburgh-Xenia Theological Seminary to the Evangelical Theological College of Dallas, Texas, which is Brother Lindower's alma mater. The magazine mentioned is a quarterly devoted entirely to theological matters of a non-denominational character and has had a long and successful history. We have long been acquainted with this splendid magazine, and it doubtless finds its way into the studies of a number of our ministers. Because it in no way competes with any of our own present publications, we are quite willing to give it this notice.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble writes an interesting letter recording numerous news items related to our African mission work. Among them are some that bring joy and some that bring sorrow to the missionary's heart. Prayer is always needed, but especially now in view of the financial situation that exists, and also in behalf of the "babes in Christ" among the native Christians. The motto which Dr. Gribble wrote in her diary—"And now unto him",—might well be made the motto and inspiration of many a Christian worker in the homeland. If there is one weakness that troubles the church of Christ more than another it is the failure to depend on and to make use of divine resources. There is too great reliance on human wisdom and strength, and consequently too much giving to man the glory.

Dr. W. H. Beachler writes of the newly formed circuit of which he is the pastor—Gratis and New Lebanon, Ohio. The Gratis church has been under Dr. Beachler's efficient care for a number of years and since the leaving of Brother L. V. King to his Indiana pastorate, New Lebanon has joined in with the Gratis church to share the benefits of Brother Beachler's talented ministry. The work at Gratis has been going along with steady growth in interest and numbers, having avoided the popular summer slump. The pastor continues to emphasize Christian Endeavor, as he has long been doing, and finds that it pays. That has been the experience of many another successful pastor and builder of young people. Nowhere does such satisfactory response come to the right sort of effort as in work with young people. They who neglect this field, neglect their greatest opportunity.

President E. E. Jacobs reports a successful homecoming day at the college, a day successful not merely in attendance but in the special entertainment features of the day. The football team not only did themselves proud by defeating a team that was rated by the athletic scribes as slightly stronger, but the dramatics club staged one of the heaviest and most successful dramas that the college has attempted for a long while. There were perhaps 1200 people who viewed "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in the large high school auditorium, and the crowd was enthusiastic over its very splendid rendition. We congratulate Dr. Jacobs on the new honor and recognition of scholarship that has come to him in being made a "Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science." And the church is to be congratulated on having so distinguished a scholar at the head of its educational institution.

WHAT OUR CHURCH CAN DO to Build up HOME MISSIONS

By J. L. Bowman

Address at Southeastern District Conference and publication requested by Conference

If we are to do effective mission work, we must feel be some other factors that enter into that work, but there must be a felt need, if the work is to be undertaken and carried forward to a successful completion. A self-satisfied or complacent individual will never put forth strenuous effort to accomplish any task, and least of all will he make any worth while effort to carry out a missionary programme. Of course, there are other factors that will aid in building home mission work, some of which are important. I shall touch on these as my subject unfolds.

Let me say in passing that no one can be really true to the Master and not be vitally interested in mission work. The last command he gave is a sufficient incentive to stimulate the whole church as it has never been stimulated. If his words fail to bring results, mine will also fail. If his life, character and teachings fail to bring a hearty response to both home and foreign missions, then I feel that the good seed that the Master sowed fell on poor soil, failed to germinate, and as a result will not bring forth a real harvest.

Oh, yes, it will bring forth a harvest, but it will be a harvest of condemnation. The loving Master must surely say in sadness, "I was an hungered and ye gave me no meat, I was thirsty and ye gave me no drink, I was naked and ye clothed me not." Truly there are souls hungry and thirsty for the bread and water of life and no one to give them, naked or destitute of spiritual knowledge and no one to impart to the soul the satisfying truths. What a denunciation! I pray that this terrible denunciation may not fall upon Brethren people, but it will most surely fall upon them, if they are not true to their Master.

Home mission work and foreign mission work are relative terms, and are terms of convenience rather than of Biblical distinction. It is strictly true that we cannot build up a strong, well-balanced foreign mission work without a well-balanced home base. If we stress one too much or to the exclusion of the other, we are in danger of becoming top-heavy and as a result will lack balance and stability. I am sure we do not want to recall a single one of our workers from the foreign field, but the rather do we want to add to this number from time to time.

If this be true, then we have a cogent reason for working for our home field, because it brings a double blessing. First it brings a blessing to the home field through added strength and this in turn brings an added blessing to the foreign field. Our workers have been very successful and we are justly proud of them. Let us lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes, so that others as well qualified and waiting may go and add strength to our foreign mission forces, and also take relief to those overburdened, overworked missionaries who have not counted their lives dear unto themselves that they might win some for Christ. What a reward is in store for those faithful ones who have heeded the call of the Master!

THE NEED

May I stress with a few figures the real need of missions here in our happy homeland. According to the best statistics at my command there are 68,000,000 in the United States who are not members of any church—Protestant, Jewish, or Catholic. Every second person you meet belongs to no church. What a field! What a crying need!

How long, loud and insistent that call! Church of the living God awake. There are 17,500,000 non-church members living in cities of over 100,000. In three great cities alone on the Pacific coast—San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Seattle—there are 1,500,000 unsaved souls. Similar facts and figures can be produced in many large cities and in the smaller cities and towns throughout the land and in our country places. If the automobile owners of the Brethren church would stop joy riding for one Sabbath day and contribute that money for missions, either home or foreign, it would grease the wheels of the mission board machinery and hasten the millennium. The call for workers is so urgent, dare you turn a deaf ear to it?

The atheistic societies are working overtime to spread their pernicious doctrines. In the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, there is a school in which 650 people meet not to study God's word but to teach that there is no God and that the Bible is a myth. Within a ten-mile radius of Boston there are thirty-two such schools. They are scattering their literature everywhere and the damnable seed they are sowing is beginning to grow, and unless checked will produce an awful harvest. The field is yours now. What kind of seed will you sow? The cults are making headway that is alarming. Spiritualism is spreading and is being patronized by members of the church that should know better. What a field for those that believe in a whole gospel for a whole world! If the church of the Lord Jesus Christ is to fulfill her mission, then she must support the work of the Lord Jesus Christ. The churches here in the homeland must hold the ropes while those in the foreign field go down into the pit. This is not a fanciful statement but a statement of a fact. The stronger our home base is, the more securely can we hold the ropes for those who are willing to go down into the pit. Your opportunity for real service lies at your door. Let the Lord open your eyes and you will see it.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST

The next factor that I shall name as demanding and moving us to carry on home mission work is the love of Christ for mankind. Why Christ's long journey from heaven to earth? Why his sojourn amidst poverty and scorn? Why the toilsome travel in Galilee and Judea? Why the tedious journey to Jerusalem when the known rejection, betrayal and cruel death awaited him there? He came to seek and to save that which was lost, and it was love for you and me that led him every step of the way, even to Calvary where love reaches its grand climax. With the spirit of the Master upon them thousands have gone forth and have conquered in his name. The church at large has still to learn this lesson from the great Teacher, and to heed his injunction, "As the Father hath sent me, so send I you." If that is true and binding, it must logically follow that the mission of the church today is the same as the mission of the Son of God. "To seek and to save that which was lost"? Yes, to seek and to search for it till we find it. We are not a whole gospel church unless we live up to the whole gospel.

The same love that prompted God's Son to establish a medium through which the world was to be saved, ought to actuate the church today in her divinely ordained mission. The church in all ages has had a tendency to limit or narrow down her mission. Real love never seeks limits but always seeks outlets, always like her founder seeks to do the things that please the Father. In the garden Christ prayed, "Not my will but thine be done," and every true follower of his has sometimes come into the place where he also has cried, "Not my will but thine be done." But if you lack that real love, you will never do his will. Without love you cannot succeed as a teacher, a musician, a preacher or as a mission worker. You must have human sympathy and understanding, and be able to see the diamond in the rough, or the lily in the ugly earth. You must be able to see a soul stained by sin, transformed by grace and love till it shines as a precious trophy of Christ's redeeming grace.

I am sure you love your church; her distinctive doctrines are precious to you; you love her fellowship; you love all she stands for. Her teachings to you are the essence of true religion. She aims not to seek the approval of men but of God. All that the church is to you, all that she possibly can be to you, she will be to others who at this time are strangers to her. To you is the divine command, Seek and Save the lost. Love will put wings to your feet, weight to your words, power to your message. It will open your eyes that you may see possibilities in places you had passed by. Love will enable you to plant the gospel seed in every nook and corner of your province. Love will find a way or make one. Love will polish up the dark side and make it shine. Love will lighten heavy burdens. Love will make impossibilities possible. Love is like a magnificent temple whose length, breadth, height and depth are equal. The breadth may represent Christ's world-wide love; the length its extent throughout all ages. The depths may represent his wisdom. The height is beyond the reach of any foe, or perhaps may represent the Saviour's love in raising the sinner from the depths of misery to the heights of happiness. Love will "G O" and when the church gets the go spirit, she is bound to grow.

VISION

A third factor is vision. "Where there is no vision the people perish." This statement accounts for many failures. There is not a closed church in the brotherhood but is a monument to the truth that folks lost their vision. Or it may be lamentably true that they never had a vision, no vision of future possibilities. A man or a woman with a vision is irresistible. Such a one is instant in season and out of season. Such a one sees Sunday school superintendents, preachers, leaders in church activities, missionaries in the embryo, sees future possibilities for church extension and growth in places unnoticed by any one without a vision. You may say the material upon which I must work is poor and unpromising. A noted educator has said the poorer the material the greater the skill required of the teacher. I think this will apply in church work as well. Columbus had a vision and America is the result. Edison had a vision and the electric lights are the result. The Wright brothers had a vision and the aeroplane is the result. Jesus Christ had a vision and the plan of human redemption is the result. The church that has no vision perishes and she ought to perish. Why cumber the ground?

The Chinese have had no vision and as a result that nation, mighty for multitude, is regarded as one of the backward, weaker nations that lack capability and stability. If this sleeping nation ever gets really awake and catches a vision she will become a mighty power that any nation will well consider before engaging her in a mortal combat. If the Brethren church ever gets her real vision she will leap where now she limps. If you are not able to see Brethren churches greatly multiplied all over our own and other countries as well, you will do mighty little to bring about this most desirable result. Power and vision are closely allied, and the power to do is largely the ability to see what should be done.

The strength and power of the church have never yet been tested, nor will they be, till the church gets her vision. The golden age of Brethren activity is in the future, not in the past, and that golden age will be ushered in when the church gets her vision. And the church will get her vision when the voice that comes from the Brethren pulpits rings true to the missionary teaching of the book. The Brethren ministry must bring forth the whole gospel, not just a portion of it, nor something else just as good. You must believe in your very soul that there is nothing else just as good and that you will stand true to that teaching regardless of cost or consequences. If you are looking for a place to get out, the sooner you find it the better off the church will be. Teach Brethren doctrine in such a way that you will convince your hearers that there is nothing else just as good. Christ felt in his soul that he had a message and a mission that the world needed, that enabled him to speak with authority and not as the teachers of his day.

This authority brought the response from those who were sent to entrap him, "That never man spake like this man." A weak, vacillating policy always defeats itself. Get a vision and then use it when you get it. There are other factors that I shall mention but they are more or less covered by the ones I have named. They are so inclusive and vital. If you feel the need of more Brethren churches in the homeland; if you have love for the cause that will enable you to make a willing sacrifice to that end; if you have the vision of a greater Brethren church, I am sure you will be willing to be used to bring your vision to pass.

WILLINGNESS

Willingness? There is more in that word than you at first suppose. Many failures result from not having willing workers—workers, who are willing to go, to do and to say, when, where and what is necessary. The remarkable outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost was due to the fact that they were "All" with one accord in one place, praying for the same thing. The fact that they were willing to stay in one place for ten days praying for the same thing brought wonderful results. If somehow the Brethren church could unite on some plan to have a ten days' prayermeeting, if not all in one place, all to agree in asking for the same thing, the thing that was most needed, what marvelous results might follow! The church must be willing, or she must be willing to be made willing to wait on her Lord. If you want pentecostal power you must be willing to pay the pentecostal price.

WHAT IS WRONG?

By Fred V. Kinzie

You may not agree with some of his implications and you may think his "hasty" survey is faulty, but

Who can dodge the challenge of Pioneering in Church Extension?

A good many times has this question been intimated by pen and voice recently—yes, and times not so recent. It pertains to the slow growth and meager representation of the Brethren Church throughout the land.

At the last National Conference this problem was stated in no uncertain terms, and some faltering answers were proffered.

Nor do we purpose to hold the exclusive panacea—only this—one question has stood out boldly before us for years: Why has the field occupied by Brethren been confined to very limited and restricted areas, while our sister group, the Church of the Brethren (and others of similar classification), has become so much better distributed?

A hasty survey reveals a peculiar condition: Not more than eighteen states (plus the District of Columbia) have any organized group of our people whatsoever. Two of these are questionable. Two states have but one church each. Two have two churches each. Three have three churches each. The majority of our congregations are found in about four states, the vast territory of California boasting only a dozen congregations. In Indiana, the leader as to number of centers, there are only about three dozen, and all save one of these are in the north half of the state. In no state is there an even distribution. Many of these which have been counted are now labeled "Vacant."

No church with a message such as ours has such spotted and deficient representation. Why is this true? What is the cause? What is wrong? Or is there nothing wrong, and we should complacently go on in the same old grooves?

The day of "pioneering," as understood two or three generations ago, is practically past; but we are not so sure that some "church extension pioneering" might be in order even in these modern days.

We are not thinking so much just of 1933 (for every effort is highly handicapped in the present unusual distress), but for the last decade or quarter century, has not the pioneering spirit of our church leaders been largely on the retrograde?

Have not too many potential pastors issued forth from halls of learning with the one idea of stepping into a well-feathered, waiting pulpit, comfortable salary guaranteed, and stalwart constituency able to man every "gun"?

When thinking of prospective church locations, are we right in giving first consideration to money and an EDIFICE? It is the writer's persuasion that this question must be answered in the negative. The first thing needed is MEN!

A thoroughly consecrated man, with an unadulterated knowledge of the Scriptures (a liberal education being, of course, a distinct advantage); a man willing to locate in a new field, especially where a small nucleus of Brethren already abide; and one willing to ply some trade or vocation for self-support in the beginning—such men can establish new Brethren centers—and just such men should be stepping forth from our Seminary, or even from many other walks of life.

Don't say, "Impossible flights of fancy." That's the way many of the false cults are being disseminated. The secret is that their followers are on fire and zealous for these erroneous beliefs. We have the very essence of the TRUTH and a marvelous message to which we so often allude. Should we be satisfied to do less in the way of self-denial and personal sacrifice?

One other point: Does not the vision of an imposing house of worship with all modern appointments loom too early in our extension enterprises? And the result—staggering indebtedness, followed so often by heart-breaking misunderstanding, quarreling, and wreckage which cannot be outgrown in years—and all, usually, the fruitage of pride!

We wonder if the Lord is pleased with our practice of plunging into debt. Had we not better begin in more humble fashion and let the size and quality of the "CHURCH HOUSE" be an outgrowth of the spirituality and loyalty of the body of believers (the true "CHURCH")?

What is wrong? Why our meager growth and lack of extension? Can the problem be overcome by high-powered appeals to GIVE more liberally? Never!

Folks will give without impassioned pleading, and they cannot be detained, once they see unselfish fire and zeal motivating their leaders everywhere, and driving them into the thick of the fight!

Is it not time, indeed, to arouse from sleep on this all important subject?

Harrah, Washington.

"WHY I GO TO CHURCH"

You might just as pertinently inquire "Why do I eat?" or "Why do I sleep?"—because I find one is just as necessary to my well-being as the other.

I could eat well and sleep well, and yet be a very miserable man without the spiritual uplift that only comes from an attendance upon the Divine ordinances.

Then again, it is a great privilege to touch shoulders with the earnest Christian men who are also interested in promoting Christ's Kingdom upon earth.

For four years while Postmaster General under the Harrison administration, I traveled nearly 100,000 miles in order to be present each week at my own church.

I have made it the rule of my life to be in my regular place each Lord's day when in health and in the country, believing that Paul was inspired to write that we should not forsake the assembling of ourselves together.

I also believe that the temptations of every man are great, and unless he has more than the ordinary groundwork of honesty and faithfulness, he may be caught by the sudden wind of plausible opportunity and tumble over the precipice and be ruined.—By John Wanamaker.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

THE GOOSE-STEP FOR EDITORS

Difficult as these times may be for the members of the editorial fraternity in this country, and especially for editors of religious journals, it would seem that all of them have reason to be grateful that they are not compelled to live and work in Germany, where the Cabinet has just approved the section of the press law submitted by Propaganda Minister Goebbels, which is specifically designed to end the freedom of the press in Germany. All editors of daily papers, periodicals and news agencies operating in the Reich are affected by this law. The press, like the school, the theatre or the radio, is regarded as "a public institution", and all editors must be of Aryan (non-Jewish) descent and must share without reservation in the Nazi conception of the present State. Although the law paradoxically states that editors "must be guided by their own convictions", they are made far more responsible to the State authorities than heretofore. The editor's liability is defined to equal that of the civil service, and "a press court" is to be created which may decide on an editor's absolute exclusion from his profession in the event of his opposition to the Government. Sections of the law are intended to protect editors from all outside influence as well as economic pressure from the publisher, but it is evident that swift punishment is likely to be inflicted on any man who refuses to be a rubber stamp for Hitlerism.

After the methods employed to regiment religion and to make it goose-step with the army, it is not surprising to note this whip-cracking over the journalists of the country. It may be well to remember that in the face of such coercion it will be difficult to accept at face value anything which these journals may have to say. Or are there some even in America who believe that free expression of opinion should thus be gagged?—Reformed Church Messenger.

DEVIL-WORSHIP IN RUMANIA

The New-Outlook (Canada) says that weird stories have been received in London regarding a revival of necromancy and devil-worship in Rumania. Whole districts in that country have been given over to strange vagaries of religion, according to Dr. James Wiles, controller of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Rumania, Jugoslavia and Bulgaria, whose words are quoted in the Daily Mail: "Reports were coming to us from many parts of Rumania that our colporteurs—men who travel about selling and distributing Bibles—were being beaten and harried, both by the peasants and by ignorant local officials. I went to Bucharest and saw M. Titulescu, Foreign Minister, who assured me that this persecution should stop, and the situation has now improved. Rumania is suffering from a wave of semi-pagan religions, and even devil-worship. In one village near the Jugoslav frontier there are numbers of women prophets." A mining engineer from the Jugoslav-Rumanian border told of "chanting" witches—women who fall into fits in the streets, foaming at the mouth and chanting weird sayings which the peasants write down. A fourteen-year-old girl in South Serbia has been visited by hundreds of peasants who believe that she is inspired and ask her advice regarding the harvest and their business and love affairs. Such incidents have been common in all ages, and one which may be regarded as typical is recorded in Acts 16:16. But this sort of thing is not by any means confined to southeastern Europe. Something of the same nature has not been unknown within our own borders, where men and women have occasionally fallen victims to "sooth-saying," and with much less excuse than the people of ancient Philippi or modern Rumania.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

JEWISH IMMIGRATION IN PALESTINE

Since the beginning of 1933, there has been a great increase in the Jewish immigration in Palestine. Whereas in the last half of the year 1932, only a total of 2,000 Jews were admitted into Palestine; since January of this year, the rate has increased to 750 a month, and that notwithstanding the prevailing unemployment and consequent distress. The purchase of ground by Jews has also increased. This has led to an increase of Arab activity and Arab competition. An Arab Resistance Fund has been founded and, according to the General Mission News, the Arabs, following the British-Indian example, have informed the government that they will no longer lead their cooperation and will boycott its public activities, as long as the Jewish immigration is permitted.—The Presbyterian.

EVANGELISM THE HEART OF MISSIONARY EFFORT

"Missionary effort must be based chiefly, if not solely, upon evangelism—the carrying of the Gospel to those who have not yet received it." So says the Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, Bishop of Central New York, in the Episcopal Church, in an article in The Atlantic Monthly for September, 1933. Another quotation runs, "If anybody in the world needs a creed—must have one—it is the missionary." And further, "Men are hungry for a definite religion. They want to know whether or not we have it. They look, searchingly, to discover its fruits. Mere conventional decency of life is not a strong enough force to convert a doubter or overcome evil. An easy-going, half-believing, half-hearted acceptance of religion, with no real faith and no strong sense of duty, is not enough to stabilize society."—The Presbyterian.

Warrant for Refusal to Engage in War

her continued adherence to the principles of non-resistance held by the church since its organization in 1708.

"I. We believe that war or any participation in war is wrong and entirely incompatible with the spirit, example and teachings of Jesus Christ.

"II. That we cannot conscientiously engage in any activity or perform any function, contributing to the destruction of life."

As the church has practiced the teaching of Christ in this matter, her members have at times been compelled to suffer persecution, and if there is faithful continuance in this position in the coming days, there may be still more and more severe persecution, but may she never fear to bear her testimony. She should never encourage nor be rebellious, but rather obedient to all the laws of the state, in every way possible, but when those laws or edicts are clearly contrary to the revealed Word of God; then she must remember the words of Peter: "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts 5:29).

If Christ is our Lord indeed, we must follow him in all the way that he leads. Jesus says: "If a man serve me, let him follow me" (John 12:26). And in this particular, it means following him in non-resistance and in abstinence from participation in the sin of war. If after having the light, we engage in war, we are no longer his true servants. Rather—and we have Jesus' own words for it—"Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin" (John 8:34). May we grasp the significance of his words as clearly and readily as the Apostle Paul, when he declared to the Romans the same truth: "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey: whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness" (Rom. 6:16). God give us the spirit of obedience in all things.

I Timothy

Should a young minister ever be placed in a large church? That question has eloquent debaters on both sides. The kind of young man who will be likely to succeed in a well-established congregation will be one who, like Timothy, is sound in doctrine and sober in practice. He must be intelligent, earnest, agreeable, modest, and spiritual—God-consecrated and Spirit-led, if he is to capture souls for Christ.

Old Men and Young Men

Timothy was in some respects the most fortunate young man in the Apostolic Church. His was the privilege of being a very intimate friend of St. Paul's during the years when the Apostle's counsel was ripe with wisdom and weighted with grace. Paul, contrary to some older men of the universal church, constantly taught, encouraged, guided, and complimented young Timothy. He was rewarded in his old age by having a true, faithful, and loving supporter and associate in the relentless fight which he always waged for Christ and the Church.

And why should that not be the case with every man who grows old in the service of our Lord? To be hypercritical of younger brethren in the ministry is to invite disaster—such men erect beds of thorns and thistles for themselves. Wise and friendly counsel are always in order if a young man makes mistakes in an early pastorate. Too often he is misunderstood, lampooned, and made a castaway.

On the other hand, who has not been disgusted beyond measure at a too vigorous display of a theological education or even a college degree on the part of the man of the pulpit? Or who has not been quickly sickened at the I-know-it-all-attitude and the you-can't-understand-it-plea? A young minister should remember that the angels fell through pride and that beginning preachers are heir to the weakness which robbed them of Paradise. A youthful pastor should study the art of getting along with older men; he should be courteous, respectful, given to wholesome speech, when he addresses his predecessors in the ministry. Paul and Timothy will serve as model examples to old and young preachers alike.

Timothy's Credentials

What experience did young Timothy have as a Christian that should cause the elder Paul to put him in charge of the Ephesian church? Let us examine the history of the Lystra convert.

The sixteenth chapter of the book of the Acts furnishes the Bible student with initial information. He was converted perhaps on the occasion of Paul's visit to his home town. Some scholars have intimated that it may have been even earlier that he found Christ, and suggest that Paul, since Lystra is not many miles from Tarsus, may have been at Lystra prior to his first journey. At any rate we know that Timothy became Paul's traveling companion on the second missionary tour. They were together at Corinth (Acts 19:22; 1 Cor. 4:17) and also at Rome, (Col. 1:1; Phil. 1:1). That was near 62 or 63 A. D. Later he was placed in charge of the Ephesian church and received the first letter from the aged missionary. A second epistle followed during the Apostle's second imprisonment at Rome. (66 or 67). Timothy set out to visit him and then the archives of history become strangely silent. Paul died for his faith in 68 A. D.

Such is the factual and visible history of the Lystra youth. We learn, however, that he was schooled in the faith by Lois and Eunice and became an earnest student of the Scriptures. He was deeply consecrated to his work, possessing a retiring personality which led him to hesitate to deal with the big problems of the church. His diffidence and timidity were natural characteristics of his youth. But his wholesome doctrine, words, and speech were a recommendation to the best of saints. Consequently we find Paul begging him to take heed unto himself and to the apostolic teaching. Timothy, let us remember, was something more than a novice.

A Digest of the Letter

The epistle of First Timothy is really the first manual which was ever written on church government. It gives advice concerning prayer, the place of women, the qualifications of bishops and deacons, ministerial conduct and work in the church.

It will not be out of order to list the Biblical qualifications of bishops and deacons in the church. It will serve as a plus and minus check up for the leading officers of the church. (See 1 Tim. 3:1-16).

(For Bishops)

1. The Office Itself
2. Blameless in Character.
3. Husband of One Wife.
4. Vigilant.
5. Sober.

6. Of Good Behaviour.
7. Given to Hospitality.
8. Apt to Teach.
9. Not given to Wine.
10. Not a Striker.
11. Not Greedy of Money.
12. But Patient.
13. Not a Brawler.
14. Not Covetous.
15. One That Ruleth Well.
16. Not a Novice.
17. Not Proud but Humble.
18. Of Good Report Among Those Without.

(For Deacons)

1. Must be Dignified.
2. Not Double-Tongued.
3. Not Given to Strong Drink.
4. Not Greedy of Money.
5. Sound in Doctrine.
6. Proved.
7. Blameless.
8. Good Husbands.
9. Good Parents.
10. The Reward.

Both bishops and deacons who read this list will be forced to cry out: "Who is sufficient for these things?" None of us of ourselves! But through his grace and gifts we can become worthy servants of the King.

A Minister's Conduct

One main reason for the writing of this letter is to be discovered in Paul's words: "that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God." In this direction Paul urges Timothy.

1. To be an Example.
2. To Read Widely.
3. To Culture the Gift.
4. To Meditate.
5. To Take Heed Unto Himself.
6. To Take Heed Unto the Doctrine.
7. The Reward: Saving Self and the Hearers.

A Pastor's Work

1. Regard Highly the Aged.
2. Honor Widows.
3. Rebuke Sinners.
4. Keep Pure Personally.
5. Teach, Exhort, etc.
6. To Withdraw from False Teachers.
7. Be Separated from the World.
8. Fight Faith's Fight.
9. Keep the Enjoined Commandment.
10. Warn the Rich.
11. Guard the Deposit.
12. Avoid Vain Knowledge.

Conclusion

The minister's business is the biggest business in the world. He has the Biggest Message concerning the Biggest Person who ever lived. It will make the biggest men and women out of the smallest people that have ever trod our earth. And, to use language of Charles Mayes, "I would rather be a preacher than President of the U. S. A."

TURNING TO CHRIST IN TURKEY

For the first time in many years Turkish men and women have been openly confessing Christ to their scandalized neighbors. They have been haled before minor Government officials and severely dealt with according to a recent report from the American Bible Society's agency in Turkey. But those officials later have been rebuked from the capital for their failure to respect the liberty of conscience which the laws of the Republic guarantee to every citizen. Though God has used many means to awaken the hearts of these men and women, the American Bible Society gives special thanks that its new Turkish Scriptures are having a definite part in this significant work.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

A Brief History of the Brethren Church-Polity

By the Rev. N. V. Leatherman

There is a growing interest and concern in the Brethren church to reevaluate and reconsider the polity of our Christian fraternity. This is evidenced by the action of General Conference of 1915 in the adoption and promotion of, "The Manual of Procedure." This interest is kept alive by the frequent conversations of the brethren, that drift in the direction of this subject. Recent outstanding problems of our brotherhood have in no little degree stimulated our leaders to direct their thought and attention in regard to our polity. Doubtless another major factor that impels this keen interest is the manifest retarding of our church extension in the light of a developing enthusiasm and ambition to see the whole church advance more rapidly than she has in the last decade. A more recent development or evidence of wonder about our polity is discovered in the appointment by our last General Conference (1933) of a "Committee on Church Organization and Administration." Discerning then this interest in our subject we believe it appropriate for this occasion while our ministerial brethren of the Pennsylvania district conference are assembled in session, at the same place where fifty years ago the Brethren church was born through severe travail.

It is our purpose to present our subject as the Brethren church history reveals it. While at the same time we shall reserve the license to promote in conclusion the beliefs and convictions, this brief compilation of facts has borne to us.

Needless to say the scope of our observations must of necessity be extremely limited. We may consider the extremities of our field of thought, but many of the embellishing details will have to remain with the sources of our information. However we shall seek to portray as best we may the fundamental principles that moved our fathers in their set up of the organized church passed on to us. We are laboring under the impression that we can little understand the history of our own denomination or its polity without learning much of the entire history of the Tunker peoples. Therefore we shall lead your thought from that earlier beginning in 1708 at Schwartzau, Germany.

We mention the sources of most of our information, both in acknowledgment of our appreciation of them and the privilege of using them, which we assume, and for the purpose of recommending their consideration on the part of those who hear this paper. First, we mention, "Holsinger's History of the Tunkers and the Brethren Church," embracing, The Church of the Brethren The Tunkers, The Seventh Day German Baptist Church, The Old German Baptists, and the Brethren Church, including their origin, doctrine, biography and literature. While this text may not be the best organized it certainly contains the best and most data covering this field of history. Beyond question the most scholarly presentation of knowledge about the Tunkers is the "History of the German Baptist Brethren in Europe and America," written by the late ex-governor, Dr. Martin Grove Brumbaugh, of Pennsylvania. Another, to the writer, a very valuable source of information is "The Brethren's Encyclopedia," containing the united councils and conclusions of the Brethren at their Annual Meetings, carefully collected, translated (from the original German in part) and arranged in alphabetical and chronological order, accompanied with necessary and explanatory notes, etc." by Elder Henry Kurtz, 1867. Another text is a "History of the Church of the Brethren of the Western District of Pennsylvania," by Elder Jerome E. Blough, 1916. The last large volume we mention is, "Two Centuries of the Church of the Brethren," Bicentennial Addresses at the Annual Conference held at Des Moines, Iowa, June 3-11, 1908. This book is especially valuable in that it not only contains the addresses on the history of the church but an excellent address devoted particularly to the Polity of the Church, by Elder I. D. Parker. Then too, we have made use of such references as, "The Brethren Pastors' Complete Handbook," "The Pastors' Manual," of the Church of the Brethren, "Brethren Annuals," "Brethren Evangelists" and several volumes of "The Christian Family Companion," published by H. R. Holsinger. The latter we are sorry to admit contains a vast amount of information which time has prevented our thorough perusal.

We give just a further word defining the term, polity, and the manner in which we choose to use it. We gather this from the dictionary:—"The form, constitution, system or fundamental principles of government of any political body or other organization. The recognized principles on which any institution is based." We take it this definition allows within itself the exercise of policy, which is defined thus:—"The management of both public and private affairs. The principles on which any measure or course of action is based having regard to the ends aimed at and the means used to arrive at them." Hence we shall be concerned about the organization set up of the church, and the policy exercised in the accomplishment of her purposes.

ORGANIZATION

Will it be surprising to us to learn that the consideration of church polity was one of the major propositions that gave rise to the origin of the Brethren peoples? It was indeed a subject of much concern to the early founders of the church. This is made very clear when we learn who they were that formed that first organization two and a quarter centuries ago. While Brumbaugh emphasizes the fact that the Brethren were not Pietists but an altogether distinct people apart from them, we must be informed that the one thing that made them distinct from the Pietists was the fact of their organization as such. For before they were organized into a church they were as the Pietists, a heterogeneous number of folks who had come out of the state churches of their day. "The Pietists were a class of religious reformers in Germany during the seventeenth century, who sought to revive declining piety in the Protestant churches. Among them were to be found men of all shades of religious opinions, which were at variance with the established churches. In this aggregation of persons holding widely differing views on almost all Christian duties, except those of devotion and piety, it was found difficult to collect those of sufficient number who were of "one mind" to establish a congregation. As long as they kept prominently before themselves their specialty, and devoted themselves assiduously to the cultivation of their favorite virtue, they prospered greatly" (Holsinger's History, page 30). Of these Ernst Christopher Hochmann and Alexander Mack were principal characters. Neighboring together in the community of religious refuge at Schwarzenau these two men learned together from the Word and each other with ever increasing love and respect. There seemed to be one thing only upon which they could not agree. Hochmann and Mack saw alike the errors of the formalism of the state churches. Hochmann gave his life in suffering and persecution, having withdrawn from all organized churches, by protestation tried to reform them from within. Mack seeing the utter futility of this method sought to gather a people who would make the Bible the only rule of faith and practice. Hochmann was fearful of and rebelled against any type of organization of the church. Mack had come to see no other possibility than to organize Christ's people. Mack reasoned that obedience to the ordinances, the exercise of discipline and the promotion of the church demanded organization. As a result in 1708 he led in the perfecting of the first organization of the Brethren. (We quote from Brumbaugh's History, page 25). "From this separation Hochmann never rallied. His strongest supporters were now with the new congregation, and he spent his old days in solitude and sorrow." . . . Further he writes of him, "If not a member he was at least so closely identified with the first members that he worshiped with them, endorsed their views, loved their fellowship and gave them as they gave him consistent aid and sympathy. Moreover he preached to the Brethren in Switzerland in the presence of Alexander Mack."

We have dwelt thus at length on this relationship between Hochmann and Mack to show the occasion for the beginning of our early organization. Not only was the necessity for organization sensed by Mack; but he was compelled to weigh very seriously the dangers in setting up an organization by Hochmann and the conditions of the times. In Brumbaugh's History, (page 72) where he gives a biographical sketch of Alexander Mack, he says of him, "He was a careful student of the Bible and of all theological works. He knew the history of the church from the apostolic age to his own time." With this knowledge and the seriousness of the task in hand may we not regard his work as being well done! And when we have said this we have said about as much as we are able to say relative to that early organization in Germany. For con-says do not be afraid of them, as they can do neither good nor evil, they can not even move of themselves, they must be carried from place to place. But Jehovah God is preeminent, he is the living God, the everlasting King. Before him all the gods fashioned by the hand of man must perish from the earth.

FRIDAY

Acceptable Worship. John 4:19-26

When the Samaritan woman at Jacob's well was confronted with her sins as she held conversation with Jesus she attempted to change the subject of the conversation by asking Jesus to decide a question that was a matter of dispute between the Jews and the Samaritans, that was the question as to the proper and acceptable place to worship God.

Here Jesus gave an answer that should stop such inconsequential controversies for all time, when he said it was not the PLACE but the SPIRIT of worship that was acceptable to his heavenly Father. Acceptable worship must be in the spirit.

SATURDAY

Seeking and Finding God. Psalm 34:1-8

While some people seem to seek out the one true God at all times, there are others who seem to turn to him only when trouble and care or danger overtake them. I think most of the heathen worship and their seeking after God is because of fear that possesses their souls.

The psalmist was in fear of his life because of an angered and insane Saul, made insane by jealousy. David may have had a natural longing to find God, but in this instance, he says he sought and found God, and he removed his fears from him.

SUNDAY

God Incarnate. John 1:1-14

How did God come into the world to be of personal service to man, and to provide for his salvation? Read this first chapter of the gospel by Saint John and you will learn.

For many years, yes even centuries, the Jewish world had been looking for such a manifestation of God, but when he became incarnate in the form of the babe cradled in the manger, and when he came to his own, his own received him not. What a tragedy this proved to be to those who refused to receive him; but what a glorious achievement to those who did accept God manifest in the flesh.

(Lesson for November 19, 1933)

Lesson Text: Acts 17:22-34.. Golden Text: Acts 17:28)

Paul in Athens. Acts 17:22-34

Here was Paul's opportunity to appear before men who were leaders in the most famous city of the world of his day. Paul had had much success in preaching the gospel in other important cities, and had secured for his Christ a goodly number of disciples and had organized important churches in these important centers; but persecution and danger to life had driven him out of these fruitful fields. So he made his way toward the great city of Athens. Here he had the opportunity to address what perhaps was his most illustrious audience in all his ministry, and he did not fail to bear a good testimony for his Lord.

TUESDAY

The Invisible God. Job 23:1-10

The invisible God has been sought after in all ages and by practically all people. But some have tried to visualize their conception of this Supreme Being, and their attempts have been portrayed in the idols of the heathen peoples. Paul found this the case among the cultured Athenians, and undertook to explain to them how such a thing was impossible, because nothing fashioned by the hand of man could in any way resemble the likeness of God.

Many years before Job had tried to locate this invisible God, but he found it impossible in any physical sense. Only in the spirit can God be found.

WEDNESDAY

God's Greatness. Isaiah 40:25-31

The greatness of God is so far above the comprehension of the ordinary man that only the especially favored, those of mighty understanding, those who have been designated as chosen vessels, have been in any way able to express in any comprehensive terms those qualities that are inherent in the mighty Father. Such a one was Isaiah, and the words of this passage of Scripture give us his conception of the greatness of the One by whom all the worlds were made.

THURSDAY

God Preeminent. Jeremiah 10:6-11

Jeremiah is warning his hearers against idolatrous practices of the nations about them, nations that cut down trees and fashion them, and bedeck them with gold or silver plates. They may bow down before them in forms of worship, but Jeremiah

The Missionaries Christmas

Now is the time to remember our home and foreign missionaries for Christmas, suggests The Missionary Review of the World.

No one who has not been away from home and intimate friends for several years can imagine the heart-warming joy with which these absentees at the front receive messages and other remembrances from friends at home. Most of those interested in Christian missions have some friends or correspondents in the field. Many churches or societies have their own representatives, and are not content with merely a formal and corporate remembrance. Now is the time to prepare and send cards, letters, and gifts to these absent, self-sacrificing workers.

Here are a few suggestions for Christmas gifts:

1. Money for their own needs or for their work. Many take from their meagre salaries to make up for cuts in appropriations.
2. Books and magazines, only the best and most wholesome, not modern trash. Biography, classics, recreational reading, some serious and inspirational literature; good children's books and books on child-training.
3. Things that women appreciate and find it hard to procure in out-of-the-way places — handkerchiefs, scarfs, aprons, stockings, stationery, etc.
4. Things for the home—table and bed linen, soap, rugs, pins, and sewing kits, throw-downs, bureau scarfs, pictures, etc.
5. Gifts for children—toys, dolls, games, books, pictures, and appropriate clothing, caps, ribbons, etc.

6. Gifts for men—fountain pens, magazine pencils, ties, handkerchiefs, kit of tools.

7. Miscellaneous—colored picture rolls, pictures, attractive Christmas and Easter cards that can be used, scrapbooks for hospitals and for nurseries, kindergarten supplies, music, victrola and records, typewriter, thermos bottles and jugs (unbreakable), bags and traveling conveniences, new cloth, seeds.

Remember to send these gifts and messages in ample time to reach recipients before Christmas; send at least six weeks or two months or more in advance for foreign lands and two weeks for American points by mail, longer by freight or express.

Address clearly and accurately, and declare the value. Fully prepay; and, if gifts are dutiable, send money to the missionaries to pay the duty. (Ask the mission board if you are in doubt.) Study the field and the needs and taste of the ones to whom you send. Pack carefully, but do not seal, and mark, "Gift. Not to be opened until Christmas."

Above all, write a loving word of greeting, and remember the missionaries and their work in prayer, understanding, sympathetic prayer. This they value above all.—C. E. World.

How long our prayers are is not so important a matter as our desire to be in fellowship with the Father.

Dr. Gribble Writes from Africa

Natives looking for return of Missionaries
 A native Christian wedding
 Celebrate I. H. Foster's birthday Epidemic of "grip" and other items of interest

Yaloke, par Boali, par Bangui,
 French Equatorial Africa.
 September 12, 1933.

As we write today three months have elapsed since the departure of Brother and Sister Hathaway. The boys are already counting forward toward their return instead of backward. The natives are giving them exactly one year of absence from Yaloke Station, but we missionaries are inclined to be a little more lenient having had experience with the delays which may arise "in journeyings oft."

On August 13th we received mail, including a cablegram from Dr. Bauman in reference to the financial situation. We discussed what action to take after our usual Sunday evening service, and on the following morning sent a runner to the other stations to convey the news and to ask their opinion in the matter.

We had a rather sad experience at the dispensary about the middle of August. A woman who had been suffering with a very deep ulcer ran away because she refused to have the ulcer curetted. Her son who had been staying at the hospital caring for her but never brought her back. Evidently he could not persuade her to return. These cases are sad and might cause discouragement in the sense of defeat, if we did not remember the Gospel seed sown during the stay at the hospital.

On August 18th a native wedding occurred at the church here. A boy who has been long with us and has been a faithful Christian, married a sweet Christian girl. We rejoice at the establishment of Dokofie's home, and we look forward with joy to the Christian influence emanating from every newly established Christian home.

Shortly after this the Administrator who is to take charge of Bozoum passed Yaloke Poste. Many chances come to us in the administration of this territory. We commit all to God, knowing "The hearts of kings are in his hands" as well as those of other rulers.

There are days upon the mission field on which our hearts are especially burdened with prayer. Oft-times these days are Sundays. Sunday, August 20 was such a day. A day when the burden for native Christians was placed upon our hearts and kept us crying unto God for their infilling of the Holy Spirit. August 20 was also Mr. Foster's birthday. We have the custom of celebrating birthdays on the mission field and yet also trying to surprise the one in whose honor the celebration is held. We thought this time we would be successful because we entertain at the respective homes on alternate Saturday nights. We therefore planned the birthday party for August 19th, the Saturday night it was our turn to entertain, but—Mr. Foster was not in the least surprised. He came in his best white suit, green shirt and tie to match and we knew the moment we saw him that he was surprising us and not we him. We spent a pleasant evening together and know you will join with us in wishing him many more happy years in the Lord's service.

On August 21st a brief vacation commenced in the school. This day therefore saw several departures among the school boys and the students of the Bible School. The assistant teacher of the French School Jack Adambou, also left for a brief vacation, also Andre Bernard the present nurse at the hospital. The weeks which have followed have been busy ones, although the boys who assist in the dispensary work have been faithful, and through the kindness of my fellow missionaries I have been relieved of every other possible duty, Miss Patterson taking the housekeeping and Mrs. Foster some of my Bible classes.

The night of August 25th was a stormy one, but in spite of that a serious accident case was brought in from Yambourou. One of our trusty native Christians had fallen from a tree and sustained serious injuries. He is still in the hospital and his bright, smiling face is a testimony to the grace of God in spite of his suffering.

We have also been handling a heavy epidemic of grip which still continues. Up to date we have not lost any cases, for which we praise God.

Toward the last of the month of August our hearts were much grieved by the falling into sin of some of our native Christians. We pray that they may be blessed with true repentance, and we ask your prayers that we as missionaries may know how to deal with these stumbling babes in Christ that quickly they may arise again to serve the Lord to his glory.

Each Sunday afternoon the Fishermen's Club goes to some village to preach. Some of the missionaries always accompany them. God blesses these meetings, the testimonies of the Christians ring true and many are brought to the Lord.

On August 31st, Miss Emmert and Miss Patterson took an evangelistic trip by push, leaving the station early in the morning and spending the day preaching at ten villages. The meetings were well attended in spite of the fact that many of the people were out working in the cotton gardens. Some thirty or forty accepted the Lord.

I am planning within a week to take an itinerating trip toward Bangui, visiting all of our chapels and preaching points as well as transacting business in Bangui for the missionaries. Joseph Nguede, my efficient chauffeur, is invaluable on these occasions as I could not take these trips without him. As I will camp several nights en route I will take with me my little personal boy Louie. This trip will only be made possible by the return of our nurse, Andre Bernard, who is expected back today.

I hope to be able to add a few lines descriptive of this trip before mailing this letter at Bangui.

On August 30th God sent in answer to prayer funds for partial payment of our evangelists who have been working without hope of remuneration. We praise him for it and continue to look for him for a similar needed supply for the month of September.

Miss Emmert resumed her school on Monday, September 4th, as we have no Labor Day here, or rather all days are labor days. The Bible School students have not all yet returned but we are anticipating their return this week.

Letters come and go between the stations, less frequently however than we could wish. Our last news from Bassai brought the word that on account of swollen rivers and broken bridges, Mr. Jobson will not be able to make the trip to Bangui which he had planned to make during August. We have therefore offered to take care of any business for the missionaries which it may be possible for us to handle while in Bangui, and are awaiting Mr. Jobson's reply.

You will read from various Bellevue correspondents of the tragical death of one of their native Christians, Ngaili, which occurred on August 13th. We are glad that we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

In spite of sorrows and afflictions, the evangelistic, school and medical work are continuing at all the stations and as much work is being done in the way of building and repairs as funds will allow.

By the time you receive this the December conference at Bassai will be approaching or perhaps even at hand. We ask therefore your prayers, as during the interval between Christmas and New Year called the holidays, we shall meet for prayer and counsel. Our hearts were deeply burdened as we upheld you in prayer during the recent conference at Winona Lake. We felt that God's blessing was resting mightily upon you. We trust that you have had the privilege of having with you our dear missionaries Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Miss Bickel and that you and they were alike refreshed.

We are asking great things for the coming year in the Oubangui-Chari Mission. God is able to supply the needed workers, continued funds and above all to increase that volume of prayer which we are sure is already constantly ascending for us.

On August 24th the first line in my diary consists of the words "And now unto him". May we not take these words as our motto for the year 1934, which will so soon be upon us as you read these lines? And now unto him let us look for wisdom in every problem, for comfort in every sorrow, for direction in every difficulty. And now unto him we commit you, our fellow-workers—unto him and the day of his Coming.

Sincerely and faithfully yours, heart of the Alleghenies. We number only about twenty-five and are at least fifty miles from any other Brethren Church.

This congregation was organized about two years ago largely from isolated members of the abandoned Arritts church. Nearly every member is a reader of the Brethren Evangelist and are as loyal a band as the writer ever served.

GRATIS AND NEW LEBANON CHURCHES FORM CIRCUIT

Linked together by fifteen miles of splendid road, Gratis and New Lebanon churches have, at least for the present, become a circuit. These two churches having for many years each had a pastor for full time, the change to a circuit makes a marked difference in the programs of these congregations, just as it means a decided change in the program of the pastor who has for many years been a full time pastor. And yet, the necessary readjustments for both the pastor and the churches seem well under way, and it is to be hoped the losses and disadvantages which such a change involve will be held to the minimum.

It is needless to say that when Brother King left the New Lebanon church for his new field, he left his congregation in a high and splendid state of cultivation, and he and his family left a host of warm, loyal friends. They were greatly beloved by the New Lebanon people both in and out of the church, and their tireless and sacrificing service yielded a great harvest, and represents a monument to them which it will be their just privilege to refer to with satisfaction and pride in future years. It is a pleasure to succeed a man of the type of Brother King.

We are getting acquainted with the New Lebanon field, having been in practically all of the homes. Our preaching services are well attended. The Sunday School attendance is holding up well in spite of the change. On the night of October 29th we had a very edifying and helpful communion service, with two nights of preparatory services preceding. We have some plans in mind for Christian Endeavor work, etc. We have been received by the New Lebanon people in a most warm hearted and cordial manner. Whether we work together in the Lord's service for a long or a brief period, we trust that it will be to his glory, and we believe it will be with pleasure at least to the pastor and his wife.

Gratis has had a good summer and fall. Our Sunday School had no summer slump. Our Christian Endeavor work is a source of much pleasure to the pastor. On the Sunday nights he preaches here he devotes two hours to Endeavor meetings before he preaches, and he does it with delight. It pays big. By the time this is in print we will have had our autumn communion service here. On November 12th, we will have our Home Coming service. Our W. M. S. is busy. And so all in all, the Gratis church is doing a good piece of work. Later in the winter Bryan and Gratis will exchange pastors for meetings. We are all looking forward with pleasure to having Brother Stewart with us. I don't know which way or how Bryan is looking—I hope forward too. Anyhow Bryan proposed the plan and we quickly took them up. We are hoping and praying for the best in these very difficult and testing times.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Our homecoming last Saturday was a particularly brilliant event. The day was fine and the attendance good, many former students and graduates returning for the events.

The football game was with Otterbein College which we defeated 13 to 0. The grounds were beautiful with the purple and gold decorations. The college band with their improved uniforms played and marched in excellent style. The band is now under the direction of Mr. Dean Ben-shoff, the new assistant to the Bursar.

In the evening, the Scribes, the men's honorary literary society of the College, held a reunion luncheon which was attended by many former members.

Also in the evening, the Dramatic Department produced Uncle Tom's cabin before a crowded house. The performance was well done.

Also at the football game, a purple and gold chrysanthemum was given to the seven seniors who were playing their last game of football.—Messrs. Boyer and Fulton of Pennsylvania; Jacoby, Stewart, Sulinsky, Berry and Paxton, of Ohio; and Garling of California.

All in all, this homecoming was among the best ever held here.

The next number of the new College Bulletin is now ready for the press and ought to be mailed within two weeks. We now have some 4,000 names in the new addressing machine files. These are all sorted by post offices and also alphabetically, which is the most modern method of handling names for mailing purposes.

It may be of interest to know that the writer of these notes was recently made a Fellow in the American Association for the Advancement of Science, of which society he has been a long time member.

RICHPATCH CHURCH, VIRGINIA

Our revival meeting in the Richpatch Congregation was held during the first twenty days of August, brother Isaac D. Bowman, of New Jersey, doing the preaching.

The prophetic messages of the first week did much to arouse interest and bring the people out. The weather was favorable the greater part of the time and the attendance was all that could be expected. Nearly every one that attended was connected with some church which fact made it difficult for an ingathering. The "Holy Rollers" were conducting a meeting nearby almost the entire time of our services, which kept some away.

Though only one was added by baptism, the church and community were greatly encouraged and strengthened.

We desire the prayers of the brotherhood for this small, isolated congregation nestled in a high mountain valley in the

LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

Interest and attendance kept up well at La Verne during the summer months, in spite of the absence of the pastor, while on his vacation and attending National Conference at Winona Lake.

Brother Lynn reports seven baptisms during the quarter. Two faithful members were lost by death—Brother Perry Yoder, Sr., and Sister Keating. One member was also lost by letter.

During the summer months Brother Elias White and Brother Curtis Morrill, who are now studying at Ashland College, occupied the pulpit, bringing helpful messages from the Word of God. We praise him for using these two young men in his service. Their devotion to the cause of Christ has truly been an inspiration to many.

Sunday school attendance has been exceptionally good, the peak being reached on Rally Day with a total attendance of 219. Several new teachers have been put to work, and promotion and reorganization of the class rolls accomplished. A Sunday school picnic was held after the pastor's return, bringing members together for a good time of fellowship. A Christmas program is being planned by Sister Laura Thomason and Sister Ruth Thomason, who were appointed to take charge of arrangements. It is the sincere desire of the Sunday school superintendent, Brother Rudolph Fischer, that progress may be made continually in the Sunday school, and the Word may be given out by teachers in such a way that souls will be led to Christ.

Christian Endeavor societies of the church report growth and progress, and desire in the future to press on to greater work for Christ and the church.

All in all, the La Verne church seems to be in good condition, but your prayers are desired, that we may ever be found faithful and willing to go forward wherever he may lead.

rect information concerning the various offices filled is very conspicuous for its absence. However, we are at liberty to draw conclusions from Mack's response in answering questions, reprinted in Holsinger's History, Page 69), that teachers and elders were the principal offices filled by the church. Again we refer to Mack's Book, quoted and reprinted in Holsinger's History, (page 1) where Mack in answer to his son's inquiry as to who is qualified to conduct the excommunication says, (we quote in part): "To such believers eternal life is promised, and they are commanded by Christ to expell from their congregations such sinful, offensive persons; and what they bind upon earth, will be bound in heaven. Such believers carry into effect the laws and regulations of their Lord and Master, although rejected by such conduct by the wicked." Here Mack says it is the believers, by which we may understand him to mean, the members of the church who exercise the authority to excommunicate. In these two references then, we have as much information the writer of this paper with all his interest in discovering more, is able to find relative to the offices and functioning method of the Brethren in Germany. However these references reveal that there were teachers who taught the Word; there were elders who had the oversight of the church; and the final voice of the church was expressed by the membership, the believers.

When we follow that first group to America in 1719 we first see them scattered upon landing. Scattered for two reasons: to seek for themselves a home, and because they were in no little degree estranged from each other by the exercise of their habitual contentious spirit while voyaging the Atlantic. Apparently they were completely disorganized, not having an ordained elder in their midst. Peter Baker was a minister, the authority and privilege of which office he himself either did not know, or was dreadfully reluctant to assume at first. The fact remains that for four years these Brethren failed to assemble themselves together. They failed in any organized attempt to either care for their own flock or to promote the interests of their church for the benefit of others. We do not say they were Godless. They were devout and most of them remained so even under these trying conditions. In 1727 Baker being moved by the enthusiasm of his apprentice who became his son-in-law, Conrad Beissel, together with Brethren John Gomer, Balsar Gantz, and Henry Traut, frequently met together and conferring with one another decided that Peter Baker with John Gomer and Balsar Gantz should make a tour visiting all the members come over from Germany. This they did, preaching from place to place where the Brethren could be gathered together. On Christmas day, 1723, we learn that as many as could were gathered together at Germantown. This gathering is pointed to by some of the church today as the origin of Annual Meeting in America. For at this meeting, there were six applicants asking for baptism, but before baptism one must be appointed to exercise this rite. Before this could be done a general reconciliation was affected. "They took the matter into prayerful consideration, renewed their own baptismal vows, and reiterated their forgiveness of each others' faults and trespasses, and plighted their faith in God and their love for each other. Peter Baker was authorized to perform the service of baptism, he being the choice of the applicants." (Holsinger's History, page 128). On this same day they organized themselves into a congregation of Brethren. Afterwards they held the first communion service ever conducted in this country. Again we will have to plead ignorant of the details of this early organization. However, it must have been very simple and patterned after the original organization in Germany from whence they came. We may rightly judge too that it was very similar to that of the church of our more recent forefathers.

Let us inquire then into the type of organization that continued with very few changes down to the time of division in the church, and which still continues with few exceptions in the Old Order German Baptist Brethren.

First we shall consider the local church government and offices. The elders, and there were any number of such in each congregation, were the presiding officers both in worship and council meetings. They were elected by the members of the church as were all the officers. Usually the elders were promoted from what were commonly mentioned as ministers or teachers. And among these ministers developed what was later spoken of as the first and second degree in the ministry. A few extracts from the yearly meeting may be of interest here. Y. M. 1835. Art. 2. "How is it viewed to elect brethren to the ministry by lot? Considered, to abide the manner of holding a choice hitherto observed. (Given from memory, as a witness present.) Y. M. 1837. Art. 4. How is it considered to hold an election without an ordained (elder) brother being present? As to holding elections it is considered, that no election ought to be held without the presence of (two or) at least one ordained brother." Y. M. 1845. Art. 7. "How is it considered, if brethren will force themselves into the ministry without consent from the elders, and some of the members encourage them in it? Considered, that inasmuch as it appears by the words of James, chapter 3:1 by the words of our Saviour, John 10:1; and of Paul, Heb. 5:4-7, there is a right way and also a wrong way to enter into the ministry; the wrong way being when one is taking this honor unto himself, and the right way, when one is called of God by the church, which is the body of Christ, and the order of which calling to the ministry is found described in the Acts of the apostles ..." (From the Brethren's Encyclopedia).

There is little question but what the elders in the congregation were the principal leaders in all the affairs of the church, supervising and presiding at council meetings, which in later years developed in the expression of their authority by giving their approval or disapproval as they thought best.

However another minute, (Brethren's Encyclopedia, page 161) Y. M. 1853. Art. 4. "Is it consistent with the gospel and its principles, as professed by our brotherhood, when a brother is chosen to the ministry only, not being authorized to baptize, that (afterwards) the ordained elder of the congregation should forward that brother without consulting the church? Considered that all the power under God is vested in the Church, and that therefore the church should be consulted in all cases."

Y. M. 1853. Art. 44. How is it considered, when choices are held for deacons or teachers in a different manner from general usage, choosing by ballot in presence of all the church, and without ordained elders from other churches being present? Considered, that a choice should be held by each and every member coming (one by one) before the elders and giving their voice privately. The presence of two or at least one ordained elder from another church has been deemed necessary always, so as to avoid the least appearance of partiality, etc."

This gives us the emphatic information that with them (the Brethren of 1853) "all the power under God is vested in the Church." However, it is equally as true with them the church was never complete until there were elders present, and for the manner of election which they had chosen elders from another congregation were present.

The next office in order after elders and ministers is that of deacon, in this older organization of Brethren. We can find no evidence of deaconesses other than as the wives of deacons were considered as such. Yet never do we see them doing the duties of the deacon. Here we cannot refrain from copying from the (Brethren's Encyclopedia again, page 60) a minute from Y. M. 1835, Ohio, Art. 4., though we may not be able to read it for the occasion this paper is prepared. Deacons, Their Office and Duty, "What is the duty of a visiting brother? First, as visiting brethren and overseers of the poor in the church, they have to assist and attend to the yearly general visit from house to house; and it is necessary and their duty, when the church is divided into different visit-districts to take the lead in the visit as well as that of the ministers; and in case the ministers could not assist on account of sickness, it is the duty of the deacons to carry out the visit with other brethren, and to bring before the ministers and the church what they have found. Further, when anything of importance is to be investigated in the church, the ministers have the right to request them (the deacons) to accompany them, or if the case is not of special importance, to send them to investigate the matter and bring it before the ministry. Further, it is their duty, inasmuch as they have been elected to be overseers of the poor, to visit the sick, especially if they are poor, who may be in distress by reason of sickness or other causes, to examine their case, and to report to the ministry, and, if necessary, the ministers to hold a council with the church what is further to be done. When money or grain is contributed in the church for the poor in the church, it is their duty to keep a regular book account of what they receive, and what they lay out for the poor or otherwise for the church, so that they are able at times to render an account with and to the church. Upon the whole all that may occur in the church and is to be investigated, is committed to their care, and if they hear of anything, to bring it before the ministers, to council, whether it is to be examined, and to see it done if found necessary.

Further it is their calling to assist the ministers at meeting, by reading the Scriptures, by using freedom in prayer, and to bear testimony to what was spoken; and if it should happen that no minister (of the word) could come to meeting, it is their duty to lead the worship by singing, prayer and reading the Scriptures, and if they feel so to exhort to the edification of the congregation; yet it was the council of the old brethren that it is not their calling to rise on their feet in order to exhort; and thus to conclude the meeting in the usual order; and to make the ordinary appointments for meeting. Again, when a minister is called to hold meetings in another district, and he requests the visiting brethren to give him company and assistance, it is their duty to assist, and one or the other to go with him.

Further, it is their duty to serve at tables; when a love feast is held, to make the necessary preparations, to call as many other brethren as they need to assist. and at the time of the love-feast to see to it that the sisters can get all things ready at the proper time, and themselves setting the tables, and so in all things see to it that everything is done decently and in order.

For many years questions were frequently presented as to whether or not deacons should be ordained by the laying on of hands. At Y. M. 1850 the matter was concluded, Art. 27, that deacons should not thus be ordained. A surprisingly scholarly presentation of argument is given for their reasons using appeals to both the English, the German and the Greek versions in their interpretation of what they considered the Bible order to be. And let it never be forgotten, these brethren had no other motive in view than to see the Bible order for their beloved church advanced.

So we believe we see their entire local organization in these three offices, namely: deacons, ministers and elders. The elders were interchangeably spoken of as bishops, for thus they read their Book.

What Our Church Can Do to Build up Home Missions

Listen! The Lord says if two or three agree in asking for any one thing he will give it to them.

"Two or three" brings concentration. "Two or three brings consecration. "Two or three" brings irresistibility. Two or three brings power. How are these things to be brought about? By teaching God's word as God's word. God's word will solve any problem however vexed it may be. You do not believe it? Well, that is your trouble.

EARNESTNESS

Many students fail in their work not because they lack intellectuality but because they are not deeply in earnest. Men and women often lose their positions not because they are not qualified but because they lack earnestness. This factor itself will not bring success, but coupled with other factors, it will help them to function and guarantee success where otherwise there would be failure to measure up to the highest success possible. Earnestness takes a man out of the commonplace and stamps him with the mark of genius. Edison said that genius was 98 per cent hard work and 2 per cent brains. If this be true then 98 per cent of our failures is due to lack of earnestness. If we would nerve ourselves as we should for the conflict against the wrong and for the upbuilding of God's kingdom, I am sure we will never be half hearted in the work of the Lord. The need of the work as it appears to the faithful, will help to overcome any spiritual inertia that may have crept in upon us unawares. Here is the Lord's own plan for carrying on his work in his absence. "Pray ye that the Lord of the harvest will send forth laborers into his harvest" e'er this precious grain for which Christ died be lost. This plan has never been improved upon.

FINALLY

If the Brethren church is to remain true to her Lord and his teachings, she must share in a most glorious destiny and in the day when the awards shall be given out she will come in for her full share. And may she be among that number to whom it will be said. "Come, ye blessed of my Father, . . . ye have been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Never has it been so imminently in danger of losing them through shameful alliance with men and methods that it ought to denounce. The great need of the world today is men and women to stand not for the right only but against the wrong. You cannot gild the gates of Paradise with the gold of the world's glory. You cannot improve upon the plan of salvation. You cannot exchange it for something else. Nothing else will do. It is complete. Divine wisdom planned it. Divine love paid the price for it. The plan has been laid for you and me to accept and carry forward. If we fail, If we fail—but we must not and cannot fail if we remain true to him. Did not he say he would be with us and stay with us to the end?

We cannot fail because it is not for gold, it is not for earthly glory, nor for fame that we serve. We feel the need; in our hearts there is that fervent love. We have had our vision. We are willing. Now Lord, what wait I for? Just one thing more will complete our task. Pray the prayer of the prophet? "Here am I, Lord, send me, send me." If each one will truly pray that prayer, our mission problems will be solved.

Linwood, Maryland.

NOVEMBER

Bertha Inwood Michael

*Like soldiers on parade
The corn shocks march the field,
And they must vanquished be Before their riches they will yield.*

*Scattered among the corn,
The pumpkins glow like golden globes;
The morning sun soon strips
The orchards of their frosty robes.*

*Belated crickets chirp
A blue jay from the oak tree shrills,
In clouds of blue and gold
The sun sets o'er the western hills.*

*The wild geese flying south,
Proclaim November days are here;
Because Thanksgiving Day is near.
And all our hearts are glad.*

Armistice Day at the Front

It was night in the Montaign Forest. The rain was falling fast, as it had been for several days. The sodden ground gave back no sound of the thousands of marching feet moving steadily deeper and deeper into the woods. For several weeks troops had been massing in this district for what was expected to be one of the great drives of the war. As long as they followed the main roads they could travel fairly well, but when they turned off the roads, through the age-old trees, whose branches intertwined overhead, they seemed to go through jet-black curtains that closed after them, leaving them in absolute darkness.

Deep in the forest, by the side of a mud road which branched off from the main highway, was a German cemetery. Each grave was marked with a stone cross, in startling contrast to the stark, white, wooden crosses scattered along the highways which marked the last resting place of many a brave American boy. Along this mud road were duck-boards, which served very well in daylight, but the hapless traveler who missed them in the darkness would sink half way to his knees in mud.

At irregular intervals among the trees stood a number of low barracks, covered with tar paper and roofed with corrugated iron. A few weeks before these had been occupied by German forces, but now they were filled with American troops.

Across one end of the last hut in this group a partition had been erected, cutting off about twelve feet of the room. This space was again divided, making two rooms about twelve feet long by eight feet wide. One of these served as the office of the top sergeant and battery clerk; the other was the telephone room, where eight men lived. We had found the place empty, but after the first night, when we were so crowded that no one could sleep, we set to work and built three-deck bunks. This arrangement allowed us to set up a stove, and a table for the telephone equipment by the one window.

There was always a man on duty at the telephone, so this was the one place where we could always find a fire and a light. At night, of course, the window was tightly covered, as even a tiny ray of light might give the information to a German scout plant that troops were living here, and cause us to be shelled out.

Ten o'clock on the night of November 10, 1918, found part of the men in their bunks, but most of the telephone detachment, including the top sergeant and the clerk, were sitting around the stove talking. Candles had run out, but an old jam tin, filled with bacon grease, with an old woollen sock rolled as tightly as possible for a wick, gave enough light to see by. The conversation was punctuated every few minutes by the whine of shells passing overhead on their way to the crossroads not far away, and the heavy reverberations of their explosions. But the light sputtered on, and apparently the last thing anyone thought of was the possibility that one of these shells might wreck our flimsy shelter.

"Well, tomorrow night" said the top sergeant, "we move down to St. Maurice."

"I don't like that," said one of the boys; "that town is shelled regularly every night and part of it is gas."

"What of it?" piped the battery clerk; "you are as safe there as you are here. This don't sound exactly like a Sunday school picnic to me!"

"No," replied the top sergeant, "it sure don't; but this isn't a patchin' to what it will be within a few days. We are due for a big drive. We can't sit here much longer, you know; and I heard today that we have been elected to push the Heimies clear back across the plain."

"O yes, you heard," came a scornful chorus; "more rumors, I guess. This army is made up of 'em."

The door opened and the lieutenant in charge came in.

"Rest!" he said, as every man sprang to his feet. He was drenched with rain, and mud to his knees.

"Come in and get warm and dry, Lieutenant; you must have missed the duck-boards," said the top sergeant.

"Missed them! I never hit them at all. This is one awful swamp. Your fire certainly looks comfortable, and I'll be glad to dry out a little."

The lieutenant was young, very boyish-looking, and just then he wanted companionship more than anything else. He almost regretted having a commission. It seemed so jolly and companionable to be 'just one of the boys.' They all regarded him kindly as he sat down on a box and stretched his cold hands and feet toward the fire. He had eased the load for many a lad who faltered on a long hike, and cheered his men all along the way.

"I have just been down to headquarters," he announced thoughtfully.

Every man sat up straight. Surely now we would hear when the big drive would start. The lieutenant stared at the fire. His eyes were very bright and his face flushed. That he was struggling with some inward excitement we all knew. No one spoke, awaiting the revelation we felt sure was coming.

"Boys," he began again, his voice low and tense, "we have just had word that the Germans have asked for an armistice." He paused, but said no one spoke. We were dumb with amazement. Every man looked at his buddy, wondering what it would all mean.

"Terms have been submitted," continued the lieutenant, "and must be agreed to by eleven o'clock tomorrow. They must sign by that time—or—we will go on," he added grimly.

There was a moment of tense silence, then tongues were loosed, and wild speculations as to what would happen in case the enemy did sign, filled the room. We all talked at once.

Having delivered himself of his amazing news, the lieutenant returned to his own quarters; but the rest of us were too excited to sleep or rest. A long time we sat talking by the sputtering beacon light. Finally the top sergeant spoke in a voice that to all of us was strangely solemn. "I never prayed in my life," he said; "I really don't know how. But, boys, I'm surely going to try tonight before I go to sleep. I want God to stop this mess."

"Why, there is nothing mysterious about prayer," remarked the corporal; "praying is just talking to God, as you would to your own father, and asking him for what you want."

"Then I'm sure going to do some tall talking," said the top sergeant seriously, and every man there earnestly agreed that he, too, would pray for peace.

One by one they slipped into their bunks and were soon fast asleep in spite of the din outside—all except the man at the telephone. How long the balance of the night seemed to him! How many dreams he dreamed of the home he meant to have with one he knew was waiting for him back "in the good old U. S. A." Every shell that passed overhead seemed whistling—

"There's a long, long trail a-winding
Into the land of my dreams—
Where the nightingale is singing
And the pale moon beams!"—

Morning dawned at last, cold and cheerless. The long, long trail came to a sudden end. The dreams of the man at the telephone were rudely shattered by its buzzing. The lieutenant was wanted. A man ran to call him. He came running in, half dressed, and received orders to report at once to headquarters. A horse was quickly saddled and he hurried away. Several hours later he returned. He seemed almost to have wings as he sprang from his saddle exclaiming: "Boys, they have signed! All hostilities cease at 11 o'clock! Thank God, it is over!"

Was it? It certainly did not seem so. It sounded more like the big drive was on. Shells whined and shrieked overhead. The earth trembled with the continuous explosions, and the roar was deafening.

Slowly, slowly, to the impatient men in the echelon, the few hours of the Great War crawled by. It seemed an eternity until 11 o'clock. Headless of the deadly missiles flying overhead, little groups of men stood here and there beneath the trees talking quietly—waiting. At last five minutes of eleven came. More men came out of their quarters and formed new cliques, all waiting. The lieutenant came into the telephone room, feeling, that as they had braved hardships together, he wanted to share this supreme hour with his men.

Three minutes to eleven! A heavy shell burst a short distance away and the little hut in the forest shook like a leaf in a storm. Two minutes crawled slowly by. One minute more—the din increased. Hearts almost stopped beating. This could not be the end; it must be the beginning of the big drive. Had we been fooled?

Eleven o'clock! The hour had struck. What had happened? Silence! Absolute silence! It was as if he who had walked on the turbulent waters of Galilee had bade them be at peace, had again spoken, commanding the most awful tempest of human passion of all time to cease. "Buddy" clasped hands with "Buddy", while tears rolled down bronzed cheeks unheeded. There was peace. Under its magic spell no one spoke, lest he break the solemnity of that sacred hour.

Suddenly there was a terrific clamor of the gas alarm. Everybody instinctively grabbed for his mask; but in a second we heard "Cookie" yelling excitedly, "Come and get it—and leave your gas masks behind!"

The whole force seemed to find voice at once. Yells and cheers rose to the leafy roof above, where now there was no fear-some sound of bursting shells.

It was night in the Montaigne Forest. As far as the eye could see, along both fronts, German and ally, the air was aflame with signal flares, which now meant nothing more than that hearts were glad that the long, long war was over. And down the green aisles of the old forest the trees locked arms together and softly whispered. "Peace!"—Edward E. Olds in Western Christian Advocate.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES By Alva J. McClain

I am glad to yield my regular space in the Evangelist this week to the Home Mission Board for the enlarging of their appeal on behalf of the approaching Thanksgiving offering. No issue of any kind could possibly be more important to members of the Brethren Church just now. It should have first place in our interest and prayers. If we pray, God will answer.

Prayer and Home Mission Success

If we are to succeed, we must turn to prayer. That is the first requisite to success and the most important single thing that can be done. No other suggestion offered in this campaign is as important as the call to prayer. We must begin with prayer and continue at prayer and succeed in prayer before we can hope to succeed in giving. Money will not come until the heart is on fire with desire. But stir up the holy passions of the heart by means of communion with God and interceding in behalf of men and women who are without knowledge of the saving grace of God and there will be no withholding of funds.

Our churches do not half realize the need of prayer. We talk much about it but do very little real praying. We echo pious phrases about the accomplishing power of prayer, but how poorly do we make use of that power! We read how marvelously the souls of men have been turned to God and money brought into the Lord's treasury by the earnest interceding of some of God's believing children, but how seldom do such achievements come within the range of our own experience! We are greatly lacking in the actual practice of prayer, and consequently much of our effort is conceived in human weakness and carried out with customary human inefficiency. If we are to experience a revival of missionary zeal, if we are to see a vital missionary movement sweep across the brotherhood, it must be heaven-born in the place of prayer. There must be a tarrying for the empowerment of the Holy Spirit.

It is not sufficient that a few shall be enlisted in prayer for Missions. The greatest success can be had only when the whole church is brought to its knees in intercession. It is not enough that the pastor and deacons engage in prayer; that is what we have been satisfied with in the past, and we have accomplished only a fraction of what we ought to have done. If we are to come anyways near measuring up to the whole task of the church, the whole church must be brought to face that whole task in prayer. The power of the church is lessened by every one who subtracts, or refuses to add the strength of his prayer to that of the rest of the church. And likewise the strength of the intercession is increased by every one who earnestly joins in voicing it. Numbers add nothing to the power of God, but numbers must be operated on by that divine power before they become willing instruments for the doing of God's will. Moreover, God has planned to give forth his power in response to human petitions and to exercise it by means of human agents, consequently the greater the number who implore God and present themselves before him as willing instruments, the greater the opportunity for the exercise of divine power. We shall never know what a mighty work God can accomplish through his church until every member of it shall be brought in humble submission to the Father's will, and in earnest intercession for the saving of men and the building of his church. Let us prove God by a church-wide response to this appeal for a day of prayer.

Not only is it important that the whole church shall be engaged in prayer, but that prayer shall be made earnestly and perseveringly. It was after earnest prayer that the place was shaken where the disciples were gathered together. Power comes to those who are in dead earnest. Moses was so desperately in earnest that he implored Jehovah to forgive the rebellious Israelites or else blot him out of the book of life. His prayer was answered and Israel was saved. It is not mere mumbled petitions and bloodless prayers that count; but the desire that is as strong as life and that will never let go, that gains the victory. There is often a display of earnestness that is shallow and soon subsides before any real sacrifice can be made. That avails nothing. It is staying power that tells, and that is what the disciples lacked when they besought Jesus to teach them to pray. Jesus spent whole nights in prayer, and when it seemed that his prayers would avail nothing, he steadfastly continued to pray. And that was the way he taught his disciples to pray—perseveringly. There was to be not merely the "asking" of petition, but the "seeking" of repetition and the "knocking" of persistence. Such prayer will both wield mightily the power of God and will sacrifice greatly for the purposes of God.

If this prayer is to be effective, it must be characterized by great faith, for that is the thing that gives prayer its power. It brings God near and makes his power real and active. The inability of human weakness is connected up with the all-sufficiency of divine strength. It is the spirit of utter dependence on God that makes for power. That was exemplified in the life of the Master when he said, "The words that I speak (and he included also the things which he did), I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." That spirit of divine dependence begets faith and enables us to accomplish things for God. It is "the prayer of faith" that counts; that is the only kind that it is worth while to offer. The admonition should come to each one who shares in this day of prayer: "Let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." There is a mountain of difficulty in the way of an adequate Home Mission offering at this time, and only a really believing prayer can do anything toward removing it. If we go to our knees fully expecting to find the situation unchanged when we rise, we might as well save our effort. And Jesus will say to us as we face the embarrassment of our failure, as he said to the disciples of his own day. "Because of your unbelief." That is the only way to explain it. In Christ nothing is impossible to him who believes. Jesus himself declared it: "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive." Faith is the secret for releasing the wonderful current of Almighty Announce list of subjects to be prayed for, allowing full time for prayer.

Hymn—"Shall I go an empty-handed?"

Power by which the humanly impossible is made possible.

Let us also bear in mind as we go to prayer, that it is important that the heart shall be cleansed and the life fully surrendered to God, for until this is done we cannot pray effectively for the salvation of souls and the building up of the church of Christ. "If I regard iniquity in mine heart the Lord will not hear me." It is when "we abide in him and his words abide in us," when we allow him to have his way with us and we ask "according to his will" that "he heareth us." He who will not surrender his own selfishness, has no business praying for a successful Home Mission offering. His prayer would be but mockery. May there be no mocking prayers go up for Home Missions, but prayers from sincere, contrite, surrendered hearts, remembering that "the prayer of a righteous man availeth much," and that "the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous and his ears are open unto their prayers." With these words in mind, "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." And surely this is a "time of need" that demands the seeking of divine help that the Home Mission situation may be saved from failure and the kingdom of our Lord advanced.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. Teeter's Sunday School lesson and Family Altar column, is omitted this week, to give extra space to Home Mission material. For the same reason Prof. Stuckey's Bible Study Department is omitted. Next week these and other departments will find their regular place.

The editor had the privilege recently of preaching for the church at West Alexandria, Ohio. At the morning service some new subscriptions to the Brethren Evangelist were received and at the evening service one confession of Christ was received. Brother Gorge W. Kinzie was scheduled to preach three evenings during the week following and on the next Sunday to preach the preparatory sermon and conduct communion service.

We are indebted to Brother Paul Miller, Home Mission Secretary, for supplying the immense amount of splendid Home Mission material in this Evangelist. We hope every subscriber gives it all a very careful reading. Then those who wish to extend its service would do well to hand their paper to some neighbor or friend who does not take it, and add a word of encouragement about giving to Home Missions. Then, to do double missionary service, call later and get their subscription to the paper that has meant so much to you.

From a personal communication recently received by the editor from Brother N. W. Jennings, pastor of the church at Turlock, California, we learn that he received two new adult members into his church the first Sunday in November. The following paragraph from his letter points to a fine spiritual attitude toward Christ and his service, and the reading of it may inspire others: "We are still in the battle with, and for, King Jesus, happy in our work and calling, which is the highest this side of heaven. And as we grow in years we feel the weight and tremendous responsibility of such a high calling. Thank God for the dynamic and power of Calvary. We need a supernatural power in these trying days. That promise is sweet to the believing soul: 'As thy days, so shall thy strength be.' Also the one: 'Lo I am with you alway.' If Jesus is with us on this restless changing sea of life, all heaven is with us."

Brother Sylvester Lowman, pastor of the church at Oakville, Indiana, reports a week of Bible Studies conducted by Dr. J. C. Beal in October, and says the people were greatly interested and much built up in the faith thereby. He speaks also of cooperation of singers from a nearby Church of the Brethren and of the fraternal spirit being built up between these two churches and the fellowship enjoyed on occasions. Brother Lowman is correct in his observation that small groups working together is the way for the eventual getting together of the two denominational bodies. And it might be further observed, and quite appropriately in this Home Mission number, that some of the most difficult of home mission problems will be on their way to a solution when the two groups of Dunkers begin in real earnest to work together in every community where there are members of both groups and will make no practical distinction in membership. That will do a lot toward stopping the loss of isolated and migrant members.

An interesting circular letter from "The Tabers" in France was received by the editor, and while many other friends of these missionaries-in-preparation have received a copy of this epistle it is manifestly impossible that all the readers of The Evangelist should receive a copy. Besides it is impossible to reproduce it in these pages at this time. But there are two items of special interest that we will pass on. Mrs. Taber writes concerning her husband, Rev. Floyd Taber, who is studying medicine in Paris: "School work has been going along nicely, and the Lord saw fit to help Floyd to pass all the examinations of the third year successfully. We certainly thank you all whose prayers were mingled with our own in his behalf." And concerning herself she says: "Then in July the Lord seemed to lead very definitely, and I went to school at the 'Alliance Francaise', for the first time in over five years. So the tables were turned, and daddy became chief cook, child's nurse, and house maid. Here again the Lord blessed in permitting me to get the Superior Diploma at the end of July." It certainly took determination and consecration to keep steadfastly at work during the exceedingly hot and oppressive month of July. But that is the kind of material our missionaries are made of. Brother and Sister Taber and their three children are enjoying good health. Brother Taber's medical work began again in November and in the midst of his studies he is frequently engaged in preaching.

HOME MISSION SUPPORT THE CHALLENGE OF THE CHURCH

What Home Missions Mean to the Church

By Robert F. Porte, Th.D.

The Home Mission program seems to have lost its adventure and heroic character and therefore does not challenge our people. We have forgotten the sacrifices and heroism of the missionary pastors who planted our churches in various parts of our nation. We do not know their weeks of separation from home and loved ones, the sickness contracted by exposure and improper sanitary conditions. We do not know the missionary spirit of the church in Antioch (Acts 11) whose members were anxious to tell their neighbors of their faith in Christ. This spirit to tell of the faith found to be precious, to testify to the salvation in Christ found in the apostolic church and in the early Brethren Church, is the secret of our evangelistic achievements. The early Brethren refused to neglect their isolated Brethren. They sought to encourage their faith because they themselves believed that this faith was that of Christ. They could say with St. Paul, "The love of Christ constraineth us" (2 Cor. 5:14).

Key to Early Expansion

The establishment of a Brethren church in Colonial days and in the Civil War days rested on the principle that the faith of Christ demanded sacrifice of self on God's altar. The fire that burned that sacrifice was brotherly love. Home Mission endeavor became a pastoring of isolated Brethren and the evangelization of unchurched and unsaved people. Brotherly love was the cement which held together the various individual members of the church. Brotherly love became the element of solidarity and power in the church. With this power vitalized by the Spirit of God the church was able to meet the most discouraging national crises. If the Brethren people today will offer to God a church group bound together with brotherly love and a passion to preach the Word and evangelize the unsaved about us, God will mightily bless and use us even in this day of national crisis. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one for another" (John 13:35). Successful Home Mission work begins in the Christian home where the faith is so precious that the children will want to cherish it no matter where they go, and then crystallizes in the missionary program of the congregation which unitedly sends forth pastors to shepherd the nation and nations.

The Special Ministry of the Brethren

One of the most insidious and pernicious enemies of Home Missions is the doctrine that any church will do because "we are all striving for the same goal." If your own church doctrine does not mean more to you than some other church doctrine then you will not become enthusiastic for any Christian doctrine. Social solidarity and morality rests upon the foundation that husbands have one wife and the wife one husband and each to love and cleave to the other as long as each shall live. A strong church rests upon a membership that is soundly convicted of the truth of its doctrine and will dare to preach it. I do not mean to be unkind to other churches when I am insisting upon conviction in the heart of every Christian on particular truth and attitude toward the truth as contained in God's Word. Every other church group, of which I know, and especially of the cults, centers its religious program around some particular idea drawn from the Bible. The Brethren Church has never emphasized any one doctrine, but seeks to present the whole system of Christian truth as given by God the Father and Christ the Son in the Holy Bible. I claim that the Brethren Church has a ministry to fulfill, which if neglected in these days of confusion, shall merit the judgment of God. Home Missions dare not stop.

Dr. R. F. Porte

Home Board Our Agent for Extension

The Home Mission Board is the greatest pastor in the brotherhood. There is no one parish in our brotherhood that has so large a constituency depending upon it for spiritual help as the Home Mission Board. The Divine program for the church is evangelistic and missionary. The Foreign Mission Board is one arm of the church that reaches out to the strange and needy people in other lands, the Home Mission Board is the other arm of the church that seeks to reach isolated members and shepherd them for the church and to evangelize and establish Brethren churches within the nation. The Home Mission Board represents you and me in our relation to isolated members of the Brethren Church. "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel" (1 Timothy 5:8). If the Brethren people are going to turn the spiritual care of our isolated members to other churches, then we may expect them to find a home where their spiritual food is to be found. The Home Mission Board is our organ of expressing our interest and care of our own Brethren. Now suppose you do not agree with every policy of the Mission Board because you do not understand it, and support your personality clashes with some member on the Mission Board, would you vote to turn over the care of our isolated members to other churches, and would you advise the Brethren to cease preaching our faith to all the world?

Its Program Most Challenging

The preaching function of the Brethren Church centers in the Home Board. Every pastor is a home missionary pastor insofar as he seeks to interest unsaved and unchurched people in his particular church. The Home Board does this work on a larger and more extensive scale. If Brethren preaching is good for the heathen, it is also good for the unsaved people of America. As long as there is an unsaved man or woman in America, preaching must continue. In the midst of extreme confusion, many in America are asking, "Hath God spoken?" What is to be the answer of the Brethren Church? The answer of the Brethren Church centers in the Home Mission Board. If the Brethren Church closes churches and fails to get back of a real evangelistic missionary program, it simply means that we have denied the faith of our fathers. The policy of our present Home Board is the most satisfactory, the most challenging program of missionary evangelism that we have ever had. Never has there been such searching out, visiting, preaching, as has been sponsored by the present Home Board. The Secretary of the Board has spent months away from home and family, driving thousands of miles, preaching hundreds of sermons and in dozens of localities, planning, praying, working day and night to promote a larger and better Home Missionary program for the Brethren Church. Brethren, can such sacrifice and such a program be estimated in terms of money?

Reflects Evangelistic Spirit of the Brotherhood

The attitude of the Brethren Church toward Home Missions is a test of our faith. Where should a church with a whole gospel program preach? Ask the cults where they are going to preach, and learn. The cults are preaching and claiming unshepherded Christians mostly. The conserving of these unshepherded people rests with the whole church. If your faith satisfies you, why not tell your neighbor? Here is another damaging evil which hinders Home Mission work, namely, the Christian who does not testify of his faith. Pastor, if your church is not evangelistic in spirit, if your members do not seek after their neighbors to bring them to Christ, they will have small concern about other people. The condition of the Home Mission Board reflects the spiritual and evangelistic condition of the brotherhood. If the cults can maintain an extensive mission program, so can we. There is little use of maintaining a denominational organization unless we consistently seek new people and new fields. We can conserve and evangelize if our people will catch the holy fire of missionary zeal to tell others in America of the preciousness of the Gospel of Christ. There is abundant reason to question the sincerity of the message of a denomination that neglects her Home Mission program. "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen" (1 John 4:20)? And how can Brethren love those in other lands if their souls do not travail for the people in America?

A Great Message, Yet Weak in Missions

The Brethren Church is one of the least known denominations because we maintain an entirely too weak Home Mission program. What a program we have! and what a message! and yet we have curtailed the preaching of this message! We have allowed far less satisfactory messages to go unchallenged through our silence and indifference. The Brethren people are feeding the babies in South America and in Africa and letting the mother

What Immediate Success of HOME MISSIONS Means to the College and Seminary

By Dr. Kenneth M. Monroe

The constitution under which Ashland College now operates states in part thus: "The object of this corporation shall be to establish and maintain a College for promoting education, morality, religion and the fine arts and to secure to its members and patrons the advantages of education in all departments of learning and knowledge. The training of suitable men for the ministry of the Gospel shall always be sacredly regarded as one of the main objects of this institution."

The early records pertaining to the College clearly indicate the brotherhood had one idea projected to the front in their college thinking, namely, "to offer the advantages of higher education to the young people of the church". And, accordingly, for the first forty years of its existence the College grew as the church grew. However, about ten years ago a change took place which is still reflected in trend. The student body trend gradually has been upward from 150 to 300, but the Brethren proportion has gradually fallen from 50% to 20%.

The immediate success of the national and district Home Mission program should increase the Brethren proportion of our student body and thereby make easier the solution of many problems confronting our College.

The more churches we have the more young people there would be who naturally seek our denominational institution of higher learning. The College is interested in an ever increasing field from which to draw students. There are two ways to enlarge this field: Increase the size of existing churches and build new ones. Our Home Missionary program includes both.

Within the next five years our Seminary will probably graduate about twenty men. Only an extensive Home Mission program, over a period of years, although beginning now, will in any way adequately place these well prepared men within the borders of our brotherhood. Our National Board is endeavoring to aid the District Boards to catch a vision of opportunity and help them to broaden their frontiers.

Many of us would lose interest in both College and Seminary if no Brethren entered its portals for an education, for we have given our service to the church before giving it to either college or seminary. Because of interest in the training of our church people we hope for an increase of constituency in the church which will support our Ashland Institutions.

Two things may happen: first, the churches may increase their student and financial support of our school and, second, we may have more churches. We hope both will come to pass. The Home Mission program will help us especially in the latter and a general increase of loyalty on the part of every church to every Brethren interest will materially aid the former.

Dr. K. M. Monroe

If we would reap, we must sow. Thanksgiving is the sowing time for Home Missions. Let us sow our dollars that we may build new churches for the dissemination of the Gospel and the support of Brethren interests, including our College and Seminary. Ashland, Ohio.

of every member of the Brethren church as we approach the opportunity of this Thanksgiving offering.

The basic principle of responsibility is opportunity, and in the last book of the Bible the voice of Jehovah cries, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door."

This is the door of opportunity and no man can shut it. Today the door of opportunity is wide open to the Brethren church. Will we not as a people who stand for the whole truth enter this door gladly and with self-denial?

The Lord's first command is "Come", and his second is "Go", with the message of life to all the world beginning at Jerusalem.

God's first question to man was: "Adam, where art thou?" This is a personal question. His second question to man was: "Cain, where is thy brother?" This is a social question. May we all be able to realize the three fold application of Stewardship: 1st, The stewardship of grace which means the yielding of ourselves to him for salvation. 2nd, The stewardship of the Gospel which means the yielding of ourselves to him in service. 3rd, The stewardship of substance which means our recognition of his ownership by the title of our income.

May there be such cooperation as will make this a glorious Thanksgiving to our beloved church.

Fort Scott, Kansas.

HOME MISSIONS versus Homes Missing

By Mrs. L. G. Wood

(W. M. S. Representative on Home Mission Board)

From the standpoint of our Woman's Missionary Society, its history and program, and also from that of a wife of a home mission pastor, I must say that the great mission of the entire church is missions.

According to the Lord's own command, the Gospel message was to "begin at Jerusalem", therefore Jerusalem was to be the home base, from which the message was to go to the uttermost part of the earth. So our home mission enterprise is the home base from which is to go forth, the whole Gospel to the whole world.

As in the beginning, so also now, the Jerusalem of our home mission work occupied a most strategic position in our entire church program. Every feature of the work of our church is related to, and depending upon, the broadening of the home base by starting missions and establishing churches in the home land.

Our Home Mission program is the greatest means of conserving our "Whole Gospel Faith" that is available to the church. If we had a Brethren church in every city in the country, it would successfully stop a leak in our membership that would be astounding.

Without "Home Missions" we will have many "homes missing", the constructive elements of the Whole Gospel, and homes as well as individuals will become lost to our church.

There are not many Brethren homes that can remain such without personal contact with others of like faith.

The most lamentable statement in the Gospel of John is found in John 5:7, "Sir, I HAVE NO MAN, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool." This was the answer of the man who had been helpless for 38 years. Jesus had approached him with the question: "Wilt thou be made whole?" In his helpless condition, he answered: "SIR, I HAVE NO MAN" to help me. As far as our whole Gospel message is concerned, there are many cities, towns and communities, which today are saying: "Sir, I have no man."

Will not every member of the Brethren church do their best to supply that need in our home field. The nearest point to heaven that one can attain in this life, is the humble, faithful performance of the duty which lies next to you.

As the great Apostle caught the vision and cried out: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" then brought his entire life up level to that great question, and lived and died for its answer. So may this be the mind and heart

Responsibility of the Ministry to the Thanksgiving Offering

By A. B. Cover

One of the vital issues before the church today, is that of Home Missions. Any one who, meditating at all, will become aware of the pivotal relationship of Home Missions to every other interest of the church. Loyalty to this phase of the work will mean the growth and expansion of every other interest. Then it behooves us to ask ourselves some very pointed questions: "What am I doing to expand my church and thus broaden the interests that I profess to hold dear?" Pastor, what are "you" going to do this year to increase the offering of your church to Home Missions? Are we interested in keeping the Foreign Field supplied with workers and means? Are we interested that Ashland College and Seminary shall hold her place in the Educational World. Then we need to build more churches to supply both students, financial support and places for the outgoing graduates.

Do we care whether our Publishing interests are enabled to give us a literature commensurate to our needs? Do we have a concern for those who have labored and sacrificed for building the church that we profess to love? Reader and Pastor, ponder these questions prayerfully and carefully.

If we propose to give heed to the above questions; if we are concerned about the future of our church and her interests; then it will be necessary right now, this Thanksgiving time to see that our people are informed

The Handwriting

By R. Paul Miller, Sec

YEAR AFTER YEAR the Home Mission Board has been spreading the facts of where the Brethren Church has been drifting. Appeal after appeal has been made. Warning after warning has been given. In spite of it all, support for our National Home Missions has decreased to less than half of what it was. It was not half enough in the first place to be in keeping with the advances in other denominational enterprises which are wholly dependent upon vigorous and successful Home Missions. For all our churches combined to give the pitiable sum of $8,000 a year with which to build our entire future for the Brethren Church in America to insure the perpetuating of our educational and Foreign Mission enterprises is, enough to cover every Preacher and layman in the Brotherhood with humiliation. To turn such a tremendous work over to any Board chosen from among our own Brethren, and then to deliberately pull away from them, leaving them with so little support in such a manner is not to the credit of any people.

It is too late now for warnings. This approaching Thanksgiving Offering must be doubled to continue the work at all, and it must be trebled if we will go forward in any advance. The handwriting is on the wall for any who will read. It declares several things.

FIRST, WE ARE ALREADY GOING BACKWARD! Due to reduction in support we have been forced already to withdraw from two points. We have had to reduce another to half time service, and we must close another point in sixty days if some change is not forthcoming. We have been fighting with our backs to the wall trying to maintain a Home Mission Department worthy of the name and a credit to the Denomination. We have made reduction after reduction. We have made all manner of shifts trying to save what we have, but we can hold on no longer. We are compelled to let go. We have reduced allowances to our workers to the breaking point. Think of the Mission Board, YOUR MISSION BOARD, being compelled to reduce an intelligent and well trained worker giving full time service, to $250 per year! And our workers must face the standard of living in America, not in some foreign land. Further reduction cannot be made. The only next step is to close up the work! Our budget for this coming year was placed at nearly $2,000 above what we received from the churches last year, as essential to keep alive what we have, to say nothing of any advance. Failing to receive this can only result in the recall of more workers and the closing of more points.

SECOND, WE ARE ON THE VERGE OF CLOSING OUR OFFICE. For years our Board realized the need of something more than merely extending a little financial aid to a few struggling churches, leaving them to their own devices to succeed. Many were the regrettable failures due to this method, and much severe criticism was heaped upon the Board for it. The desire to have more funds for more small churches asking aid held the Board back for years from providing administration for its young churches.

Four years ago the Board decided that it was essential to give better protection to the investments of our people's gifts for Home Missions. That it was better to build fewer points at a time and take better care of them. A field secretary was chosen to travel among the mission points, hold revivals for them, aid them in their internal affairs, and reach and save isolated members of the Brethren Church to the faith. In view of the unequal and unsound measure of support that had for years been granted Home mission work, and in view of the closing of Brethren Churches at an alarming rate, and realizing that all this was leading to denominational suicide, it was decided to open an office, build up a large mailing list of Brethren Homes, launch a distinctive Home Missions magazine, and thus to thoroughly arouse the entire Brotherhood to the actual situation confronting our Denomination's future. Through much diligence and hard work, a mailing list of six thousand was built up, and each year each home has been reached with a personal letter information relative to the Home Mission needs. A magazine which we tried to make a credit to the denomination was established. A service of aid to help pastors and pastorless churches get together to prevent dying churches, was also established. A thorough and accurate study of our entire denominational position in America was made and the data filed. We then were just getting ready to make an intelligent advance. It is unfortunate that the worst depression in history should begin as these efforts for advance were started, thus making it doubly hard to carry this program on. Each year for three years have been reducing our administrative expenses. This year we were compelled to reduce our office secretary to the point where she could no longer carry on. We are hoping that we shall be able to find another as capable, to make the sacrifice.

Unless there is a real awakening among our people to the seriousness of the situation, the entire administrative structure thus so painstakingly built up, will have to be let away.

THIRD, CONTINUED REDUCTION OF HOME MISSIONS WILL SOON CLOSE OUR SEMINARY. We have prayed and worked hard for a grade "A" Seminary. This has been achieved. Quite a number of our finest young men have entered for training for the ministry. Those who are making our Seminary a success are doing so at great personal sacrifice. We have made strong pleas to our young men to enter the ministry. We have seven young men graduating next spring. What shall be done with them? Home Missions have been so greatly reduced that we have been unable to hold what we have, to say nothing of starting any new churches. If these young men are given churches, seven present pastors must be set aside. Some of these young men now have student pastorates. If they retain these, what will the Seminary do for its other students? If these young men go home and spread the word that after they have spent seven years of work preparing for the ministry there is no place for them in the Brethren Church, how many other young men will listen to the pleas of the Seminary for them to enter? Our young men entering the ministry must have vision. Without it they will fail. But vision is not enough. There is a very narrow minded and utterly impractical view of things to suggest that young zealots with unbounded enthusiasm can go out and establish churches right and left! It is one thing to have vision, but quite another to be able to carry it out. Many a man with a great vision has utterly failed because he had no means of carrying it through. Where would James Gribble have been with his vision for Ubangui-Chari if the folks at home had not stood by him through the hard days. How far would Dr.

Yoder have gone with his vision for South America if others had not stood back of him from the start? The strongest churches we have in America are the result of the vision of some one. Trace their history back to the beginning and you will find that they were only made possible because the man who had the vision was strongly supported by faithful individuals already dedicated to the work, or by some organization. To suppose that any enthusiastic young man with no money and no friends to back him, can plunge into a strange city and quickly bring forth a strong, self-supporting church, is a figment of unbridled imagination! Those of us who are in this work see this country dotted with examples of visions that have failed for no other reason than that they had no support! Our National Home Mission Board is the only organization founded by the Brethren Church to take our young men and stand by them in the building up of new churches everywhere there is a field. The sound thinkers, and wise builders of the Brethren Church will appreciate this fact and enlarge their support of National Home Missions! This situation we refer to is just eight months away. The seminary men graduate in May. What is to be done must be done quickly. It should have been done years ago, but the ministry nor the laity heeded our warnings. If the Thanksgiving Offering is doubled this year from what it was last year we will do our best yet to save this situation, but it is very late now. Any less of an offering will leave us unable to do anything at all. Cleveland, O., Washington, Penna., Detroit, Mich., Covington, Va., Altadena, Calif., all had to be given up three years ago due to the shrinkage in Home Mission support. How many of these could be revived now is a question. It is very evident that the Brethren Church lost some great opportunities in her Home Mission field simply through indifference. Now we need these points badly. Every reduction in Home Missions support helps to empty the Seminary. An empty Seminary closes the picture for the future of the Brethren Church.

FOURTH, CONTINUED REDUCTIONS IN HOME MISSIONS SUPPORT SOUNDS THE DEATH KNELL OF THE BRETHERN MINISTRY. The only department of our organized body with maintaining weak churches and opening new ones, is the Home Mission Board. Without its aid at critical points present weak churches will die faster, new churches will not appear, and the Brethren Ministry will swiftly fade. The stronger churches only will be able to continue for a while. The pastor who today is indifferent toward the appeal for Home Missions is but hastening the day when he may be walking the streets hunting the church that might have of the real situation and then ACT.

How many of the little Banks have you in your church? This is one of the most concrete ways, the writer thinks, to teach and stimulate giving to Home Missions. Thanksgiving time is set aside by General Conference for this offering; what are you doing in your congregation concerning it? District Officers, we the Home Board, will cooperate with you in any way we can, but you must not take Thanksgiving time to lift an offering. Again

Pastors, the interest of your congregation will not rise above your own; you are the key-man in the situation; we are asking you to aid us lift a larger offering than at any time before!

Oh, up go your hands! Give a larger offering in these depressing circumstances! Yes, if you people of the Brethren Church are interested in her future, you will be willing to make SACRIFICE to accomplish the work he meant for us to do. Of course, it will mean that you will have to balance the budget a bit. A few less luxuries, doing without some, that are usually considered necessary. The situation is serious and calls for devoted, consecrated, "give till it hurts", RESPONSE!

Now, dear brother, sister, if you have at heart the interests of the Brethren Church, we pray you, do not put this aside and say, well the brother puts it strong, is misguided, or lacks wisdom, but PRAY, then ACT. God put it upon the heart of your servant, and the Board representing Home Missions, YOUR BOARD, to look at this matter in its larger aspect; if we want to advance, we "must" support HOME MISSIONS.

OPENING Closed Church Doors

By C. C. Grisso

The writer of this brief article has always been deeply interested in the work of Home Missions. For the past eighteen years as a member of this board, whenever the opportunity came, from the pulpit and through the press and in conversation I have tried to represent its interests and have the churches under my care to get back of what it is endeavoring to accomplish. It is gratifying to know that there seems to be a new and growing interest throughout the brotherhood along the line of Home Missions. It was this that characterized our movement in the beginning. The advocates of our plea fifty years ago were enthusiastic Home Missionaries. They went into new fields where there were from one to a dozen members and preached the whole-gospel message and in many instances established churches. I now come to what I want to say in this brief message.

It is to our shame and discredit that many of these places that they strove so long and hard to open have been closed. We are told on good authority that we are closing churches faster than we are building new ones. What if this should continue in the years before us? For some of these there is no hope. The day of their opportunity is passed. But for others there still remains a possibility of restoring them to their place of other years. Some of these are appealing to our Board for help, and we are responding just as rapidly as the church will permit us. We shall not be able to meet every demand this year, but this is one of the tasks that I should like to set before us again and refresh our minds as to our opportunity and obligation along this line. This then is the plea we are setting forth, THE OPENING AGAIN OF OUR CLOSED CHURCHES AND THE LOCATING OF PASTORS IN THOSE THAT ARE NOW PASTORLESS. This should be a matter of grave concern. Why should we continue to enter new fields while we have scores of places with splendid buildings and a group of working members which with a little outside help financial and otherwise could soon be developed into a growing congregation. Until we do take this matter seriously, our statistical reports will continue to remain as in the past, the same from year to year. I should like to propose this slogan for us this year: "EVERY CLOSED CHURCH OPENED AND EVERY PASTORLESS CHURCH SUPPLIED."

It is lamentable that many churches are trying to "get along" without pastors. The evidence at hand is that it simply cannot be done. The very presence of the numbers of closed churches is a testimony that no church can live and grow without the "PREACHING OF THE WORD". Somehow, may the whole church be aroused to this condition before it is too late, to the extent that our means shall be employed, our influence used wherever possible, and the whole matter laid upon church leaders and officers, yes, upon every heart in such a fashion that every church shall be opened, AND EVERY PREACHER HAVE A PULPIT. The Home Mission Board is ready to help such a program.

It will take, however, the cooperation of the entire brotherhood to bring it to pass. As I view it, the situation demands an immediate response. Another year and it will be too late. We are told that we have young men ready for work. What greater work could some of our larger churches do than to lay hold on some of these promising young men and send them into these fields with a guaranteed support? Yes, and what greater work could some of these young men do than to go with a great faith into these fields rather than waiting for a vacancy in a large church with a guaranteed salary?

Yes, we are willing to undertake, but there must be the means, together with the bearer of the message. The field is ready and the harvest is at our door. There must be an immediate and heroic response. Let us pray at this Thanksgiving time that men of conviction, educated in the school of Christ and who know him in the fullness of his suffering love shall heed the call. The time is short. Let us "work the works of him that sent us while it is day; for the night cometh."

HOME MISSIONS And Our Next Generation

By Frank G. Coleman

Each generation builds upon the achievement of the former generation. This is true whether they achieve for weal or woe. The founders of our beloved nation advanced upon the forbidding wilderness with their axes in one hand and their Bibles in the other, and laid a foundation upon which the succeeding generations could build with safety.

In the course of years we have become a lopsided people. We have reared a generation of mental giants but spiritual dwarfs. Our geniuses have unlocked the wonderful resources of this mighty land until its wealth exceeds the combined wealth of the other nations of earth.

If wealth and political power were the goal of our fathers then we reached it long ago. But the gold has become a canker that has eaten into our hearts. We are in trouble today. Want and misery stalks through our land. Babies are crying for bread, mothers are growing old and gray under the terrible strain, strong men look out upon the world with eyes widened by fear. Why? Need one tell you? We have forgotten our foundation. We have ignored the law of the plummet. We have built out of plumb, lopsided, top-heavy. Our bubble has burst.

Have we learned our lesson? Will we cease to lean upon the arm of flesh? Can we "spend our way back to prosperity"? Will the "Buy now plan" avail? Had we not better come back to first causes? If we do we will find that our decline set in when our paths led away from Christ and his Church.

Thanksgiving time is here again. What memories and recollections are awakened! What an ideal time to take our reckonings and finding our Pole-star steer a straight course back to the Father's House? If we as a nation come back it will be through prayer and consecration to the cause of Christ. If our progeny is not to go the "Way of Cain and in the gainsaying of Core" it will be because we set ourselves to the task of building Brethren churches for them. Home Missions is the answer! The Brethren Church is done unless it has a genuine revival in her giving to Home Mission work! Some of our churches can exist a while without a National Home Mission work, but not for long.

You are enjoying the blessing of salvation because of the Brethren Church. Your boy or girl will be Christian because you are willing to build now for their future. As far as we are concerned our individual needs are met by the present Church program, but dry rot will set in when we cease to extend our boundaries. Jesus said, "You go and LO I AM WITH YOU". His promised presence is only to the going Church.

Our children are coming after us. Will they find a going, spiritual Church bridging the raging torrent of moral and spiritual decay? Will they find a Brethren Church earnestly contending for the Faith? If so, we must arouse ourselves from this smug complacency into which we have settled and build a span of Brethren churches across the spiritual pitfalls along the path of unsuspecting youth through our Home Mission Program. The words of this poem illustrates the thing we are pleading for.

THE BRIDGE BUILDER

An old man traveling a lone highway
Came, in the evening cold and gray,
To a chasm vast, and deep, and wide.
He crossed in the twilight cold and dim
For the sullen stream held no fear for him,
And he turned when he reached the other side
And builded a bridge to span the tide.

"Old Man," said a fellow pilgrim near.
"You are wasting your time with your building here.
Your journey will end with the ending day;
You never again will pass this way,
You crossed the chasm deep and wide,
Why build a bridge at eventide?"

The builder raised his old gray head,
"Kind friend, there followeth after me," he said,
"A Youth whose feet must pass this way.
This sullen stream which meant naught to me
To that fair haired youth may a pitfall be.
He too, must cross in the twilight dim,
Sir, I am building this bridge for him."

HOME MISSIONS In the Great Commission

By Willis E. Ronk

The disciples were remade after Calvary and the Resurrection, and Christ set before them a great vision of a great task. The Gospel must be preached throughout the whole world. The glorious light of the Gospel must shine everywhere. The carrying out of that task is a direct command laid upon the shoulders of the disciples. . . . "and ye shall be witnesses unto me . . ." (Acts 1:8) If the disciples dimly understood that command as it was given, ere Pentecost, the light began to break, and on that day the great task was begun, according to command "in Jerusalem." The days which followed brought an increasing understanding of that vision, as the disciples moved to Samaria and to the borders of other lands. This is sometimes called the expanding vision, but it was the direct following of the command of Christ.

Rev. W. E. Ronk

Rev. F. G. Coleman

Beginning at HOME is the command (Luke 24:47; Acts 1:8) and from thence to all parts of the world. Far too often men have pulled this scripture apart and emphasized that part in which they were especially interested. Thus one may talk "FOREIGN MISSIONS," another "HOME MISSIONS" or "AFRICAN MISSIONS" or any other name which may be suggested. These names are good and useful PROVIDING we do not separate the command of Christ to any one. They are ALL under the command of Christ, who said, "—ye shall be my witnesses . . . unto the uttermost parts of the earth." But let us remember that the command is to begin at Jerusalem. This is the COMMAND to begin at home.

There was infinite wisdom in the command of Christ to begin at home. It was at Jerusalem that the form of trial had been conducted, that the crucifixion had taken place; it was at Jerusalem that he had been buried, and it was at Jerusalem that the disciples had forsaken him. It was here that these facts could be verified and consequently the message of the resurrection could not be denied. But beyond all of this there must be a center from which believers could be sent forth, so begin at home. As the Church at Jerusalem grew, it sent out an ever enlarging stream of missionaries to the uttermost parts of the earth, and as new centers developed, they in turn sent out other streams. Thus there was an ever increasing stream of men and women to all parts of the world.

The Brethren Church has sent out a splendid stream of men and women to other lands, and now we need to build more centers at home to send out an ever increasing stream to all parts of the world. It is only thus that we can completely fulfill that command to be witnesses unto the uttermost parts of the earth. Thanksgiving time is set apart as the time to receive our gifts for that part of the great command AT HOME. A great blessing would come to the Church, if every member would again read the entire book of the Acts, and pray about the great task of the Church.

The days of depression have brought more problems to the entire Church, but the Lord is faithful and will guide in the solution of these problems. He has not only commanded to GO but he has promised power for the task. "But ye shall receive power", and in the promise of this power may we go forth.

communion with the Almighty. He speaks to us by his word and Spirit. We show our devotion to him in gathering together with his children each Lord's Day, in the Mid-week Prayer Service and at the Family Altar.

The third of the fleet, "Partnership", brings to our mind the obligation to make his blessed truth known to others and how blessed it is to realize that we are co-workers together with him. Every part of God's work is important, no part should be neglected. (The Frontier will advance in the Home Mission Field if Partnership is recognized and practiced in the lives of individual Christians.)

Christ depends upon us to fulfill his Commission.

A fourth Ship very closely related to the other three is "Stewardship", which is a recognition of God's ownership of our personality, service and possessions.

WE SHOULD GIVE TO THE HOME MISSION WORK—

First, because it is a Duty.

Second, because it is a Privilege.

Third, because it brings blessings to others.

Fourth, because it is richly rewarded.

Fifth, because it honors God.

OUR GIVING SHOULD BE—

First, in a cheerful manner.

Second, by a systematic plan.

Third, with a liberal spirit.

Fourth, in loving gratitude.

Fifth, with a humble heart.

In view of these Bible truths may we be willing to assume a definite responsibility toward making the Thanksgiving Offering for Home Mission Work the largest in the History of the Brethren Church!

starve in America. If this policy continues, there may be two sweet little orphan Brethren groups in these two Foreign Mission points, while a few faithful Brethren in America will mourn the fallen glory of a great hope! The Foreign Mission program does not mean much when it comes from a church with the spirit of Laodicea. I am saying our faith and our message is insincere unless we show a different attitude toward the unevangelized people in America. I have faith to believe that the Brethren pastors and the Brethren people are going to do Home Mission work in their own localities and will also send out Home Missionaries to organize small groups of Brethren and build new churches. There is nothing to challenge or encourage our young ministers to dare to venture in Home Mission work when the Church is so indifferent and careless. Let the Brethren Church show our young men and women that we will back them to the last man and with our last dollar before we would let them fail and we will see new Brethren churches springing up all over the country!

Failure Due to Laodicean Attitude

The Brethren Church is not doing her full share toward the Christianizing of our increasing population unless we develop our Home Mission program. The reason so many Brethren churches have closed and died is because we have not been propagating our faith, we have

A Brief History of the Brethren Church-Polity

By the Rev. N. V. Leatherman

The business of the church from the beginning to the time of division was done at council meeting. This was practically the only other meeting the local church had aside from the regular stated worship meetings.

As to District meetings, they were sanctioned by the Standing Committee and Annual Meeting of 1856. We quote the Y. M. of 1866 more fully regarding District meetings:—We recommend that each state form itself into convenient district meetings. These meetings shall be formed by one or two representatives from each organized church, and we recommend that each church be represented in the district meeting, either by representatives or by letter. We think it best to hold those meetings in simplicity, and as much like the common council meetings as possible. A record of the district meetings may be kept but not published. They should endeavor to settle all questions of a local character. But those of a general character, or those that concern the brotherhood in general should be taken to the Annual Meeting. And all questions that cannot be settled at the district meetings, should be taken to the annual meeting. In taking questions from the district to the annual meeting, they should be correctly and carefully formed. And all queries from district meetings should be accompanied with an answer. But in case those meetings cannot agree upon any questions, then they shall be referred to the standing committee, and this shall form answers to the questions before they be read before the general council. And it is considered very desirable, and indeed necessary, that in all cases, in answering questions both in district and annual meetings, some Scripture authority, or reason, be given for the decision, though it should be done as briefly as possible.

No business can come before district meetings until it has passed through the church in which it originated. It is understood that any member falling under the council of the church, and being dissatisfied with the decision, may appeal, to the annual meeting by presenting a petition signed by a number of the members of the church. Nothing in this arrangement shall be so construed as to prevent any member from presenting himself before the standing committee of A. M. to offer anything that cannot be brought before it in the manner prescribed, and the committee shall hear his case, and dispose of it according to its judgment." We have quoted these minutes to show the origin, manner and purpose of district meetings. In them too, we see the relation of district meetings to annual meeting.

No consideration of the polity of the Brethren is complete without viewing the history of Annual Meeting. At this point we can hardly refrain from extensive quotation from the Brethren's Encyclopedia because of the excellent manner in which we are given the real information desired. Necessity demands brevity however, and we shall give in a few words the conclusions of Elder Henry Kurtz the compiler of this text.

He tells how the Brethren gathered this institution from their study of the Word, giving as references, Matthew 16:13-20; 18: 15-18; Acts 11:3; 15:1-35. This latter Scripture was generally read at annual meetings. He affirms it was an institution of the church from the very beginning. We quote him relative to his statement of facts concerning that memorable scene on Christmas day, December 25, 1723. "So then we have a record not only of the first church visit, the first meeting for public worship, the first baptism and the first love-feast, but also of the first council meeting, and in fact the first general council or yearly meeting ever held in this country . . ." At first there was no record kept of the proceedings of annual meeting, and hence for those earliest years our information is very meager. A few changes were introduced from time to time but in the main annual meeting as an institution of the church remained the same from the beginning. Elder Kurtz says, "The first people we know that assembled themselves together annually, and calling it "Yearly meeting" were the Friends or Quakers. Then he quotes in his book a very detailed program of procedure which originated with these people in 1666. Doubtless a more specific and accurate account of the origin of annual meeting is given in the words of Elder George Adam Martin reporting his consideration of a general synodical meeting of all German speaking Christians of Pennsylvania, which

Christian Endeavor and Home Missions

By Fred C. Vanator

Associate President of Brethren C. E. and the Society's Representative on the Home Mission Board

For many years our National Christian Endeavor Association has worked in the Home Mission Field, both in the matter of financial goals and workers, for every home mission pastor has been an ardent advocate of Christian Endeavor. The reason for this is that Christian Endeavor has played a large part in almost every minister's life. For the past few years the National Christian Endeavor Board has been endeavoring to find an objective with a real incentive for missionary giving in it. Last year we adopted a slogan which, we hope, will lead us into the field that will mean more than any yet attempted. Here it is:

Brethren Christian Endeavor ringing hurch xtension y our vangelism our national organized organized organized

Rev. F. C. Vanator

How well these phrases fit into the program of Home Missions may be readily seen by a careful study of their meaning.

For many years there has been a desire on the part of the Home Mission Board to make our Home Mission effort a work of Church Extension and Evangelism. The goal of our Christian Endeavor work parallels this thought in every way. Brethren Endeavorers are asked to help bring about church extension (a thing that is vital if we as a denomination would live), by Consecrated Evangelism. The great commission of Jesus says, "GO—EVANGELIZE." The thought behind our Christian Endeavor program issues upon the appeal of the unsaved TO US and we find it expressing itself in the words "COME—EVANGELIZE."

Never has the call rung out clearer to young people than it comes here. Young people have, in many cases, been neglected in the appeal for the Thanksgiving Offering, because we have forgotten that they may even be interested in such an objective. Now I am appealing to every Christian Endeavor society throughout the Brotherhood to make much of your meeting at Thanksgiving time. Why not have a REAL HOME MISSION SERVICE early Thanksgiving morning? Why not make a special Sacrifice Offering, aside from what you will give in your church Thanksgiving offering envelope? Consecrated Evangelism means more than touching the corners: it means through and through. This will not be a part of your National Program, but a bit of individual society consecration. Yet it hinges on two items found in your National Goals for the month of November, namely, "Stewardship instruction," and "Personally Witnessing for Christ." So many times we forget that "personally" witnessing for Christ" includes financial attitudes. Jesus said in a certain parable which he uttered, "You will have to give an account of your stewardship." This did not mean the older people alone, but it means everyone who lays claim to being a Christian.

So my appeal is to those who are Endeavorers; who really want the missionary impulse to be the central thought of Brethren Endeavor; who want to heed the call of the unsaved to "Come—Evangelize."

"COME—ENTHUSIASTICALLY" to the support of Home Missions.

prayer of a righteous man availeth much. James 5:16.

As we approach the Thanksgiving season when the Thanksgiving offering is taken for the work of the Home Mission Board of the Brethren Church, we should think of the responsibility God has placed on us, and thank him for the many blessings he has given us that others do not enjoy.

Let us show our thanks by returning to him a portion of our material blessings, in order that the great work the Brethren Church has undertaken might continue.

An Appeal from Our Kentucky Missionaries

A Challenge of the Needs at Krypton

By Miss Lyda Carter

Would that for just a moment I could throw upon the screen of your imagination a picture of thickly wooded, dew-besprinkled hills separated by tiny valleys down through which flow tinier streams into the Kentucky River! Would, then, that you could behold the people in their little homes along these creeks, and seeing, detect their great need of a Savior who lifts men out of sin and makes lives pure! Their preachers teach them little of God's love or plan of Salvation, and less still of the reality of fellowship with Christ, and the necessity of a transformed life which is separated from worldly things. Knowing nothing, therefore, of Jesus Christ in a personal, vital relationship, it is hard for most of them to accept him as such when he is presented to them.

But we have at present under our influence a group of young people which is both encouraging and inspiring. The opportunity is ours now. We must take it or lose it! By God's grace we will take it, for the time may be short. Now is the time for prayer, love, dogged labor which is discouragement-proof, and above all, a consecrated, obedient life on our part. The young people are friendly and filled with the enthusiasm of youth. They have attended services exceptionally well of late. Several are interested in gospel singing and music, and several have either revived or developed a desire and ability to participate in our various activities. God bless my boys and girls and their parents, and make this new interest and enthusiasm to flow in spiritual channels which thou alone canst create and guide!

Brethren, we covet your prayers that God may do this very thing.

church gave themselves to fervent prayer in his behalf. While they were yet praying God sent his angel and aroused Peter from sleep and led him out through the first and second ward of the prison. When he came to the iron gate it opened of its own accord and Peter was set free.

Today the Christian churches are confronting a great financial strain. The funds have been cut in half. Many Missions and churches have been closed. Workers have been called home, thus leaving lost souls to grope their way in the dark, crying no hope—no hope. There is no one to lead them to the light. Prayer is as effective today as it was in Peter's time. The effectual fervent

DON'T FORGET THE NEW FUND FOR EVANGELISM

The National Christian Endeavor, at Conference this year, decided that their field of endeavor would be evangelism. They voted their appropriation to the Home Mission work this year to Evangelism in new fields. Because of the tremendous need of increasing our work in America, and in view of the many new fields opening to us we have felt led to invite others to contribute to this fund as the Lord may lead them. Nothing will spread the Brethren faith swifter in these last days than capable, well planned and well supported evangelism in promising communities. Practically all our churches began with a big revival meeting. IF YOU DESIRE A PART OR ALL OF YOUR THANKSGIVING OFFERING TO GO TO THIS FUND, INDICATE IT ON YOUR ENVELOPE.

been standing almost still, satisfied to remain at Jerusalem and let Samaria go its own sweet way. Our pioneer fathers and mothers in the Brethren Church had something in religion that was precious, satisfying, and more Biblical than any other type of religion they knew and they liked to talk about it with their neighbors. If we have nothing better to offer the world than that which the world is now getting,—if that is the attitude of the Brethren Church, then why go on with any program? Why have a Brethren College, a Brethren Publishing House, and Brethren Foreign Missions? The failure of our Home Mission program is NOT due to the policies of the Board, or its personnel, or the cost of overhead, but to a Laodicean condition of our pastors and congregations. The challenge, the need, determines what we shall do and not individual caprice. We have lost our vision and materialism has dulled our ears to the voice of the great Commander Jesus Christ.—"Go ye into ALL the world" beginning at Jerusalem, then Samaria, then the uttermost part of the world.

Not Individualism but Cooperative Evangelism Needed

The task of establishing new churches rests with the Home Mission Board. Our Home Board has saved old established churches by exercising wise pastoral advice and leadership and then placing of aggress-sive pastoral leadership on the field. The church never goes forward as an individual or as an individual congregation. The modern idea of eccentric and ambitious preachers establishing "tabernacles" or "light-houses" in our cities is a condition that calls for as careful scrutiny of its authenticity and Biblical foundation as does the NRA and Hitler in Germany! No Christian institution lives off the life blood of another religious group. No Christian minister does the will of God by undermining the character and work of another minister. The truth is its own vindication and authority and needs only a faithful believer to proclaim it. Apostasy is indicated by the human limitation to center on a hobby and build the work of Christ on what the individual wants to do and likes to do. Evangelism and Home Mission work is very discouraging sometimes because it doesn't produce much personal glory but it is a blessed thing to simply do the Master's will and leave the results with him. Evangelism is always primary in mission work and education secondary. Educate a sinner and his heart is still the citadel of evil. The task of the church is to preach the Word and the Brethren Church is failing in this because her people have withheld support and refused to render their tithes and offerings unto the Lord. It is the business of every Christian to encourage preaching of the Word.

Shall We Support Home Missions?

The Brethren Church is now facing a critical condition and a most challenging situation. We lack the fire of the Holy Spirit. The Brethren people know their Bibles very well, her ministry is sound on the doctrines of the Word of God, but we lack the initiative to go forth to preach the faith once delivered unto the saints. We are too busy checking up on preachers and churches that differ from us. The Christian is characterized by the desire to tell what he has found and experienced. The Pharisee rests in the confidence of his theological certitude. Every soul who knew that he had contacted the Lord Jesus and received healing and blessing wanted to tell it to everybody. "Freely ye have received, freely give." The lop-sided mission program of the Brethren Church does not reflect any glory on our sanity and spiritual understanding. The question is not whether we shall support Home Missions, the question is whether we are going to obey the Master or do as we please. The Divine missionary program includes "all nations" not those to whom we may choose to send the Gospel. The true Christian is to be subordinate to those in authority, to unite his efforts with the program of the church he belongs to. Most any preacher can secure a following but such a leader falls into the warning of the Apostle Peter (2: 10). "But chiefly them that walk after the flesh, in the lusts of uncleanness, and despite government. Presumptuous are they, self-willed, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities." It takes a mighty good Christian to refrain from vaunting himself, rather submitting himself to the constituted leadership of his church. Brethren, let us be faithful to each other and support our Church program uniting in a great Home Mission program of reclaiming lost and isolated members and establishing new fields in which our well-trained young ministers may labor to the glory of God and Christ. been established had he zealously supported Home Missions when he had a church. Some are feeling this situation already.

We leave it to the reader to figure out the future of our College, Our Old Folks Home, and our Foreign Missionaries, with a shriveling work in American Home Missions! Closing churches do not support these interests. Every dollar given for Home Missions helps lay a foundation under every part of the Brethren Church. To neglect Home Missions is to imperil every gift to every other work!

The Brethren Church is going to write history in this Thanksgiving Offering one way or the other. We will either write 'Ishabod' (the glory has departed) over our door, or we shall mark an awakening that will presage the greatest era of progress the Brethren Church has ever seen! The Brethren Ministry is going to demonstrate their ability to rise to the occasion of a great crisis, turn back the tide and grasp the crown of victory from the grip of defeat!

The record will be written quickly now. Then we shall know. That is all!

A Brief History of the Brethren Church-Polity

was held January 12, 1742. He is quoted in Dr. Brumbaugh's history, page 477, giving an account of the work of Count Zinzendorf. "The Count himself was president, and for three days I heard queer and wonderful things there. After my return home I went to my superintendent, and said that I looked upon the Count's conferences as snares, for the purpose of bringing simple-minded and inexperienced converts back to infant baptism and church going, and of erecting the old Babel again. We consulted with each other what to do, and agreed to get ahead of the danger, as some Baptists had already been smitten with the vain doctrine, and to hold a yearly conference, or as we called it, a Great Assembly, and fixed at once a time and place. This is the beginning and foundation of the Great Assemblies of the Baptists".

From a report of a committee to A. M., 1866 we quote the following concerning the organization of annual meeting. "The bishops and elders of the church holding the annual meeting shall select from among the bishops present the standing committee. . . . The standing committee shall choose its own officers, and these shall be a moderator, two clerks and a door keeper." Standing committee officers were also the officers of the annual meeting.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

OAKVILLE, INDIANA

Want to let you know about some doings here. At National Conference we had asked Dr. J. C. Beal to come to the Oakville Brethren church for a week of Bible Conference. On October 23rd he came and for four days and seven nights he gave some wonderful Bible Studies and Bible Lectures. And how he did make the sacred page shine! Thank you, Dr. Beal, and hope we can have you again, if the Lord tarry.

It was nice weather all the week, but as always, when we begin to pour out to the people the word of God, the devil gets busy. Along came Hallowe'en—a silly time, you say. But the devil used it to hinder some in the attendance. The interest was fine among those that attended regularly. Believers were strengthened. On the last Sunday the Men's Chorus of the Buck Creek Church of the Brethren came to sing for us, and they really did sing the Gospel. These two churches visit one another quite often on special occasions. Praise the Lord for the fellowship. If we ever get together it will be by small groups working together and driving away the fears we have of one another. We have long held each other at arm's length.

On Monday evening following the week's Bible Conference we held our fall communion service. The attendance was not so large, but about normal. Some said it was one of the finest communions for a long time. Too many people who have their names on the rolls of our churches are not faithful to this ordinance. That is one of the reasons so many grow weak and sickly in their religious life. The auxiliaries of the church are functioning in a good way.

OUR CHALLENGE!

Home Missions present a tremendous challenge to the Brethren Church RIGHT NOW. Not one of our Denominational Interests can go forward or even maintain their present position without Home Missions. It Simply must have our support.

OUR AUTHORITY!

The Brethren Church was included in the command to "GO! TEACH! BAPTIZE!" Matthew 28:19, 20. The early church grew because she had three things: A MESSAGE, A PLAN, and A FIELD. The Brethren Church has all three.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY!

The Brethren Church has moved Scripturally in her missionary work. First in Brethren Centers, then in new fields in America, and on to other unoccupied fields in other lands. Our appeal comes just now for the work in the home land. We are responsible for fields in which we have already entered and also for other fields in which we have heard the Macedonian call.

Brother Whetstone, member of the Home Mission Board presents this challenge to

OUR FAITHFULNESS!

The task is not beyond our reach. The demands are not unreasonable. God has entrusted the Brethren Church with all the money she needs to carry out the task which He has assigned her. She dare not be unfaithful to her Home Mission responsibility. Let EVERY CONGREGATION give most GENEROUSLY this year.

OUR OPPORTUNITY!

Pastors, you are the KEY-MEN. Yours is the opportunity. You can INCREASE the offering in your congregation. We solicit your most LOYAL COOPERATION.

REMEMBER!

*That REDUCED offerings will cripple the work of the Brethren Church.
That INDIFFERENCE will hinder it.
That the lack of PRAYER will leave it powerless.
That CRITICISM can only multiply hardships.*

PLAYING by Ear*

At a farm meeting held recently in New England, a tall, lean, hawk-faced farmer was asked what he thought of President Roosevelt. The farmer pulled his whiskers for a moment and then answered in six words, "I think he plays by ear."

It would be difficult for anyone to say more in fewer words, not only about the present ruler of the United States, but about the whole philosophy of modern political and economic science. It has no fixed standards to guide. It strikes one note experimentally, and if the outcome is sour (as it generally is) another is tried. Man progresses painfully by what is called the "trial and error" method. And sometimes he goes back instead of forward. If you often wonder what is wrong in the world, try to imagine what would happen if the Philadelphia Orchestra tried to give a concert without any musical score for either players or director. Not even the genius of Stokowski could bring symphony out of such a situation. "Playing by ear" may be the best that man can do, without God, but such a method is only a crutch.

It will not always be so. When the Son of God takes charge of human affairs, he will not play by ear. Of him the prophet Isaiah writes, "He will not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth" (11:3-4). He will not rule by experiment, but according to fixed standards of divine wisdom. In his days we shall have harmony.

UNTO the End shall be War*

Twenty-four centuries ago, in the first year of Darius the Mede, an angel was sent from heaven to outline to Daniel the whole history of his people down to the end of the present age. The entire period from the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 A. D. to the Second Coming of Christ is passed over with one laconic statement—"Unto the end shall be war." (Dan. 9:26)

One has only to read the record of these centuries, as written in the books of men, to find confirmation of the angelic prophecy. The main theme is "war." And the astonishing thing is that with the advance of civilization war becomes worse in both character and scope. In the last war, with one gun more ammunition was discharged than in the whole battle of Waterloo. Periods of peace have been thus far only breathing space for preparation for the next war. At times the ideal of world peace grips the minds of our best men, but always the ideal turns out to be a mirage of the desert. It eludes our grasp. Just now, especially, the ideal is swiftly fading out of sight. Instead of "peace flowing down like a river," men find themselves still struggling across the burning sands of materialism, suspicion, repudiated promises, materialistic selfishness and the philosophy of force, bearing wearily the ever-growing and nearly intolerable burden inherited from past and future wars.

The ambassadors weep bitterly, and the idealists become cynical as they face realities. Here is what some are saying:

WALTER Lippman Advises Us

This noted publicist and scholar says: "We live in a world in which wars involving the great powers have to be considered frankly as real possibilities. That wars are possible both in Asia and Europe no one will deny. In formulating an American policy we must hope for the best. But we must be fully prepared for the worst."

He further points out that in the event of another world war, a neutral position for America will be impossible unless we come to some understanding with Great Britain before war breaks out. In other words, Mr. Lippman, who for years has been a great champion for international agreements, admits frankly their failure and advises the United States to unite with England and other English speaking countries for our own protection when the storm breaks.

HENRY Morgenthau Speaks

"War in Europe in 1934 seems to be inevitable," he says. "It is foreshadowed by signs ominously similar to those which were clearly visible in Europe in 1913."

A FAMOUS Correspondent Speaks

Karl H. Von Wiegand writes from Geneva, the home of the League of Nations, "In the twelve years I have been coming to Geneva, I have never seen the League of Nations so deeply in the grip of paralyzing fear, so helpless in the face of a looming crisis, and so utterly leaderless."

A CHINESE Statesman Speaks

Dr. Kellington Koo, chief delegate from China to the League of Nations Assembly, says, "All signs in the Far East indicate a major conflict within a few years."

A GERMAN Philosopher Speaks

Oswald Spengler, writer of the most sensational philosophy of history of modern times, has recently written another book which all Germany is reading. We are perhaps on the eve of another World War, says Spengler. In the struggle that looms ahead, only the warrior spirit will prevail. The world at present is being ruled by fools and cowards. The race will in the future be to the swift and the battle to the strong. The late world war was only the beginning. Nations that expect to survive the coming conflict must be prepared. Spengler warns the Nazis that mere "Hurrahs" will not suffice. Let German women breed warriors for the coming ordeal and glory in that service. Brute force will speak the final word in the coming remodeling of the world.

Spengler's book has become the most popular book in Germany. It is seen in every bookshop. Hitler has committed extracts to memory.

AN Eastern Expert Speaks

Frederick Moore, a correspondent of long experience, writes that war in Siberia is regarded by the best informed quarters in Washington as well within the range of possibility. There have already been secret concentrations of troops by both sides on an extensive scale. These preparations exceed in many ways those which preceded the Russian-Japanese war of 1904.

It is thought by some observers that the recent agreement reached between Roosevelt and Litvinoff was motivated to some extent by the desire to delay the beginning of this inevitable conflict. Russia is not ready yet, as she will be some day very soon. Japan will hesitate to attack now that relations have been once more established with the United States.

LITTLE Switzerland Prepares

Frightened by reports that Germany plans to strike at France through her territory, and recalling the tragedy of Belgium, Switzerland starts to refurnish her armies with rifles and up-to-date artillery. Sweden, Denmark and Norway are giving renewed attention to military training and equipment.

Joel described the approach of the end thus, "Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruninghooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong."

WHY All This Madness?

The pagans used to say that whom the gods would destroy they first made mad. For one explanation of this present world madness I return to an expression of the first writer quoted above, Mr. Walter Lippman.

He first pictures the situation in the following gloomy words: "The awful truth is that the peace of the world hangs in the balance. . . . This is in many ways a very dark moment in the history of mankind. Not for centuries has there been so much violence and disorder, such insecurity and so much hysterical despair in so many quarters of the globe."

But Mr. Lippman is a Stoic in his ethical philosophy. Despite the darkness, he is not afraid. He can say with Henley, "The menace of the years finds, and shall find me unafraid." And so he calls upon us to "never fear," voicing his conviction that the day will come when the democracies of the world will be able to say, "WE HAVE

Christianity Being Denatured in Germany

Christianity is having a real struggle to maintain itself in the domain of Adolf Hitler, who has set himself to build a united Germany of "one blood, one race, one religion and one family." By "one blood" he means German blood; by "one race" he means Aryans, all Jews are excluded; by "one religion" he means to have an emasculated, state-controlled form of Christianity that will be subservient to national ends; and by "one family" he means that the state shall be absolutely unified and no longer to have Bavarians, Prussians, or Saxons—only Germans, or to use his own words "citizens of a Spartan State where all are educated alike, where all must undergo physical training and the discipline of the army, where wealth or birth shall be of little account."

A Word Concerning Hitler Himself

This Hitler is an interesting character, though a great trouble maker, and it looks as though he had only begun his trouble-making. We have authentic information concerning him from his own story, a book originally printed in German and numbering 780 pages, as we are informed by Dr. Frederick Lynch, who in his review of the book says: "It has been translated into English and published by Houghton, Mifflin and Co. under the title: 'My Battle.' That is, 300 pages of it—less than half—have been published in this translation. It was evidently thought wise, either by the publishers, or by Hitler himself, to leave out many pages where his hatred of the Jews found virulent expression.

"The first part of the book gives his own story of his humble origin, his struggles as a member of the working class and of the dreams he began to entertain even in those days, of sometime welding together all the scattered and diverse German elements—including Austria also—into a homogeneous state." During the days of Germany's humiliation and struggle he has risen to power on a program of a unified Germany restored to her former military power. Democracy was not in his plan; just one man was to rule over unified Germany. "There must be," he says, "no majority making decisions, but merely a body of responsible persons, and the word 'council' will revert to its ancient meaning. Every man shall have councillors at his side, but the decisions shall be made by one man." Then remarks Dr. Lynch, "This is the program by which Hitler has captured the German people—the promise of power, plenty and happiness, of unity and oneness of race and social standing, of a place in the sun both as an imperialistic giant and commercial power.

"Hitler gives vent to his hatred of the Jews in many vitriolic passages of this translation, although, as I said, the worst passages in the original are omitted. At first his hatred of the Jews seems to have come from his identification of the Jews with Communism. To be sure, most leaders of Communism are Jews—in New York practically the rank and file are also Jews—but all Jews are not Communists. But Hitler is not a man of logic but of sudden notions and impulses. Then he became convinced that the Jews were tied up with all sorts of vice, indecency in the theatres and elsewhere, and with slyer practices in the professions and business, and that they held to a philosophy of materialism, having no Gods but money and pleasure. Some of the utterances on these subjects are really the most terrible things that have ever been said against the Jews. But one gathers from his book that at present his determination to rid Germany of the Jews is simply part of his scheme to make a nation of only one blood, one race, one religion and one family."

The Church Whipped in Line

That gives us the background that will help us understand the trouble he is causing the church in Germany. He conceives his authority to extend over the church as well as over other departments of life that may contribute to his end. So he tells the churches that they are to exclude non-Aryans from their membership and most especially from the ministry. And it is estimated that there are some four millions of Semitic Christians in Germany. The demand is also made that the ministry shall support the Hitler regime without mental reservation and shall take orders from his own appointed church leadership. The aim is to do away with denominations and to have only "German Christians". And some of these "German Christian" leaders have been pronouncing some very disturbing dictums. At a recent meeting held in Berlin, Dr. Reinhold Krause, chief of the Berlin section of Hitler's "German Christians", declared among other things that "the crucifix is to be discarded. Everything that sprang from the alien spirit must be removed from the German people's church. The holy places of Palestine must not be visited, but instead, those in Germany. The Old Testament must be excluded and palpably misrepresenting or superstitious reports of the New Testament stricken out. In the German church, men of alien blood have no place—either on or under the pulpit." It must be said in fairness, however, that some of these statements brought forth such harsh criticism that Hitler considered it wise to remove Krause from his office. Nevertheless the supreme church council was present when the speech was made and offered no objection, and it was only in response to popular demand that action was taken. So it is evident that the lead of the Hitler churchmen is away from the true Gospel message in more ways than one.

The Living Church quotes one R. J. C. Gutteridge writing in "Theology" (November issue), the leading theological periodical of the Church of England, after spending five months in Germany studying the church situation: "Above all, it is ominous how seldom there is in the writing and speeches of the leading 'German Christians' any stress laid upon sin, repentance, and salvation, as compared with the vociferous emphasis placed upon Blood, Nation, and People. ... The 'German Christians' glorification of Volk, Nation and Blut has the grave danger that God will be overshadowed or else principally conceived and worshipped in his relationship to the above realities, and it can scarcely be denied that the Reformation for which the 'German Christian' is so passionately striving is at times unfortunately presented as coming from the nation rather than from God. ... The danger is lest the 'German Christians' should cultivate a narrow form of Christianity; their very name suggests the possibility of this." He is too mild in his expression—"narrow form of Christianity"—it will be no Christianity at all if it develops along the lines above suggested. Yet that is what Hitler has whipped the majority of the church into accepting.

Karl Barth's "I Say No"

Not all the German Christians have supinely submitted, however, to this Nazi effort to denature Christianity. There are some who cannot be intimidated because they have strong convictions. Outstanding among the opposition was Karl Barth, the most noted and zealous defender of a conservative Christian faith in Germany. His manifesto is "I Say No," and he expresses the determined attitude of three thousand German pastors, who have signed the Covenant asserting the rights of conscience in religion. The Barthian declaration is inspired not by social or political opinions. As The Manchester Guardian suggests, he is not concerned with the left or the right, with revolution or counter-revolution, or with politics, but with the claim of the State to the right to dominate in religion. The church has a right to determine its own leadership and authority, so far as human decrees go; even the outward organization "must arise from the inner needs of ecclesiastical existence, and from obedience to the Word of God, or else it is no ecclesiastical reform." It is inspiring to hear him challenge the proposed doctrine that church membership be confined to Christians of Aryan race:

"What I have to say on the subject is simple—I say No, without reservation or qualification, to the letter and to the spirit of the doctrine. In my opinion this doctrine has no right of asylum in the Evangelical Church. In my opinion the end of the Evangelical Church would have come if this doctrine were to achieve the exclusive preponderance the 'German Christians' wish it to achieve. In my opinion it would be better if the Evangelical Church were reduced to the smallest handful, and were to go into the catacombs rather than conclude even a distant peace with this doctrine. I look upon those who have accepted this doctrine either as seducers or seduced."

Barth goes on to say: "It is not the business of the church to serve mankind or the German people; it is the business of the church to serve the Word of God alone. The church does not believe in any particular state, such as the German state, or any particular kind of state, such as the National Socialist State." The church "proclaims the Gospel in all the realms of the world; she preaches it in the Third Realm as well as any other, but not under the Third Realm and not in the spirit of the Third Realm." Very definitely he concludes:

"The doctrine of the church cannot be determined by this or that situation or period or political creed not even by the National Socialist creed, but only by 'the behests of Holy Writ.' Membership of the church is determined not by blood and therefore not by race, but by the Holy Ghost and by baptism. If the German Evangelical church were to exclude Jews who have adopted the Christian faith, or were to treat them as Christians of an inferior kind, it would have ceased to be a Christian church."

It is not surprising that the whole Christian world is concerned

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother Bertram King, pastor of the church at Clay City, Indiana, writes about "An Ideal Christian Endeavor Society" on the Endeavor page and it will pay all our young people to read his splendid message. It is a high standard he sets, and that is what we would naturally expect of an ideal. And after we have set our ideal, we should continually be striving to attain unto it. That's what ideals are for.

On Sunday, November 19th, Dr. Charles A. Bame began an evangelistic campaign at Linwood, Maryland, where Brother J. L. Bowman is pastor. On the same date Brother R. Paul Miller began a campaign at Louisville, Ohio, where Brother A. E. Whitted is pastor. Also on that date the Louisville folks had their annual Homecoming services. From November 13 to 26 Brother R. I. Humberd was engaged in "Two Weeks of Prophecy and Evangelism" at the St. James church at Lydia, Maryland, where Brother W. S. Baker is pastor.

Dr. K. M. Monroe gives us some news from the Seminary this week, reporting, among other things, the growth of the library, having received recent additions from the libraries of Dr. Gnagey and the late Dr. Tombaugh. The seminary faculty members are usually kept quite busy with speaking engagements, as this report indicates. One of the engagements that will be in the process of being filled when this paper is being read is the Sunday School Institute to be held at Goshen, Indiana, where Prof. and Mrs. M. A. Stuckey and Prof. and Mrs. Monroe will be speakers over the Thanksgiving holidays.

The church at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, under the pastoral leadership of Brother William Schaffer, is pressing forward in the work of the Lord. Eight new members have been added since last report and others are now ready for baptism. The last communion service witnessed a record attendance. They are seeking to greatly enlarge their Home Mission offering. An "Institute of Evangelism" was held in their church under the district director of evangelism, Brother A. V. Kimmell. Among the new auxiliary organizations is a Junior Women's Missionary Society, a connecting link between the Senior S. M. M. and the W. M. S.

Brother C. H. Wakeman, pastor of the church at Cumberland, Maryland, reports a successful meeting recently closed under the evangelistic leadership of Dr. W. S. Bell. The visible results were seventeen received into the church by baptism and five by letter. The interest developed in the meetings and the packed church would seem to indicate not only general appreciation of the strong preaching of Brother Bell, but also a big field for the Brethren cause at that place. It is to be regretted that it is impossible at present to provide this mission church with an adequate house of worship. This is another evidence of the importance of greater attention being given to Home Mission support.

"The Roanoke, Virginia, church is doing its best to have the Home Mission offering materially increased this year," writes Brother W. V. Findley, one of the staunch laymen of that enthusiastic church, of which Brother H. W. Koontz is pastor. In a communication that reached us too late for comment in last week's paper, he says, "We are advertising it in the church calendar, mentioning it in the Sunday school and church, and praying for it." Then he makes mention of a splendid talk given at a recent morning service by Mrs. Dewey Murray, a copy of which talk we are privileged to publish in the Mission department this week. It might be thought by some that a church like Roanoke, with a $21,000 church building debt on its hands, would feel excused from making any special effort toward a general Home Mission offering, but not so with this church. In fact it is hoped by some of their members that they "will be able nearly to treble last year's offering."

President Jacobs tells us in his news letter this week, that the total enrollment of Ashland College is now 400, including all classes of students, the total regular students being 268. This is a slight decline under last year, but with financial conditions as they are, it would seem to be a creditable record nevertheless. Such a situation, however, need not continue to exist, that is, a decline is not inevitable at such times as these, if only pastors and other church leaders everywhere will make a real effort to search out the young people who are candidates for a college education and urge them to come to Ashland, the best place for every Brethren student to get his higher education. The slogan launched last June ought to be continued and used with increasing persistence—"A Brethren Student from Every Brethren Church." Some of our churches are well represented at Ashland College, but some are not and have not been for years. There is only one way to keep our college a Brethren college in very truth, and that is by filling it with Brethren students.

Brother W. H. Schaffer, Secretary of the Pennsylvania District Conference, gives us a report of their October meeting at Berlin, which was quite a successful conference both from the standpoint of attendance and interest developed by their program. Aside from the splendid addresses and sermons, the outstanding conference actions were the plans made for the promotion of evangelism and boys' work in support of the plans of General Conference. Brother A. V. Kimmell is the district director of evangelism and the committee on boys' work consists of Brethren George H. Jones, N. V. Leatherman and W. A. Steffler. The 1934 conference is to be held in the First church of Philadelphia of which Brother Kimmell is pastor and the new moderator is Brother W. C. Benschoff. His assistant is Brother Floyd Sibert. Brother Schaffer was re-elected secretary and the conference may be assured that their meetings will be well advertised under his secretarial leadership. He believes in making use of the public press, which he did to good effect during the late conference. Not only the papers of Berlin, but those of Johnstown and Philadelphia and Pittsburgh as well, carried long columns of reports concerning the Brethren meeting at Berlin. He remarked in a communication that he believed a Whole Gospel church ought to be publishing abroad its work and messages, and that he finds the papers ready to cooperate. We believe he is right. We have been too reticent about making use of the public press and telling to the world what Brethren people stand for. We have not been good propagandists. We need to take a lesson along that line from some of the "isms", which are continually filling the papers with stories that play up their cause. There is much space to be had if we will but seek it and do it in the right way.

The Doctrine of the HOLY SPIRIT

Spirit Characterized Its Activities
Its Human Motivation
The Spirit's Presence

By Florence N. Gribble, M. D.

The doctrine of the Holy Spirit is one of the most profound doctrines of the Holy Scriptures. God himself is Spirit. We read in John 4:24: "God is Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in Spirit and in truth." Conversely since God himself is Spirit, the Spirit is God.

Again the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of Jesus Christ. He is the Spirit who animated our Lord Jesus when in the flesh. He is the Spirit bequeathed by him to us. In John 3:34 we read, "For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him."

Again the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of the Father. In Romans 8:11 we read, "But if the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Who raised up Jesus from the dead if not God the Father? Thus the Word gives us the relation of the Holy Spirit to the Trinity. It reveals to us the wonderful fact that God was justified in the Spirit. For he who was manifest in the flesh, even our Lord Jesus, must needs be justified in the Spirit, before he could be preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, and received up into glory.

Character of the Spirit

What is the character of the Holy Spirit? In Ephesians 4:4 we read, "There is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling." We who are the children of God may well rejoice that we are one body. How much more may we rejoice because of the one Spirit who should and does animate us. Not only is there one Spirit, but he is the same Spirit. 1 Corinthians 12:4 says, "Now there are diversities of gifts but the same Spirit". How animating to our life, how stimulating to our love, how comforting to our hearts to know that whatever may be our gifts, whether preaching or teaching or healing, they are all bestowed and vivified by the same Spirit.

Again the Spirit is not a temporal gift. Although his presence may be enjoyed in time, he shall continue with us throughout eternity. We find the proof of this in Hebrews 9:14. "How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." Behold him then, the one Spirit, the same Spirit, the eternal Spirit.

But his character would be incomplete were he not also the Spirit of life. As we read in Romans 8:2: "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." And so in admiration we behold him again, the one, same, eternal, Spirit of life. And there remains another element of his character to be portrayed before we shall realize the beauty, the symmetry and the power of his presence.

Over and over again, in John 14:17, 15:26, 16:13, etc. we find him spoken of as the Spirit of truth. There are deceiving spirits, there are spirits who lead astray, but the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Jesus Christ, the Spirit of the Father, the one, same eternal Spirit of life is always, invariably and eternally the Spirit of truth. With what confidence we may trust his leading, with what reliance we may confide ourselves to his fidelity!

The Spirit's Activities

Well may we believe that the Spirit who animates the Trinity and who possesses the wondrous character which the Word depicts will be replete with activities. Among these activities we may perhaps note first of all his descension. In John 1:32 we read "And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him." And this same Spirit bears witness. Without him we could not bear witness. Without him we could not have assurance. In 1 John 5:6 we read, "It is the Spirit that beareth witness because the Spirit is truth."

And then he endues with power. Of this we read in Acts 1:8. He also gives utterance, for on the day of Pentecost they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave utterance.

That Christian who realizes the burden of intercession rejoices in the fellowship of the Spirit. The missionary who knows the intensity of agonizing prayer for souls not yet born, or for the growth in grace of those who are but babes in Christ rejoice in the truth of Romans 8:26. "The Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered," and he who hungers and thirsts after the deep things of God and who seeks them perchance at times in vain, must rejoice that "the Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God."

What joy to know that the Spirit sanctifies! In 1 Peter 1:2 we read, "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." Indeed often my heart and doubtless yours, has plead for sanctification, not only of that heart which beats within, but of other hearts over whom we yearn. What joy to know that God hath from the beginning chosen not only my weak, faltering heart, but the hearts of those for whom tonight I agonize in prayer, unto salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth.

Again the Holy Spirit quickens. It is Christ who hath once suffered for sins. The just pouring out his soul for the unjust that he might bring us to God. It is Christ who was put to death in the flesh, but oh, glorious anti-thesis, it is he who was quickened by the Spirit! In our weakness, in our frailty, how we long for strength, and how we appreciate the prayer of the Apostle recorded in Ephesians 3:16 "That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man."

I am so glad that the Spirit speaks. He hath spoken to the churches. In Revelation 2:7, 11, 17, 29; Rev. 14:13; 22:17; Chap. 3:6, 13, 22, we may learn the voice of the Spirit. The Spirit and the bride are saying "Come". May we ever be so actuated by the Spirit and so at one with the bride, that our message shall not vary from the great, warm, gracious invitation "COME".

And then the Holy Spirit fills. With him we should be filled. We should claim his filling for others. We should not be satisfied until our prayers are answered for ourselves and others.

The Holy Spirit animates the Word, for in Eph. 6:17 we are enjoined to "take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

And then the Holy Spirit seals. It is wonderful that, as we read in Eph. 4:30, we are sealed by the Spirit of God. Christ's for all eternity! Sealed unto him by the eternal Spirit! What security could be greater? What safety more precious?

Christians Motivated by the Spirit

Not only must we consider the activities of the Spirit, but his reflex activities by which we ourselves are motivated. That is to say, activities through the Spirit. In Gal. 3:3 we see that we have the beginning of our activities in the Spirit. "Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?" If it is necessary to begin in the Spirit it must be also necessary to continue in him. And so we must stand fast. The child who begins by creeping learns soon to stand, and in time to stand fast. It might be in this manner that the Heavenly Father tenderly looks upon his newborn babes, who first having crept, next, (according to Phil. 1:17) have learned to stand, and then to walk in that same Spirit. In Gal. 5:16 we read, "Walk in the Spirit and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh." In Gal. 5:25, "if we live in the Spirit let us also walk in the Spirit." And so like the children mentioned above, having begun perhaps by creeping, we learn soon to stand and then to walk in the Spirit, and walking in him we now commence to live through him. But we must not only walk in him, but according to Romans 8:1, we must also walk after him.

We now have the picture of the Christian's activities. Beginning, standing, walking, living. And this picture would not be perfect without the last point, sowing. For after all the beginning might be more conducive to our own eternal welfare than to fruit bearing. Standing, walking and even living might be activities redounding to our own happiness and our own eternal life. But when we come to sowing to the Spirit we have the promise that we shall of the Spirit reap not only eternal life, life everlasting for ourselves, but also for others. Who would not live unto others? Who would not realize that every grain of seed sown shall redound to eternal life in the hearts of those who receive the truth?

If we would be thus victoriously successful in the Christian life and walk, we must learn to follow two injunctions. First we must refrain from quenching the Spirit, as we find in 1 Thess. 5:9, "Quench not the Spirit." How many times we quench him in little things. A day which has started in prayer ends in impatience. Or perhaps more often a day which has started in impatience ends in prayer, but alas, the prayer and the tears of repentance. Someone has said about the necessity of prayer before beginning the duties of the day, "Let us not tune the instrument after the orchestra performs, but before." To fail in private prayer is to quench the Spirit. And when we quench him, alas we do not sow to him, and when we do not sow to him, alas we do not gain the souls that we longed to see come to him.

Second—we must refrain from grieving the Holy Spirit. In Ephesians 4:30 we read, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

Presence of the Holy Spirit

In regard to the privilege of having the presence of the Holy Spirit, I find that his presence brings certain invariable results. First of all if we have his presence we have the very precious privilege for which every heart longs—access to God. In Eph. 2:18 we read, "For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father." To be excluded from his presence or to know that one whom we love has wandered from him, what pain! But to have access, an open door to his love, to his sympathy and to his fatherly affection can only come through the channel of the Holy Spirit.

And then too it is through him that we have fellowship. In Phil. 2:1 we read, "If any fellowship of the Spirit." You and I cannot have fellowship with each other or with God except through God's Holy Spirit. And so how we should covet more of his love and more of his presence in order that we may have more fellowship not only with him, but with one another.

Love is the greatest thing in the world. It is the greatest thing in heaven. In 1 Cor. 13 we read, "And now abideth faith, hope and love, these three, but the greatest of these is love." In John's first epistle we read, "God is love." Here below true love, divine love must be manifested and can be manifested only through the Spirit of God. There is a love of the flesh. The non-christian husband may truly love his wife. The non-christian father may truly love his children—all this as far as the love of the flesh is concerned. But to love divinely even our dearest, we must have the power and the presence of the Spirit of God. And certainly if this is true we must have the love of the Spirit of God in order to reach forth to the unlovely. May God grant it unto us that our love may be truly in the Spirit, an all inclusive love, including not only our own, but reaching forth unto the needs of the whole world.

But another result of the presence of the Spirit is found in the possession of his gifts. We read in 1 Cor. 12:4, "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." You may have one gift, I may have another, but God is not looking upon the gift which he himself has bestowed. He is looking upon the degree of the fulness of the Spirit with which we exercise these gifts. Are you a teacher? You can only be well pleasing to God as you teach in the Spirit. Are you a preacher? You can only please God as the power of the Spirit gives you utterance making you desire to please not only your hearers, but God. And so whatever may be your gift, only through the Spirit can you glorify him with it.

In Gal. 5:22-23, and in Eph. 5:9, we find a wonderful list of the fruits of the Spirit in our hearts and lives. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, against such there is no law." Do we possess these virtues? God be praised we do I believe as Christian workers possess them to some extent. And only as we possess them to an intense degree can we truly glorify him.

Where the Spirit is there is liberty. And it is only as we are filled with the Spirit of the Lord that we know the joy of this precious privilege. In 2 Cor. 3:17 we read, "And where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." Is your Spirit in bondage? Do you live in daily fear? Do dark clouds and shadows oppress you? Do circumstances depress you? More of his presence is your greatest need, for the Spirit of the Lord alone can liberate you

The Salt of the Earth

By J. S. C. Spickerman

When Jesus came into the world, it had well-nigh reached the limit of corruption. Judaism was cursed with dead formalism, hypocrisy and greed. The Greeks had passed their golden age of literature and art, but their culture could not save them from the depths of moral degradation. The stern virtues which had characterized the Romans in the early days of the republic had succumbed to the corrupting influences of wealth and luxury. Officials were corrupt. Human life was of little value. In some countries there were more slaves than freemen; and these slaves had no more rights than cattle. Licentiousness was shockingly common.

Into this putrid mass, Christ's disciples were sent as the salt of the earth. They had but little education. They had no political power. Most of them were not even citizens of the empire under which they lived. To the wise men of the world, their program seemed the limit of foolishness—proclaiming an obscure Jewish Carpenter, who died a criminal's death, as the Saviour of mankind from sin. But they faithfully witnessed for Jesus in the face of persecution, even to death. In the power of the Holy Spirit, their "foolish" Gospel proved to be the power of God unto salvation. National religions, entrenched in custom, literature, art and governmental authority, gave way to the simple story of the cross. Satan brought in heresies, yet in spite of them the Gospel was being spread to distant lands. Then came the evil day when an emperor, coveting the zeal, courage, devotion and self-control of the Christians for his empire, made Christianity the state religion. Other rulers did the same. Whole nations became nominally Christian at the command of kind or emperor. These new church members were not "new creatures in Christ." They still had the mind of the flesh. Neither the authority of governments nor the rites of the church could bring them up to the standard of Christ; instead, the standard of the church was lowered to meet that of the world. Then came the Dark Ages. The Reformation of the sixteenth century restored, in part, the teachings of Christ. Its greatest benefit was making the Bible available to all who wished to read it.

Today, after nearly five hundred years of Gospel light, mankind is in a desperate chaos and corruption. Materialism is rampant. Most of the people, from millionaires to day laborers, are intent on getting money and the things which it will buy. Capitalists have taken advantage of labor-saving inventions to increase their profits by reducing the number of employes. Therefore many people have been unable to buy the products of the farms, mines and factories. To secure revenue, the national government has legalized the sale of beer, and states and cities are licensing gambling and other vices. The Eighteenth Amendment, the fruit of many decades of agitation and education, is being scrapped. Some states are making divorce shamefully easy, and vice wide open, to draw business. Cigarette manufacturers have engaged in an extensive advertising propaganda, designed not merely to induce smokers to use certain brands in preference to others, but to lead all the young people to smoke. Papers and magazines which circulate in respectable homes print these advertisements. If their Christian subscribers in any considerable number had said, "Stop my subscription," and told the publishers why, it would have done much to check this evil, but it is too late now. Some papers which for a long time excluded these advertisements now print them. Will it be the same with beer advertisements, and whisky, after the Eighteenth Amendment is repealed? Salacious literature is being sown broadcast, and salacious and criminal picture shows operate in almost every city and village in the land, poisoning the minds of myriads of young people.

All these things are but symptoms of the growing spirit of materialism. God says that the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. 2 Corinthians 4:18. But men say that the substantial, worthwhile things are those which we can see, hear, touch, eat, drink, smoke, weigh, measure, buy and sell. The worst of it is that this prevailing materialism is in the churches as well as outside. Churches are deserted for worldly amusements, many of them impure and degrading. More church members are to be found in the shows than the churches on prayer meeting night, and even on Sunday night. Dances and lewd carnivals are patronized by professing Christians. Church members make money by unrighteous means—Sabbath breaking, selling vicious literature, conducting vicious amusements, selling beer, cheating, extortion, etc. The salt has lost its savor. Christians who are conformed to the world and living after the flesh can not lead unbelievers out of the bog of materialism. It would be the blind leading the blind. "If gold rust, what will iron do?"

Yet we are the salt that is to save society from corruption. To do this, we must be as nearly as possible one hundred per cent Christian. To be one hundred per cent Christian, we must be evangelistic. This is the great work to which Jesus commissioned his disciples. Matthew 28:19, 20; Mark 16:15; Luke 24:47, 48; John 20:21; Acts 1:8. We must lose no opportunity to witness for Christ by personal word, by helping to circulate the printed word, and by contributing to the support of those who are giving their time to the preaching of the Gospel, at home and abroad. To be successful in evangelism, we must preach the Gospel by our lives as well as our words. If we are in bondage to love of money, desire for unworthy pleasures, or evil appetites and passions, it will be useless for us to offer freedom to others. If our affections are set on the things of this world, how can we convince others that there is anything better?

For the grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men, instructing us, to the intent that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world; looking for the blessed hope and appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works. Titus 2:11-14.

DIVINE COMPANIONSHIP

Man is the greatest marvel in the universe. Not because his heart beats forty million times a year, driving the blood stream a distance of over sixty thousand miles in that time; not because of the wonderful mechanism of eye and ear; not because of his conquest over disease and the lengthening of human life; not because of the unique qualities of his mind, but because he may walk and talk with God—Selected.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

THOSE ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

Our local radio stations have given us access to the political speeches delivered in Philadelphia and New York prior to Election Day, November 7. Vigorous campaigns have been waged in both these cities and the inefficiencies of candidates, the evils of past performances by the group in office and the superior motives of all those named on ballots have been definitely alleged. Again the dear people have been summoned to save the nation or the commonwealth or the city.

A cynic would conclude, after listening to both sides, that no group is trustworthy. Those in office are charged with corruption and those demanding a change of official personnel with unworthy ambitions and incompetence. The "high brow" scorns the less-educated masses and the spokesmen for the crowds declare that the scholars are impractical. Few people remember the previous elections and very few realize the indifference of citizens to graft and corruption between the brief periods of election exposures. Out of the whole experience rises the conclusion that we get out of the mill, a grist that contains what we put in. A people's government is generally as good as they are.—The Lutheran.

LIQUOR ADS BANNED IN ALL DRY STATES

Repeal will not lift the ban on publication or display of liquor advertisements in newspapers or elsewhere in dry states, Attorney General Homer S. Cummings ruled October 26. Citing the Reed amendment, which forbids sending through the mails of any liquor advertisement addressed to a person or point within a dry state, the attorney general declared that this restriction will continue regardless of repeal because it rests on postal laws and not on the Eighteenth Amendment. Conviction under the amendment carries $1,000 in fines, six months in jail, or both.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

ARE YOU WITNESSING IN YOUR BUSINESS RELATIONS?

In the October, 1933, "Trumpeter," house organ of the American Stores, the president, Mr. Samuel Robinson, addresses readers of the magazine. We quote his stirring message:

To All Our People:

In these days we are hearing and reading a great deal about Codes for all kinds of business. If all people would keep the Ten Commandments, there would be very little necessity for any other Codes.

There has been a great deal of delay in getting Codes completed. To my mind, if all those working on the Codes had observed the Fourth Commandment, there would have been more progress made.

At a meeting I attended in Washington in June, one of the speakers announced a meeting to be held the following Sunday and gave the invitation to all who were present to attend it. I immediately stated that I for one would not attend it, but if they held it on any of the other six days of the week, I would be very glad to attend. As you know, we have been given one day in seven for rest, and most people have found that more can be accomplished by working six days a week rather than seven.

Although the Ten Commandments were given thousands of years ago, they are as suitable for the conduct of life today as they were when first written. Let us all try to order our lives according to the teaching contained in them. Samuel Robinson, President.—The Presbyterian.

THE SIXTY-CENT DOLLAR

Dr. Robert E. Speer recently drew the attention of our people to the fact that the dollar quotation has much to do with missions. In the world market the American dollar is worth around sixty cents. That means that a dollar which the Board of Foreign Missions sends out of the country into another currency immediately loses forty per cent of its buying power. That means that a missionary salary of $1,000 drops to $600, so far as its purchasing power goes in the foreign markets, where it will be spent for food, shelter, etc. That means that it takes $1,400,000 in gifts to put $1,000,000 on the field. When this fact is put beside the falling receipts to our board in dollars, one realizes that an emergency of major importance is facing us. If receipts fall off 25 per cent and the dollar falls off 40 per cent, then 65 per cent is clipped from our funds.—The Presbyterian.

THE DRAMA IN THE CHURCH

The drama started in the church. In ancient Greece the earliest plays were religious in character and the modern drama notoriously began with the miracle and morality plays which were acted in the cathedrals. In the French classic drama Racine chose the topics for his greatest plays from the Old Testament, as for example, Athalie and Esther. In recent years biblical incidents have been portrayed on the screen and in the regular theatre. Sometimes these productions have been worthy of their subjects and sometimes they have not. One of the best dramas of this character which we have seen in recent years is "Ecce Homo," a story of Onesimus, the runaway slave, written and published by Brother George W. Hall of Albany, Missouri. The author employs hexameter verse in most of the narrative and does it well. This is an excellent book for young people and for all who wish to utilize the drama in the church.—F. D. Kershner in Christian-Evangelist.

Christianity Being Denatured in Germany

about the outcome of this chaotic situation; so much is dependent on it. The two or three thousand dissenters—and the number is steadily growing—from the Hitler church program have been suppressed and forcibly silenced from expressing views contrary to the majority members of the National Synod. Such suppression, as the Bishop of Chichester remarks in his appeal to the "German Christians", is "a great shock to other churches, and to all Christians who stand for the free preaching of the Word of God and for the freedom of its preachers." And it is also a shock to know that Christian preachers must be deprived of their pulpits merely because they are Jews by birth or of Jewish descent. But before we condemn the "German Christians" too severely, it might do us good to ask ourselves how thoroughly free we ourselves are from race prejudice and other unchristian characteristics. This situation not only awakens our sympathy, but challenges both our faithfulness to the Word and our Christian charity.

Titus

Paul,

a servant of God,
and an apostle of Jesus Christ which God, who cannot lie,

promised before times eternal;
but in his own seasons manifested his word in the message, wherewith I was entrusted

To Titus

my child after a common faith:

Grace and peace

from

God the Father and

Jesus Christ the Saviour

(1:1-4)

Here, gentle readers, is a brilliant personal salutation! It is arranged in phrases for the sake of greater convenience and greater clarity. A cursory reading of the introduction to this letter will reveal the Divine Presence guiding the mind and wielding the pen of the greatest letter writer which the world has ever known.

Whose letters have out-lasted and out-witted those of the Roman prisoner? Whose lines have in any time since equaled the deep, broad, and ever-marvelous insight of the Great Apostle to the Gentiles? Whose paternal tenderness—and he was probably a father in early life—is better evinced in prose or poetry than that of this father of the first churches and spiritual adviser of babes in Christ? Ah! let the winds of heaven and the waves of the sea speak if they have an answer.

The Man Titus

Methinks Titus, probably Dr. Luke's brother, must have been a very trustworthy and reliable man. He was an intimate friend of St. Paul and was entrusted with delicate tasks and grave responsibilities. He was an arbiter in church disturbances and derelictions. How well he succeeded in the work is evidenced by the fact that the leonine tasks were again and again assigned to his hands. It required a resourceful, tactful, judicious, patient man to labor with carnal Corinthians and lying Cretans. Let us rise up and praise the name of Paul's "partner and fellow worker!" (2 Cor. 8:23). May his tribe increase! May all the Diotrophes' depart!

The Pauline Letter

Martin Luther, who always spoke with vigor and freedom, remarked thusly concerning the epistle at hand: "This is a short epistle, but yet such a quintessence of Christian doctrine, and composed in such a masterly manner, that it contains all that is needful for Christian knowledge and life." Here the great reformer is calling attention to the great dignity and admirably practical nature of the letter. It is a manual of pastoral advice. It certainly is not colorless, dead, dull or disinteresting. It is an excellent picture of the style of the aged missionary Paul.

The Organization Features

Church organization and administration are prominent in the forepart of the epistle of Titus. The church is enlarging, gifts of a special nature are passing, and proper overseers or bishops or elders are being appointed in the various congregations. The duties and qualifications of the bishop are positively and negatively enumerated. His home life must be right and in public and in private he must be "apt to teach." Modern "exhorting" elders should ponder the latter statement seriously. The bishop must also preach, exhort, and reprove.

Permit a word—a personal observation—concerning organization at this juncture. The New Testament recommends no final plans or forms of ecclesiastical organization. Half of the disputes over church polity in the modern church are due to one fact, namely, men forgot the meaning and intent of order. Order exists to promote godliness—to produce "the truth which is according to godliness." Others desire machinery that will produce a type of worship that will be minus revival enthusiasm—just anything so long as the forces of devilry and darkness are not too vigorously rebuked. Such was not the intent of the early apostolic order. It was designed to make the church the pillar and ground of the truth from which lightning flashes of truth would flash and rolling thunder would peal forth. When the church forgets to rebuke evil she may expect her influence to fade away silently, but none the less quite visibly.

Ruskin observes caustically in one place that the overseeing bishop ought to know if the athletic Bill of yonder alley is knocking Nancy's teeth down her throat, and if not, he wonders if the bishop is really a bishop, even if his chalices are golden and his miter be as high as the steeple. Were the incisive Ruskin alive today he would witness some modern bishops forsaking the back alley to view the delights of an up-to-date motion picture show featuring the fistic adventures of Popeye in some lonely desert or some indecent Mae West proving that she is "No Angl." The Bible tells us all we need to know about angels. Modern Hollywood has nothing to add.

The Doctrinal Declarations

The following excerpts taken variously from the epistle will illustrate its doctrinal soundness:

"Holding to the faithful word," 1:9.

"Rebuke them sharply that they may be sound in the faith." 1:13.

"Speak thou the things which befit sound doctrine." 2:1.

"Upprightness ... Sound Speech ... Doctrine of God." 2:7-10.

"Justified by grace ... hope of eternal life." 3:7.

The Prophetical Note

The advent of grace dawned with the first coming of Christ. The advent of glory will dawn with his second coming." Between the two appearances we stand. "The grace of God ... hath appeared." That is the first great fact of the twenty centuries just past. "Looking for that blessed hope." That will be the biggest event of future days. St. Paul held to and preached his prophetical revelations properly and persistently. These teachings help to "purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." (2:14b).

The Practical Advice

This epistle reveals God's ideal for the church and also for the individual. In practice the church is to be full of piety and given to philanthropic endeavor; in doctrine the church is to be sound in faith and in morals; in organization order is to prevail. On the other hand, the individual is to be sober and chaste in actions and in word; in doctrine he is to be alive and healthy in belief; in organization he is to love proper methods and regular order. Godliness makes good citizens; godliness precedes good works; godliness avoids "foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentious and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain. (3:9).

The Faithful Sayings

The famous five faithful sayings of St. Paul in the Pastoral Epistles will be set forth here. Humphreys summarizes them as follows:

1. Christ's coming—the way of sin's forgiveness. (1 Tim. 1:15).
2. Christ's ministry—the way of noble service. (1 Tim. 3:1).
3. Christ's life—the way of spiritual progress. (1 Tim. 4:9).
4. Christ's world—the way of honorable work. (Tit. 3:8).
5. Christ's strength—the way of successful suffering. (2 Tim. 2:11).

The Blessed Saviour

In a six-fold way the Saviour is mentioned in Titus' letter:

1. "Proclamation ... of God our Saviour. (1:3).
2. "Grace and peace ... from ... Christ Jesus our Saviour (1:4).
3. "Adorn in all things the doctrine of God our Saviour (2:10).
4. "Looking for ... the appearance of ... our Saviour (2:13).
5. "The kindness of God our Saviour (3:4).
6. "The Holy Ghost ... poured upon us ... through our Saviour (3:6).

WHAT KIND?—BIBLE DEPARTMENT

The editor of the Watchman-Examiner (Baptist) wrote in a recent issue of his paper: "Prof H. I. Hester, of William Jewel College, contributes an article for this number in which he discusses the place given to the Bible in the curricula of our Baptist colleges. Dr. Hester does not discuss the attitude which the teaching in our colleges take toward the Bible. That, however, is the crux of the whole matter. That many institutions have a Bible department does not mean that Christianity is strengthened by the department. That many students take Bible courses does not mean that these students love the Bible. It all depends on the kind of teaching that is given in these institutions. Better eliminate the department entirely than to have the faith of students destroyed as to the integrity and inspiration of the Bible. Better let the Bible stand undisturbed on a shelf in the library than to teach students that it is no different from other books and that its teaching concerning miracles is but folklore. Trustees of our colleges should realize that it is vastly more important that care should be taken in selecting teachers for the Bible departments than that the colleges should have the ablest teachers of Latin, Greek and mathematics. Parents should exercise the greatest care in selecting colleges which will not destroy the faith of their children in Bible Christianity."

The ugliest word and the ugliest thing in the world is selfishness. It is the seed plot of all the things that curse humanity today.—The Christian Evangelist.

"Saving Faith"

By Louis Matthews Sweet, D.D.

I have put the title of this brief article in quotation marks to signify that we are dealing with what should be a familiar phrase. But the phrase is old-fashioned and to many of the present generation far from familiar. To some it may have the sound of a cant phrase of former times. Upon closer examination, however, I am sure that whether or not we like the form of words, we shall find that that which is signified by it is too precious to be lost or forgotten. In putting its meaning into a single sentence, I should say, "Saving faith" expresses the deepest need and the greatest experience of human life."

We may begin with the word "saved." This, of course, the direct opposite of the word "lost," which is always in the background when we use the word "saved," or "saving."

Anything which saves, then, overcomes or reverses or undoes the condition expressed by the word "lost." For example, a man is attacked by a disease, the inevitable outcome of which, if it is left to run its course, is death. The patient is operated upon by a skillful surgeon and restored to health. We say of him: "The surgeon saved him. This person has been delivered from death otherwise inevitable." Take a far less serious case in which the same principle operates. A man faces the loss of his business or of his fortune or of both. Without help from some one, disaster is not only imminent but inevitable. A friend lends him money enough to enable him to go on. Here also we say that the man in trouble is saved from disaster.

Take another type of instance altogether. A youth goes, as we say, "to the bad." He is lost to his best self, to his family and friends, and to society. It will be seen at once that the word "lost" gathers new meaning when transferred from a merely physical to a moral state. A man is more completely lost morally than he possibly can be physically or financially. It is also true that the word "saved" means more in this case than in the others. To make a bad man good is to save him—to himself, to his family, to society.

When we take this same contrast between lost and saved over to the religious sphere, it gains still more of meaning and of value. Imagine a man without God, without belief in the Eternal Goodness, without hope, without knowledge of the good ways of life. In the old phrase which conveys truth this man is lost—lost until he is found, restored, saved. Back of the old-fashioned phrase "saving faith" is this great idea; the possible world-wide contrast in a man's condition between being lost—out of the way, hopeless, wandering, out-cast, stained and sinful—and being saved—enlightened, brought into the true way of light and hope and God.

What I have been trying to say is beautifully expressed by Paul when he speaks of the Father "who delivered us out of the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of his love." Here are the principles involved in the idea of salvation: something to be delivered from, something to be delivered unto, some power or agency of deliverance. From darkness to the Kingdom of love we are saved by the goodness of God, our Father.

The classic treatment of this contrast of "lost" and "saved" is found in the great parables of Luke recorded in the fifteenth chapter of Luke. I have always called these parables "The Trilogy of the Lost and the Saved" because, although there are three parables, they set forth one lesson and should always be treated together. They are the stories of the Lost Sheep, of the Lost Coin, and of the Lost Son. The refrain running through these three simple but incomparably beautiful little stories is, "I have found my own which was lost." The common idea which binds them all together is that being lost is being out of relationship. The three stories on one theme point, therefore, to God as the One who seeks and saves. To be normally human is to be in living relationship to God—to be kept, led, and held in fellowship by God.

To be lost is to be out of touch with God. To be saved is to be restored to his fellowship. But what has faith to do with all this? Absolutely everything! A coin may be restored to its owner without contributing anything to its own recovery; so also may a sheep; but not a son! To be saved we must respond to the "divine initiative." We must believe something. Above all, we must trust a great Some One who loves and saves. God alone can save, because God is salvation.

God in Christ saves, but God can save only those who will let him save them. So Paul says, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God who worketh in you both to will and to work, for his good pleasure."—The Westminster Uniform Lesson Teacher.

Planning a Year of Teachers' Meetings

By J. Elmer Russell

Bethel Sunday School planned a year of teachers' meetings or, to be more correct, a series of monthly meetings beginning in October and ending in April. The school had been having conventional teachers' meetings in which time was wasted talking over details of business that could have been handled more effectively by a committee with power to act. It is not necessary for an entire group to debate on the place for the Sunday school picnic or on which night in the week to have the Christmas festival.

All such matters can be taken care of by special committees. The Bethel Sunday School finally realized this, and in the fall of 1929 started out to plan its monthly programs.

These programs were made up into little booklets, carbon copies of the pages having been written on the typewriter. Each page is about 4 inches by 5 inches. The booklet has an orange-colored cover of heavier paper. The covers and the pages are perforated and tied together with string. On the title page there is a list of all the officers of the school. Opposite this title page is another page containing the words, "Go ... teach."

The October meeting began with a dinner. Following the dinner was a devotional service led by a young man, the Sunday school secretary, who had been away at a summer conference. Then there was read by one of the local group a paper on "The Teacher, Her Aim and Preparation." This was followed by an address on story-telling by a director of education.

At the November meeting a paper on "An Organized Class" was read by a local worker. Following was an address by one of the county Sunday school specialists. So it continued through the year. In most cases there were two papers or a paper and an address, with the opportunity for discussion following.

Too many Sunday schools live from hand to mouth. They do not plan ahead definitely. Bethel Sunday School is not a large Sunday school. What has been done there can be done by practically any Sunday school. In most communities it is possible once a month to get an outside speaker on some practical topic connected with the work of the school, and there is almost always ability within the school for a paper by some teacher or officer.—Selected.

Some people exalt their opinions into gods and fall down and worship them; whereas if they would examine their opinions as critically as they examine those of others, they would ridicule and scorn them rather than honor them. Can we not be as sensible with our own thoughts as with other people's?

Studying the SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON at the Family Altar By William S. Crick

THE EDITOR INTRODUCES

Rev. W. S. Crick, the New Writer

It is a real pleasure to have the privilege of introducing the pastor of the Fremont, Ohio, church as the new writer of the Sunday School and Family Altar department. Brother Crick has the ability to write and he knows how to prepare good copy, having been a newspaper correspondent in his earlier years. He keeps mentally and spiritually alive and he is worthy to lead us in our devotions. We have had him in mind for a long time for some such task as this and we feel ourselves fortunate to have enlisted him at this time. He will continue the policy, as his predecessors have for several years, of combining the study of the Sunday school lesson with the Family Altar guide. We hope many are finding this department helpful and are making regular use of it. Brother Crick's first installment follows.—THE EDITOR.

PAUL IN CAESAREA

(Lesson for Decemeber 10, 1933)

Lesson Text: Acts 21 to 26. Golden Text: Acts 24:16.

MONDAY

Paul Accused. Acts 24:1-9. The great missionary's career of "turning the world upside down" resulted in his making many personal enemies. These found opportunity to crystallize their hatred on the occasion of Paul's visit to the temple in Jerusalem. They sought to stampede civil authority, distort Jewish justice and mob their victim. Claudius Lysias called out the citadel guard from the Tower of Antonia, and rescued Paul. After noting he received no fair hearing before the Sanhedrin, he arranged for his safe and secret transfer to Caesarea for trial before the Roman Governor, Felix. Here, Ananias, the High Priest, and a silver tongued attorney, retained by influential Jews at Jerusalem, accused Paul of being a pestilent fellow, a mover of sedition, a ringleader of the sect of Nazarenes, and a temple profaner.

TUESDAY

Paul's Defense. Acts 24:10-23. Paul was himself a master in argumentation. He presented a convincing defense before the Governor. In it, he denied being a temple vandal, ignored the charge of sedition as being too ridiculous to require rebuttal, claimed his accusers had failed to prove their charges, but he proudly affirmed his connection with "The Way which they call heresy". He identified himself with the hope of the Pharisees in a resurrection, asserted his belief in the Law and the Prophets. He contended that he not only acted with a clear conscience, but that his visit to Jerusalem was prompted by unselfish motives. Politician that he was, Felix deferred judgment to gain popularity with his constituents, which resulted in another miscarriage of justice.

WEDNESDAY

Faith and Prayer in Trouble. Ps. 86:11-17. In this Psalm is heard the cry of one in direst trouble—it may be that Paul comforted his soul by meditating upon its petitions while imprisoned in Caesarea. "O God, the proud (insolent) have arisen against me, and assemblies of violent men (tyrants) have sought after my soul—and have not set thee before them! ... O turn unto me, and have mercy upon me, and give thy strength unto thy servant!" Herein is no petulant complaining, no spineless cowardice, no hinted defeat. "Give thy strength to thy servant", is echoed in St. Paul's letter "he will also make a way of escape that ye may be able to bear it" (1 Cor. 10:13). May we likewise pray in our times of testing, not for the scattering of the foe, but for the augmenting of our strength in the Lord, and "having done all, to stand!"

THURSDAY

Divine Help Assured. Mark 13:9-13. Like being born again before his due time, (1 Cor. 15:8), the Apostle Paul also experienced a foretaste of the persecutions which shall befall his race because of their testimony to the Gospel in the Tribulation days. Accordingly, the Apostle could claim the promise made by his Master: "Be not anxious beforehand what ye shall speak, neither premeditate ... for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost. ... Ye shall be hated of all men for my Name's sake; but he that shall endure to the end, the same shall be saved!" St. Paul did endure, and while he suffered martyrdom, he was given strength not to deny the Faith, and he "being dead, yet speaketh". Holy Spirit, help us never to lose our testimony! Give us strength to endure even unto the end!

FRIDAY

A Good Conscience. 1 Peter 3:1-18. Whatever of persecution and peril might eventuate, the erstwhile persecutor of the Way was determined that never again would he subject himself to the goading of his conscience. He boldly affirmed before Governor Felix: "Herein do I exercise myself, always to have a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men". That other fiery petrel of the apostle-missionary group, Simon Peter, likewise admonished: "Have a good conscience that evil doers may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation (conduct) in Christ". Denying the faith through conduct unbecoming a child of God, is rated with heresy in respect to doctrine in the code of New Testament ethics. Blessed Saviour, grant that we shall not be ashamed of thee at thy Coming!

SATURDAY

The Approval of the Conscience. 1 John 3:13-24. St. John asserts his high regard for the voice of conscience in these words: "Let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth ... For if our heart (conscience) condemn us, God is greater than our heart and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then we have confidence toward God!" A majority of Christians (?) these days need a condemning conscience which will drive them to the Heavenly Father in penitence and contrition. Then, "if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John 1:9). Whereupon, the conscience will cease its condemnation. O for a conscience that is unseared, so that, hearing its warnings, we may not be condemned along with the world!

SUNDAY

The Reign of Christ. Ps. 2:1-12. The denial or repudiation of God, as agitated by The American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, and their ilk, results in dethroning conscience, and the consequent licensing of evil. Denying responsibility to the Supreme Being subverts every code of ethics. How deserved will be the vengeance of him who now sitteth in the heavens, when his wrath (retributive justice) shall vex them in his sore displeasure! When the Coming king shall sit upon the holy hill Zion, his willing subjects will "serve the Lord with fear (reverential trust) and rejoice with trembling." We praise thee, O Lord, for thy promised reign in righteousness. May we even now, "exercise ourselves to have a conscience void of offense toward God and toward man" in keeping with our heavenly citizenship!

An Ideal Christian Endeavor Society

By W. Bertram King

Enthusiastic

Give me a society that has a goodly portion of enthusiasm which is more than but inclusive of "pep", eagerness, and jubilation. It must be a force. A force which, like an electric dynamo, sets a machine into action in order to produce something.

Congenial

The people in the society are grouped according to their interests and experiences. They meet together not alone because of agreement upon some doctrine, but because they are drawn together by common tastes, similar ideas, purposes, ideals, ambitions and desires. Their meetings are surcharged with mutual helpfulness and sympathetic appreciation one for the other. "Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves".

Departmental

Since like begets like, like enjoys like, etc., the Ideal Society has Junior, Intermediate, Senior and Adult departments. Each has its own interests and ideas. Each needs opportunity to express those inner surgings of the heart and mind.

Organized

Organization is to the Ideal Society what a steering wheel is to an automobile. They both give direction to the course of procedure and are absolutely necessary.

Consecrated Leadership

The Ideal Leader is a young layman thirty years of age, who is constantly busy keeping every member at work. He seldom does the talking. He is a good organizer, a good mixer, and intensely interested in young people and their problems. He leads without driving, he suggests while others do the work. Instead of always telling young people what they ought to do, he often listens to what they would like to do and then proceeds to help them achieve their highest, and the Bible's highest ideals and purposes. He is firm in faith and doctrine—true to the Word of God, but at the same time he is sympathetic with transgressors and instead of antagonizing he becomes a friend who truly personifies the "Christlike Friendship". He is firm but not "bossy"; full of "pep" but serious-minded; a good listener as well as a good speaker. "An example to the C. E. flock."

All of the officers are necessarily of the same high caliber as the Ideal Leader, even though perhaps younger or older. All leaders and officers are first in consecration, in Bible reading, in prayer, in stewardship, in attendance, in promptness, and in service. They must be last in seeking reward or glory.

Program

A Progressive Program:

- 1—That WINS young people to Christ and encourages their growth through prayer, Bible study, and meditation.
- 2—That TRAINS young and old for consecrated and effective service by
 - a—teaching sufficient Christian doctrine and church history to acquaint people with the fundamentals of their own denomination.
 - b—mission study courses, stewardship courses, and teacher training courses.

3—That ENLISTS young in definite service for the mission field or the pastorate.

a—regular consecration services with definite opportunity for all ages to consecrate themselves for active service.

5—That provides for the SOCIAL NATURE of young people in accord with Biblical principles.

6—That is awake to the moral and spiritual issues of the time and seeks to assist young people in forming their opinions on the basis of the Bible's teachings of morality and justice.

7—That does not forget that the body is the Temple of the Holy Spirit and sponsors those activities conducive to sound physical development. Clay City, Indiana.

same terms, but those terms have a far more profound and not altogether comforting meaning. Today they mean to evangelize the world in this generation, or never. In short, the crisis is coming. Nations are deciding, and some of them are deciding against God and his Christ. Peoples are looking at Christianity with understanding and turning away from it. The Gospel is being driven back, not because men do not understand it, but because men do understand it, and it is alien to their plans and purposes. The heathen is not bowing down in his blindness to wood and stone, but he is deliberately repudiating the Cross for the I-beam, the Gospel wagon for the tractor, the message of the Apostles for the doctrines of Marx. In the face of these facts, Christians must re-think their obligations, not in terms of methods, administration, or any of those secondary things, but in terms of 'yes' or 'no' to missions at all. There is justification for the immediate investment of large shares of capital which any missionary agencies have on hand against the time when it may not be possible to spend this money for any kind of missionary work. Today is the great day of opportunity. Now is the day to preach the Gospel everywhere and as fast as we can."

A Crisis in Missionary Opportunity

By Stewart M. Robinson in "The Presbyterian"

These notes were made after a personal interview very graciously accorded to the writer by Dr. Julius Richter, professor of Missions at the University of Berlin, and considered to be the greatest living authority on the subject of the history of missions. Dr. Richter has very kindly read what follows:

"Whatever else may be moving the heart of Germany today there is surely a great missionary urge. This is seen in the enthusiasm of her people, the character and volume of missionary literature, and the spirit of unity and aggressiveness in the work of evangelization. To be sure, the financial stringency is felt there as sorely or more so than in other countries. But missionary enthusiasm and effectiveness are not entirely dependent upon financial means. America is perhaps too much depressed by the depression, especially her Christians. The Church of Christ has resources which are not devalued by the rise and fall of gold. The cause of this missionary enthusiasm in Germany goes back to the great suffering of the people. When a nation has been stripped and "peeled," as the prophet says it, when death has taken an enormous toll when every stable thing has been seen reeling and tumbling, then souls take stock, and the Cross shines forth. Material and political security are the worst enemies of missions in the long run. It is when people are cast adrift from their comfortable moorings that they become companions with the missionaries who went about everywhere preaching. It was amid the dust of a falling Jerusalem that the Gospel received one of its first impulses to become a world religion.

"Another factor in the modern situation is the rapid and devastating spread of Communism, which is also Atheism. There are vast areas where the Gospel is interdicted today, and this territory will increase in extent in the next decade. Since the Reformation there have been two great eras of evangelization. One was the movement which began in Germany and is associated with names like Count Zinzendorf, the Wesleys, Whitefield, and the Tennents, to trace the line into Presbyterian history. Curiously enough, Germany, which gave birth to this vital wave of Gospel teaching, failed to retain the largest volume of the blessing. For example, while there are some sixty thousand Moravians in America, there are possibly not six thousand in Germany.

"The second great revival was just after the crisis of the Napoleonic Wars. Out of a fervent pietism which grew up in those storm-tossed times, the great missionary movements of the nineteenth century got their start. Country after country felt the wave of Gospel song and message. The great unevangelized world was seen for the first time as a field for witnessing. Whereas the eighteenth century activity had been principally among European nations and their colonies in America the nineteenth century effort was principally in heathen lands, where aboriginal darkness had been for centuries. It is in the afterglow of this great revival that the Church is living today. But this tide is receding. Many of the phenomena which are causing such concern among Christians today is the wreckage which an ebbing tide discloses.

"One more great revival lies before us. The first impulses of this are already beating in the hearts of our European brethren who have felt the sting of suffering more keenly than we in America. But this revival has a curious and terrible characteristic. It is rising against a tide of definite and direct opposition. Hitherto the vast fields for Gospel witnessing were open. The nations in them, whatever their inertia and whatever spasmodic persecutions there might be here and there, were for the most part open to the Gospel. But today a different situation prevails. The world is becoming a great battle ground between two forces, the powers of darkness and the Kingdom of God. The Church may be thought of as perhaps upon her last mission. The call today is not to evangelize the world in this generation as a mark of energy and efficiency and Gospel enthusiasm. That is the way men felt about it a generation ago, when the slogan was used. But today the call can be couched in the

Promoting Home Missions

A Talk by Mrs. Dewey Murray,
Secretary Foundations Builders Banks

There is no more urgent and important task facing the Church today, than solution to many of the problems which our Home Mission Board now faces. The future growth of our Denomination depends upon the strengthening of the churches we now have, and the establishment of new ones. The Home Mission Board is interested in both and needs more than ever before the interest, prayers and financial support of the entire brotherhood.

The fact that 12% of our churches here in America have closed during the last 10 years should alarm us all to the dangerous place into which we are drifting. At this rate in 8 years we shall disappear as a Church.

The faith of our own children depends upon successful Home Missions. Foreign missionaries may care for the children of other lands, but they cannot care for ours. The Home Mission Board seeks to throw a fence about our children and save and hold them in days when we are no longer here.

The College and Seminary hang their future upon Home Missions. Where will students come from and money for the College if we fail to do our part? Who will support the Seminary in training young ministers, and how they will labor if there is no Home Mission Board to establish new churches for them?

The tragic reductions in offerings during the last 3 years have greatly crippled Home Missions. This Thanksgiving offering must increase, or the work will be irreparably injured, for the offerings have been reduced to about half the former amount.

In the November Witness Rev. Miller says last year's offering must be doubled to continue the work at all, and must be trebled if they are to go forward. We hope that here is where the Foundation Builders' Banks will shine forth, and that they will help to treble the offering.

The Thanksgiving season gives a fine opportunity for God's people to show forth God's wonderful mercies. Are we grateful in our hearts for what he has done for us? Real gratitude shows itself in action. We talk much of the need for money, but never was there a time when the cause of Christ so much needed men and women throughout this land of ours who would turn back from the ingratitude and indifference, that marks so many, to the complete surrender of a grateful heart to a loving Saviour. Their gratitude to him should this year be released in terms of money for his service.

Perhaps there are some of us who can't give as much as we would like, but God knows when we've done our best. And he is able to take even a little and make it accomplish much. It was just an alabaster box of precious ointment,—her treasure, but she poured it on the Master's feet, and the fragrance of that gift reaches us. Just "5 barley loaves and 2 small fishes"—one boy's lunch, but they were given to the Lord Jesus, and in his wonder-working power they fed a multitude, with enough and to spare. Do you have either treasure or lunch? If so, place them in the hands of the Lord this Thanksgiving and watch them multiply. If there is neither treasure or lunch, there still remains the "Widow's mite." And remember that she gave more than they all, for she in her want gave all. Roanoke, Virginia.

this lesson it is plainly set for that. Paul performed genuine miracles by the power of God for the sake of advancing the Gospel". As it is, it makes no sense and should read "God does not loan his power to magic, although in this lesson it is plainly set forth that Paul performed, etc." If any discussion has arisen over the sentences, please be advised that the correction sets forth the lines as I thought I had written them.

At the last meeting of the Faculty Club at a tea room near Mansfield, Dr. E. E. Lewis, of Ohio State University, discussed the present control of industry by the government in the light of what we have always cherished, personal liberty. His topic was, "Economic Security and Freedom", two things very hard to reconcile.

At the next meeting Professor A. J. McClain will present a paper.

It may be of interest to know that two members of the College Board, Dr. R. R. Teeter and Mr. Ora Garber, were elected to membership on the city school board.

The nearness of the City hospital and its general efficiency are of great advantage to the College. This fall we have had two students there who underwent successful operations for appendicitis and another who went there for treatment for a chronic ailment. Two of these students were from out of the state. I say this because we have here the best of health facilities, as good as many students would have at home, or better. EDWIN E. JACOBS.

CONEMAUGH, PENNSYLVANIA

Conemaugh is doing her best to line up with the program as set forth by National Conference and emphasized by State Conference, especially in respect to Evangelism and Home Missions.

Using a weekly Calendar as a medium of advertising, we are praying and pressing hard for more than double the amount of Home Missions Offering ever given by the Conemaugh church. We will observe the day of prayer, November 22.

Although planning for a revival in January we are having converts nearly every Sunday. Eight new members have been received since August and others are now ready for baptism.

Our last Communion was the largest in years. Our pastor remarked that we would need more room if this keeps up! A deep spiritual atmosphere was felt by all who attended.

We entertained the churches under the direction of our District Evangelist in an all day Institute on Evangelism. Brother A. V. Kimmell, our State Director of Evangelism, gave an inspiring message on the Need of Evangelism which was a fitting close to a great program.

Our different auxiliaries are functioning in an encouraging manner. We have a Junior Christian Endeavor that is thriving surprisingly. At a recent meeting at which the writer of these notes was present, our pastor's wife, had the children each take one of our missionaries to pray for, and though the prayers were faltering, one was reminded of the Master's words—"Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." What a blessed training for little children!

The tie that binds our people together is exemplified when one of our number has sickness and death in their family. Then it is that sympathy and help is freely given and is priceless to the recipient.

SEMINARY NOTES

Recently our Seminary library has been exceedingly fortunate in receiving some splendid sets of books and individual books from the libraries of Dr. J. M. Tombaugh and Dr. A. D. Gnagey, and also from the Woman's Missionary Society of the Gretna, Ohio, Church. This morning the last acquisition number of our library is 3,585. We are always glad to receive books of value and assure donors they will be carefully catalogued, shelved and used.

Some weeks ago Dr. Miller discussed "The Duty of the Church in the Light of Present Conditions" before the ministers and laymen of the Columbus District of the Evangelical Church at Upper Sandusky, Ohio. More recently he addressed the Mansfield Ministerial Association on the subject, "Why Preach."

Prof. McClain was the special speaker November 5th at the Homecoming service at our church at Glenford, Ohio. At Ankenytown church he recently ordained a deaconess by Rev. R. Klingensmith, the pastor. Also he was special speaker at an evening service at our Sterling, Ohio, church.

At the request of the editor of the King's Business, a monthly magazine published by the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, Brother McClain is writing a part of their Sunday school material for the year 1934. All of his material will appear under the caption of his name and Ashland Theological Seminary, which we feel will advertise in a splendid way before interested people our Seminary.

Prof. Stuckey and the writer, and our wives are conducting a Sunday School Institute in the Goshen, Indiana, church, November 29 to December 2. The program is as follows for the week day:

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The Enrollment

The enrollment at this moment is as follows: Day students (regular) 268; Saturday, 72; Night, 16; Extension, 13; Music, 31; Total, 400. However, each one of the departments shows a slight decline under day last year.

It was a great pleasure to have Dr. Anspach, dean of the Arts college at Ypsilanti, Michigan, here for an address to the City teachers one evening last week.

The writer of these notes has recently completed a review of the two volumes on Motion Pictures and Youth, edited by Dr. W. W. Charters of Ohio State University, for the journal, Social Science.

The College Chorus, a new organization of 50 voices under the direction of Miss Dorcas Bame, teacher of Voice in the College, has made several public appearances and every report is to the effect that this organization renders such programs as to bring out the highest praise.

Dr. R. R. Haun, of the Department of Physics and Dean of Men, has recently been elected superintendent of the local Sunday school.

Dr. Morris G. Caldwell, of the Department of Economics and Sociology, has an article in the current number of the Journal of Criminology. He deals with certain studies in juvenile delinquency.

THE FIRST BRETHERN CHURCH
Cumberland, Maryland

Never did a Bell ring louder than the Bell that rang from Oct. 22 to Nov. 5. Dr. W. S. Bell of Milledgeville, Illinois, closed the evangelistic meeting in Cumberland, November 5. Seventeen were received by Holy Baptism and five by church letter. The Lord's Supper and Communion was held the following Sunday, November 12. During the two weeks Dr. Bell was with us, he was permitted to preach the Gospel over the radio a half-hour three times a week, which contributed greatly to the success of the meeting. We were very sorry that Brother Bell could not remain with us longer as interest was great and the church was packed every night. We hope that we might be able to have him with us again. We also want to thank the Winchester church and their pastor, Brother E. J. Rohart for the musical selections which they rendered for us one night during the meeting.

We are very much handicapped for a place of worship; at present we are using the Seventh Day Adventist church, which is small and poorly located. We are praying that the Lord will provide a place of worship of our own in the near future. Our handicap is lack of sufficient funds to go forward with this project. The church will grow much faster when we have a permanent place of worship.

INTERESTING FACTS GLEANED FROM THE MINUTES OF THE PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE HELD IN BERLIN, PA., OCT. 2-5, 1933 A. D.

(Secretary's Note: We feel it would be an imposition upon the Evangelist to print the entire minutes of the Pennsylvania District Conference, so we shall relate only such matters of business as transacted by the conference. We shall refrain from commenting upon the addresses, feeling that a grave injustice would occur because of our limited space.)

The Monday evening session gave the delegates the assurance that this conference would be the "best ever" and they were not disappointed in any way. The special numbers in song by the members of the Berlin choir were both inspiring and worshipful. The Vice Moderator, W. C. Benschhoff, in his message of the evening, sounded the key-note of Evangelism which not only rang true through the conference itself, but is still pealing forth in no uncertain tones.

On Tuesday morning the conference was made to feel at home by Prof. A. B. Cober of Berlin in his address of welcome. It was enlightening to many to know of the historic background in which the conference found itself. Again the note of evangelism rang through the message of the Moderator, A. V. Kimmell. All reports from the District Evangelists were encouraging. The District Mission Financial Report, although not as encouraging as it might have been, was well received considering the financial stress of the times. We submit the District Statistician's Report as follows:

Report for the year ending March 31, 1933, ROBERT D. CREES, Statistician.

District Ministerial Examining Board Report:

The Ministerial Examining Board has been called upon to examine only one candidate during the year: that of Stanley Hauser. To conduct this examination was a real pleasure and a real benefit to the Board and we believe to Brother Hauser as well. It was the Board's desire not only to examine as to the fitness for ministerial ordination, but to be helpful as well. Brother Hauser had already proven himself as pastor of the church at Huntingdon, Indiana. He has met the requirements of the Board and we freely recommend for Ordination. Notice of the call of Brother D. C. White to the ministry by the Berlin church has been received and he will be examined at such time as he desires. The Board is using the form accepted by the National Ministerial Association and recommended to the various districts and accepted by the Pennsylvania District.—W. E. Ronk, W. C. Benschhoff and J. L. Gingrich, Committee. The Sunday School Board of the District submitted a report which showed an intensively active year. Two Sunday school Institutes were conducted and one Summer Young People's Camp. All met with great success and the financial balance was excellent.

Tuesday afternoon session was given over to Christian Endeavor, the New National Boys' Work and the Sunday school. The closing address of the afternoon was a message from Prof. M. A. Stuckey on "Learning HOW to Teach at the Feet of Jesus."

The Tuesday evening addresses were presented by Brethren Steffler and Ashman on "Christian Perfection" and "The Eternal Security of Regenerated Believers" respectively.

Wednesday morning, the causes of the Brethren's Home and Superannuated Ministers were presented to Conference by A. V. Kimmell. The business of the morning was as follows: Motion prevailed that this conference send a telegram to the Indiana conference then in session. The College Trustees reported as follows: "We, your college trustees attended the Annual Trustee Meeting at Ashland. We discovered that the College and the Seminary had enjoyed a year of success in many ways in spite of the problems peculiar to these days and the false charges circulated about the institution. One of your trustees served on the Committee of Investigation which made a survey of the institution at the suggestion of the National Ministerial Association. This committee reported that the charges circulated about the College and Seminary were unfounded and that they were found both sound in faith and practice. Another of your trustees served on a Committee to introduce a new arrangement in the office of the Bursar and to assist in choosing an assistant to the Bursar whose duties have been too numerous and exacting for our beloved Brother Martin Shively. Dean Benschhoff has been selected as his assistant. We urge that every pastor and lay member of this district remember the College and Seminary in prayer and continue loyal support in every way possible. We present for your prayerful consideration a growing problem namely: the decreasing percentage of Brethren students. It is difficult to maintain a Brethren College with over three-fourths of the students not Brethren. C. H. Ashman, W. C. Benschhoff and W. H. Schaffer, Sr."

The Conference graciously accepted the invitation from the First church of Philadelphia for the 1934 Conference.

Motion prevailed that the Committee on Delegates at Large to National Conference be eliminated.

Motion prevailed that the Committee on Trustees of Property be eliminated from the standing committees and in case of an emergency that a property should fall into the hands of the conference it be turned over to the District Mission Board.

Conference voted $40 per member for District Missions apportionment for the next year (1934).

Wednesday afternoon's messages were delivered by W. E. Ronk on "The Minister as Reflected in the Pastoral Epistles" by J. L. Gingrich on "Why I Believe in Missions," and by Claud Studebaker on "Missions under the Searchlight."

A devotional Bible Study was presented on Wednesday evening by Wm. Clough and followed by Lecture No. 1 on Genesis by Prof. M. A. Stuckey.

Thursday morning business session opened with the reading of a telegram of fraternal greeting from the Indiana State Conference. The Credential Committee reported a total of 124 Lay and 39 Ministerial delegates.

Motion prevailed that the Conference send an appreciation to Brother A. D. Gnagey for his services in the Brethren Church.

Special prayer on his behalf was offered by Brethren Studebaker and Steffler.

The District Mission Board presented the following budget, 1933-1934:

	Per month
Armstrong County$15.00	$ 180.00
Cameron30.00	360.00
Mt. Pleasant and Jones
Mills40.00	480.00
Bonds	10.00
Operating Expenses	25.00

Total$1,055.00
 Claud Studebaker, President, Jos. L. Gingrich, Secretary.

Motion prevailed that Conference create a standing committee called the Auditing Committee whose duties it shall be to audit all books of all financial interests of this conference.

The Committee on Rules and Organizations submitted the following: "We recommend that for this year, the District Evangelists not be required to visit the churches, but hold themselves in readiness to respond to calls from the churches when absolute necessity requires their presence and that all expenses thereby incurred be met by the churches requiring their services. Also, that the whole matter of the work of our District Evangelists be referred to Committee on Rules and Organization for one year's study and to bring in recommendation at next conference.

The Committee on Moderator's Address submitted the following:

"We your committee on Moderators' Address, express in behalf of this conference our appreciation to the Moderator for his splendid address. We recommend to the churches of this District that they adopt the suggestions of our Moderator and accept the programs of Bible Evangelism, Boys' Work and Church Extension as outlined by the National Conference Committees. We also recommend the address to be published in the Brethren Evangelist. W. A. Steffler, I. D. Bowman and Wm. Clough."

The Committee on Committees presented the names of E. H. Wolfe, W. H. Schaffer, Sr., and John Rishel to act as an Auditing Committee among the Standing Committees of Conference beginning next year.

The recommendation by the Ministerial Association regarding the District Program of Evangelism as follows: "We recommend to Conference that it appoint a director of Evangelism to work with the District Evangelists to carry out the program proposed by National Conference.

The Committee on Committees reported as Director of Evangelism for this District, A. V. Kimmell.

Motion prevailed that Conference authorize $10.00 to be given to the Boys' Work in this District. The morning session closed with Lecture No. II on Genesis by Prof. M.

The Thursday afternoon session heard a brief address by Mrs. D. C. White on "Why Every Woman in this District ought to be a Member of the Woman's Missionary Society." A. V. Kimmell addressed the conference on the general subject of Foreign Missions. Our Publication interests were ably presented in a stirring address by Prof. M. A. Stuckey on "Brethren Literature, Past, Present and Future." "New Testament Evangelism" was the subject of an inspirational sermon by W. C. Benschoff in the interest of Evangelism. A profitable discussion followed in charge of A. V. Kimmell as to the program of Evangelism in this district.

Thursday evening's program featured a devotional Bible Study by Claud Studebaker and Lecture No. III on Genesis by Prof. M. A. Stuckey.

 Pennsylvania District Conference for 1934 will meet in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, First church, Tenth and Dauphin Streets.

Resolutions

One year has passed since we last met in District Conference. It has been a time of great distress yet our blessings have far outweighed our difficulties. Realizing that "every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of Lights," be it resolved:

First. That we bow our knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, expressing our gratitude and thanksgiving to him for his mercies and blessings bestowed upon us.

Second. That we exalt the name and Person of our Lord Jesus Christ who was born of a virgin, who died for our sins, who was raised again for our justification, who now intercedes for his own and who will come again to receive unto himself the redeemed of all ages.

Third. That we recognize the Person and work of the Holy Spirit in all our activities, abhorring anything that might grieve him or his purpose in our lives.

Fourth. That we again declare our faith in the Bible as the inspired Word of God and continue to order our lives by the motto, "The Bible, the Whole Bible and Nothing but the Bible."

Fifth. That in these dark days of apostacy both in belief and life we urge the constant use and authority of the Holy Scriptures (1) In the Church, with no uncertain sound from the pulpit; (2) In the home, with the establishment of family altars and giving thanks at the table; (3) In daily life, by passing scripture portions to those we meet day by day.

Sixth. That in these days of financial difficulty we "Charge them that are rich in this world—that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute," realizing that he who has given them the power to get wealth, has done so for the profit of all (1 Cor. 12: 7).

Seventh. That since our Lord has obligated us to love all mankind and to preach the Gospel to all the world, and since our citizenship is in heaven and our relation to the world is that of ambassadors, we therefore reaffirm the position of our church as unalterably opposed to Christians engaging in carnal warfare, choosing rather to heed the exhortation to offer "supplications and prayers . . . for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may live a quiet and peaceable life in all Godliness" (1 Tim. 2:2).

Eighth. That we deplore the laxity with regard to the marriage vow and urge our ministers, first to constantly warn against the practice of Christians yoking themselves together with unbelievers and second, to avoid being partakers of other men's sins by performing a wedding ceremony when one or more party is a divorced person.

Ninth. That we deplore the widespread revolt against decency; in commercializing the Lord's Day; in debasing advertisements of cigarettes; and the unrestricted flow of beer.

Tenth. That we urge our people to "love not the world" not only in the more degrading influences such as the dance, and movies, but also in the lesser evils that demand their time and steal their hearts.

Eleventh. That we express our gratitude to the Berlin people for the use of their beautiful building and for the many courtesies and their hospitality they have shown us during our stay in their midst and that we also desire to express our appreciation for the deeply spiritual messages, so carefully prepared by those on the program.

Respectfully submitted,
W. C. Benschoff, Geo. H. Jones, R. I. Humbert.

WILLIAM H. SCHAFFER, Jr.,
Pennsylvania District Conference
Secretary.

On April 19, 1933, an Accident Investigation Squad was inaugurated in Philadelphia. Public Safety reports that "the squad will investigate all major motor vehicle accidents for evidence of criminal negligence." Photographs will be taken of skid marks, damages to automobiles, and other marks of evidence which will help in determining the real cause of the accident.

SAVED OURSELVES BY OUR OWN EXERTIONS, AND THE WORLD BY OUR EXAMPLE."

And just at this point Mr. Lippman voices the madness of the world. Until man learns that he cannot save himself or the world, he is without understanding. "Without Me ye can do nothing" is the word of the Eternal God. Modern rulers, like Nebuchadnezzar of old, must learn this lesson.

The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit

from this bondage and lead you to know something of the true liberty of the children of God.

Many a Christian is living under a cloud as to his assurance of eternal life. Had he not lacked the fullness of the Spirit he would have been able to say "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." 2 Tim. 1:12. In I John 3:24 we read, "And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us." Praise God when we know that he abides in us we cannot lack the assurance that he will continue so to do not only now but throughout eternity.

Another blessed result of the presence of the Spirit is communion. In order to have real communion with God we must not only bring our petitions to him, but we must hear his voice. In Rev. 1:10 we read of John who said "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and I heard . . ." Oh, if we were in the Spirit not only on the Lord's day, but every other day, what might we not hear him say to us?

Another result of his presence in the individual believer's life is his indwelling within that body of believers to which we have the glorious privilege to belong — the church. In Eph. 2:22 we read "In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." You and I long to be builded together. God is not content to inhabit one of his children alone. He longs that together we shall form for him an habitation.

And so we must seek an essential result of the Spirit in our lives which is known as unity. As we read in Eph. 4:3, we must "Endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Unity is not uniformity. "One star differeth from another star in glory." One flower is as pleasing to the Lord as another, but he has made them in infinitely varied beauty to delight his own eye. And so you and I need not be alike in order to be united. Your strength may supplement my weakness. Your beauty of character enhanced by the grace of God may glorify him but the more because in my life his grace must be transforming.

In Eph. 5:9 we find "For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth." What then must be the results of not having the Spirit. Let us beware first of all sensuality. "These be they who separate themselves, sensual, not having the Spirit." (Jude 19).

IN THE SHADOW

SPIGGLE—On Sunday morning, October 1st, as the pastor was about to commence the morning sermon he was notified of the passing of our dear sister Spiggle. The announcement to the assembled Italy Day crowd of worshippers was a little short of startling. Sister Spiggle had been ill, but no one expected her passing so soon or suddenly. On the Saturday evening she had been up and around the house. Then on the following Tuesday afternoon, the pastor, assisted by Brother John Locke, conducted services in honor of the departed at her late home near Meadow Mills, Va. Sister Spiggle was born Frances Copp, daughter of John Copp and wife, and sister of our Brother Geo. A. Copp of Strasburg and Rev. Zed Copp of Philadelphia. Besides these two ministerial brothers and a sister, Mrs. Baker of Kernstown, Sister Spiggle was survived by her beloved husband and one son. The husband, Elder W. H. Spiggle, has passed his eightieth milestone in life's journey and is permitted to celebrate the fifty-third anniversary of his marriage to the wife who has just left him. Brother Spiggle, along with the son, Wm. F. Spiggle, will meet and miss the one they loved all these years. But they have one grand and glorious hope of meeting again in the home prepared for those loving the Lord and keeping faith with him. Sister Spiggle was a consistent member of the Brethren church many, many years. She was very appreciative of the privileges of God's house. And her charities will speak volumes for her. These were being served and administered to a few. May the good Lord of us all comfort the dear ones left behind for the while. Burial was in the cemetery at Winchester, Va. E. L. MILLER, Pastor.

EIGHMEY—The Turkey Brethren church gives over to Christ and to heaven another loyal, faithful member. Brother O. W. Eighmey passed to his rest on October 21, 1933, at the age of 94 years. Brother Eighmey fought through the Civil War, serving the full four years. During that period he never missed a day of service according to his own word. Brother Eighmey was born February 12, 1837, in Amsterdam, New York. He was married in Wisconsin, June 9, 1868. Brother Eighmey leaves his widow and two daughters to mourn the loss of a faithful husband and a loving father. Brother Eighmey wanted to go home; he asked Jesus to come and take him home. I saw him kiss his good wife goodbye, and as he did, he said, "I wish you could go with me now." Sister Eighmey replied, "I will be coming soon."

Just before going he charred his children to be faithful to the word of God and to meet him in glory.

Brother Eighmey was a faithful brother to the Lord and faithful to the church of the living God.

FREEMAN ANKUM.

HAZEN—John Sherman Hazen, youngest son of Jacob and Margaret Hazen, born in Mt. Vernon, Ohio, May 26, 1846, spent his home in West Independence, Ohio, October 25, 1932, aged 87 years, 4 months and 27 days. He was united in marriage to Cynthia Anna Roberts, Sept. 10, 1875 at Bremen, Iowa. He had served both his country and his God, according to his convictions, and left this life with few regrets because of conscious failure to either. For one year he served in the army which put down the rebellion, commonly called the Civil War, and was honorably discharged at its close. He spent practically all of his mature years in his home in West Independence, Ohio, and at West Independence more than 40 years ago. Later his membership was transferred to the Ashland City church, in the fellowship of which he died. He lived a faithful and consistent Christian life, being unswervingly loved and respected wherever he was known. He leaves to mourn his going, his aged wife, a son, Brother R. A. Hazen of Ashland, and a daughter, Mrs. Frank Nau of West Independence and three grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at his home, in West Independence, No. at West Independence, and burial ready on October 25th.

Search the Scriptures

Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. (John 5:39)

All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. (II Timothy 3:16, 17)

Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word. With my whole heart have I sought thee: O let me not wander from thy commandments. Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee. (Psalm 119:9-12)

O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day. Thou through thy commandments hast made me wiser than mine enemies: for they are ever with me. I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation. I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts. I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word. I have not departed from thy judgments: for thou hast taught me. (Psalm 119:97-104)

For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. (Hebrews 4:12)

Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes. And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt write them upon the door posts of thine house, and upon thy gates. (Deuteronomy 11:18-21)

BIBLE Studies in Catechetical Form

About thirteen years ago while acting as pastor in the First church of Philadelphia, I was deeply impressed by the need of some method of giving Biblical and Brethren instruction to the new members in both Sunday school and church. The outcome was the preparation of a little catechism entitled "BIBLE TRUTHS," which was used with profit both in Philadelphia and one or two other churches. Since that time numerous requests have come from pastors and churches asking for a reprint, but as I wished to revise and enlarge the work the project of reprinting has been habitually put off for a more convenient season. Now at last, urged by the widespread interest in something of the sort, I am undertaking the task of revision and publication of the booklet, expecting to have it available about the first of the year.

The size of the booklet will be about four by six inches, with approximately fifty pages; and the cost will probably run between ten and fifteen cents per copy.

In so far as space permits, all the great doctrines of the Bible will be treated, from the Inspiration of the Bible down to the Second Coming of Christ. The method will consist of questions and answers, with every answer given in the exact words of Scripture. Thus, if used for memory work, the student will be memorizing the Word of God, not man's word. Furthermore, in order to enlarge the usefulness of the booklet, in the revised work I am adding a series of Biblical references to each answer which may be used for further study either individually or in classes.

Hence, it is hoped that the booklet will serve a three-fold purpose: first, as a little handbook of doctrine for members of the church; second, for catechetical work in the Sunday school; and third, as a guide for use in adult Bible classes. With this last purpose in mind, I am spending considerable labor to add lists of the clearest and strongest references dealing with the various doctrines.

Those desiring to use quantities of this booklet should place their orders as soon as possible. At a very slight extra cost an imprint of the local church's name can be printed on the outside cover for publicity purposes, in case a hundred or more are ordered. If this is desired, be sure to give the name of your church exactly. Do not send money until notified the booklet is printed. Below a specimen chapter is reproduced. To see the teaching value of the extra references, look up those under questions 8 and 11.

THE Nazi Version of Christianity

If you think the day of martyrs is past, read the following quotation and pray for the true Christians in Germany that they may not falter in their testimony. The speaker is Dr. Krause who is chief of the Berlin section of the Hitlerized church.

"The crucifix is to be discarded. Everything that sprang from the alien spirit must be removed from the German people's church—be it ever so old and apparently venerable.

"The holy places of Palestine must not be visited, but instead those of Germany. The Old Testament must be excluded, and palpably misrepresenting or superstitious reports of the New Testament stricken out."

It is further said that German mythology will be substituted for the Old Testament stories.

REAPING the Harvest

If you wonder how it is possible for professing Christians in a civilized country could reach such a dogmatic perversion of the Christian faith, the answer is at hand.

For years in Germany the intellectuals in University and pulpit have hammered away upon two things: First, they have argued that there is no absolute truth, but all is relative; and second, that religion is wholly a pragmatic matter, not a truth to be believed, but a tool to be used for man. Historically, they have said, Christ may or may not have risen from the dead. But if it helps you to believe that he did rise, then go ahead and believe. Such a belief they called a value-judgment.

Thus it happens that the critical and modernistic religionists prepared the way for Hitler's religion. Since religion is nothing but a tool, Hitler decided to use it for the States, changing whatever does not serve his immediate purpose.

Man-made lightning of three million volts shattered an eighteen-foot, four-by-four timber of redwood in a demonstration of a new high-voltage machine at Stanford University. The apparatus stores up electricity in a huge condenser and then frees it all at once in a blinding discharge. It will be used to find the best kind of insulators for the high-voltage transmission lines from Hoover Dam to Los Angeles, California.

The Bible the Blessed Word of God

To those who approach the Bible with reverence and devotion, it is a blessed book, because the very word of God. That is the only way of approach that will lead to a real understanding of its teaching and an appreciation of the power of its appeal. One may enter upon his study with avowed impartiality and detachment of spirit and gain much knowledge about the Bible, but he can never by that means grasp its true character and eternal significance. It would be as reasonable to expect the Eskimos living amid ice and snow to appreciate the strength of the tropical sun and to visualize the abundance of life produced under its direct rays as to think that the cold disinterested student of the Bible to be able to reach any fair understanding of the vitality of the Word and the secrets of its power. Spiritual things can only be spiritually discerned. Therefore, more important than all things else to a true knowledge of the Bible is it to have a sympathetic mind and an understanding heart.

Inspired of God

The Bible is not like other books; it was heaven-born, divinely inspired, produced by the influence of God in a very definite and marvelous way on the mind and heart of the one commissioned to communicate God's will to men. Such is the claim that the Bible makes for itself. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God," writes Paul to Timothy (Second Epistle 3:16). We are assured, therefore, that the Bible brings to us the pure and unalloyed gold from heaven. It is God's message with truth assured; it is a divine revelation of the Father's will faithfully communicated in every particular so that we may wholly depend on it. None of the Bible writers was more confident of the divine origin of his message than was Paul. To the church at Ephesus he wrote: "If ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward: how that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; . . . which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by his Spirit" (Eph. 3:2, 3, 5). And he tells the Roman Christians that the Jewish Scriptures were the "oracles of God", (Rom. 3:2) and in his Second Corinthian epistle (14:37) he says, "The things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." Peter shows equal positiveness that the words of Scripture are of heavenly origin when he writes: "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. 1:21). Then in a later chapter he links the Old and New Testament scriptures together as being equally authoritative, saying, "That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandments of us the apostles of the Lord and Savior" (2 Pet. 3:1). In many places we find the claim set forth so that if we take the Word seriously, we cannot help looking upon the Bible as inspired in a sense that is absolutely unique, that it is in very truth the word of God.

The Word Eternal and Immutable

And because the Bible is the word of God, its truth is eternal and unchanging. That gives permanency to his promises and faithfulness to his word. We know this to be true because Christ himself is unchanging. He is the same yesterday, today and forever, and what he says he will do. The Psalmist believed in the eternal constancy of God's word, for we hear him declaring: "For ever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven. Thy faithfulness is unto all generations. . . . The righteousness of thy testimonies is everlasting. . . . Concerning thy testimonies, I have known of old that thou hast founded them for ever. . . . Thy word is true from the beginning, and every one of thy righteous judgments endureth for ever" (Psa. 119:89, 144, 152, 160). Isaiah exclaims with the same assurance: "The word of the Lord shall stand for ever" (Isa. 40:8). And when the Son of God came into these changing scenes, he asserted by contrast the unchanging character of his own word with the utmost positiveness saying: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away" (Matt. 24:35). His disciples did not fail to be impressed with the statement, for John says, "The scriptures cannot be broken" (John 10:35). And Peter proclaims with certainty: "But the word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you" (1 Pet. 1:25). What a consolation and satisfaction to know that there is eternal certainty in the word of God! That we can depend on it and shall never be disappointed! And what a contrast with the wavering, changing, undependable words of men!

Integrity of the Word

Not only is the Word of God constant, but it is pure and truthful; we can always believe in it, and be assured that it is unadulterated with selfishness and falsehood. Its integrity is never to be questioned; it is never found lacking in truth or accuracy. Even its enemies search it in vain for any flaw in its standards or unfaithfulness to its ideals or any shortcoming in truthfulness. It is so, because it is the word of God, and God cannot deny himself. And Jesus proclaimed himself to be "the truth." And we know that in him is no darkness of error or unfaithfulness or impurity at all. The words of the sweet singer of Israel echo the sentiment of all Christian hearts: "The words of the Lord are pure words: as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times" (Psa. 12:6). Again, "Thy word is pure: therefore thy servant loveth it. . . . and thy law is truth . . . and all thy commandments are truth. . . . Thy word is true from the beginning" (Psa. 119:138, 140, 142, 151, 160; Psa. 22:20, 21). Yea, declares the wise man: "Every word of God is pure" (Prov. 30:5). "And that which was written was upright, even words of truth" (Eccl. 12:10). Jesus acknowledges to the Father, "Thy word is truth" and the sanctifying force in the Christian's life" (John 17:17). And Paul testifies: "Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy and just and good" (Rom. 7:12). All that applies to the whole word of God as well as to specific portions of it. How much we need to make daily use of the purifying, sanctifying influence of the Word!

The Power of the Word

One of the most interesting characteristics about the Bible is its power—it has power, great power, wonder-working power. "The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, . . . and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. 4:12). It converts men from the error of their way; it illumines darkened souls, comforts saddened hearts, teaches searching minds, sustains the weak, makes fruitful the barren, edifies the impoverished and leads men through grace into an eternal salvation. How effective it is! It goes here and there searching out hearts, working according to the will of God and it is the divine edict, "It shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isa. 55:10, 11). "Is not my word like a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" (Jer. 23:29). So powerful is the indwelling Word that Jesus declared: "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." And it is for the purpose of fruit-bearing, for Jesus remarked, after giving the promise: "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit" (John 15:7, 8). Nothing equips one more effectively for service than to be empowered with and through the Word.

The Bible the Court of Appeals

The Lord Jesus did not personally write any instructions, nor did he have the New Testament ready prepared to leave with his disciples as a text book on religion. He had taught his disciples thoroughly and they were the witness bearers and the arbiters on all matters pertaining to faith and conduct. The various New Testament books were not written to give first knowledge of Jesus but for the benefit of those who already had knowledge of him, to supplement their knowledge and strengthen their faith and to correct their errors. The apostles were being taken from among the churches and it was to perpetuate their knowledge and to maintain the purity of the faith that the books came forth under the direction of the Spirit of God. These books, once written, became readily the final authority for instruction and correction in Christian doctrine. That was the purpose for which they were produced—John says, "these are written that ye might believe", and believe correctly—believe that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God" (John 20:31). Paul says that "All scripture . . . is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. 3:16). And Jude urges his readers to "contend for the faith which was delivered unto the saints" and the basis of their efforts must be the written word of God. That was and is the final court of appeals.

What We Should Do with the Bible

(1) We should hear it. The word will do us no good unless it falls upon our ears and finds entrance into our hearts. The words of the old prophet come to us as they did to the people of his own day: "Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David" (Isa. 55:3). "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear" said Jesus (Matt. 11:15). And sorry will be the result for him who refuses to hear, but deliberately "turneth away his ear from hearing the law" (Prov. 28:9).

(2) Accept it. That means an active faith in it. James (1:21) urged his readers to "receive with meekness the engrafted word." That is the thing we would expect after one has heard the Word. Paul says, "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God" (Rom. 10:17).

(3) Ponder it. One fleeting entrance of the truth is not enough; it must be allowed to dwell in the heart. To meditate on it makes it richer and more precious. Such was his declared purpose when the Psalmist (119:15, 16) said: "I will meditate on thy precepts, and have respect unto thy ways. I will delight myself in thy statutes: I will not forget thy word." There is good reason for the benediction in the first psalm on the righteous man who meditates on the law of God "day and night."

(4) Maintain its purity and simplicity. In Jeremiah's day there were people who "perverted the words of the living God" (Jer. 23:33-40). Jesus found those who taught "for doctrines the commandments of men" (Matt. 15:9). And Paul evidently knew of those who "corrupt the word of God" (2 Cor. 2:17). We are neither to add to, nor to take from, the Word, but to be satisfied with the simple Word itself and be ready to contend for it.

(5) Practice it. Obedience must accompany faith, or the latter is vain. James (1:22) admonishes, "Be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." In Revelation 1:3 we find blessing pronounced upon those who, not only hear, but "keep

Our Young People will enjoy reading the splendid article that one of their fellow Endeavorers wrote and read in the North Long Beach, California, church. Other young people are invited to send in their productions of merit.

On Prof. McClain's page this week he speaks of his revised catechetical booklet, which is to appear soon and will be available at very moderate rates. A handy, inexpensive booklet as a guide to Scripture instruction is being widely called for, and Brother McClain is doing the brotherhood a service in preparing to meet this need.

Brother W. S. Crick writes us that his Fremont, Ohio, folks had a splendid Homecoming service on November 26th with Dr. Charles L. Anspach present as the speaker, and we are reminded also that the Fremont church was organized on Thanksgiving Day in 1900 and that for fifteen years thereafter the late brother S. M. Loose, grandfather of Dr. Anspach, was the elder in charge of this church.

Brother A. J. Ramey of Manassas, Virginia, tells us of a preaching trip into the Blue Ridge mountains, and is moved to say a word about the urgency of preaching the whole gospel "without money and without price" in these times. It would be good for the cause if such an urge were laid upon the hearts of more messengers of the cross. The "good news" must be told somehow.

Brother Charles H. Ashman, representing the Foreign Mission Board, is offering to distribute money barrels free to those who will use them to collect coin for foreign missions during the months between now and the time for the lifting of the Easter offering. Churches are invited to make request for the number of barrels they can use among their members. See Brother Ashman's notice and a cut of the barrel in this issue.

Brother L. G. Wood, pastor of the church at Fort Scott, Kansas, says his work is encouraging and that the attendance at the regular services is increasing. Sunday school and every-other-Sunday preaching services continue at the Godfrey mission out from Fort Scott. Brother Wood had a birthday on November 24th, when his people surprised him with an expression of their good will and wishes. We are not told how many candles the cake had on; nevertheless we join in expressing appreciation of his years of faithful and sacrificial service and wishing him many more years of such service.

Brother R. Paul Miller writes of the evangelistic meeting he recently conducted at Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania, where Brother William Gray is the faithful pastor. The church at this place is said to be making progress in spiritual standards as well as in numbers under its present leadership. Brother Miller says some very fine people have been brought into the church in recent days and he sees a bright future for the Brethren cause at this place. We are not informed as to the results of this campaign; possibly the pastor will make definite report on that point in the near future.

Brother Robert D. Crees reports the work going forward at Kittingan, Pennsylvania, where he is pastor, and from the way they are going on in the accomplishment of their aims and goals, it is evident that "depression" really means to them "do-press-on." They have a "Gospel Team" composed of their own young men, who are doing things in evangelism, having had nine confessions in one of their meetings. They conduct meetings not only in churches but also in barns and school houses. Following the "Harvest Home Week" of services, Brother Claud Studebaker of Pittsburgh gave a series of Bible lectures, which were widely appreciated and resulted in a great blessing to the people. Home missions is being properly stressed in this church and the young people show commendable zeal in Christian Endeavor. The Sunday school banner attendance was 338, which was a Rally Day record.

A very successful evangelistic campaign is reported from Washington, D. C., where Brother Frank G. Coleman was the preacher of the Word and Brother Homer A. Kent is the efficient pastor. There "were over forty who came forward for confession and re-consecration, seventeen having already been received into membership by baptism. Also, a "Gospel Team" has been organized with the purpose of witnessing for Christ wherever occasion offers. The week of personal visitation preceding the meeting was a splendid preparation and this is rightly credited with having had much to do with the success. One of the most important and yet one of the most difficult things to do is to get the members of a church to take seriously their responsibility for personal effort in the interest of evangelism. A great work is accomplished by that pastor who succeeds in this. Brother Coleman was delighted with the faithful cooperation and fellowship of these people, and he believes they have a great opportunity for growth ahead of them. We are asked to pray for the health of Sister Coleman.

Bible Reveals God's Mind

Purpose and destiny of soul
Divine Mercy and grace
Perfect Man and Savior
Man's eternal living

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord" (Amos 8:11). These words of this daring prophet-preacher were fulfilled for the Jews in those dark four hundred years between the close of Malachi and the Birth of Jesus the Son of God. Jesus appeared as the rock in a dry and desert land, a Rock smitten to revive the sin-cursed race of man. Jesus said, "I am the bread of life" (John 6:35). In the conversation with the Samaritan woman Jesus promised that "living water" of which if any one drinks they should never thirst (John 4:10). Dr. Ralph W. Sockman says, "We have not kept the proper balance between the income of Divine energy and the outlay of human effort. The result has been a spiritual nervous breakdown, revealing itself in our business, in our morals, and in our religion. More clearly than ever before, we see the need of inner recuperation. To build up our spirits there is offered the 'Bread of Life' in the Book which has sustained souls in similar situations throughout the centuries."

The certainty of spiritual knowledge is imperative to spiritual development. Spiritual development is not possible from material things. Jesus warned the ambitious heir that "a man's life consisteth not in things" (Luke 12:15). Then follows the account of the Rich Fool who tried to fatten his soul on material produce. One of the surest proofs that the Bible is the very Word of God is the fact that human souls have waxed great on it. It has truly been the bread of life and the water of life to millions, in fact, we must say that all progress in the world has been in the train of the Word of God taught and preached to perishing souls of men.

"Hath God Spoken?" In the rocks man reads the history of earth's great epochs. The volumes are carefully arranged in a sort of eternal library. In organic life man finds facts faithfully written so that he can construct a science which is exact. The world gives evidence that some Great Mind, a Great Person has arranged the order of the earth and set the bounds of the stars in their course. Would this Great Person Who has so faithfully ordered natural life refuse to communicate with men? Would he leave his crowning creation stranded at the apex of the universe? Would he leave man reaching helplessly out into space without a heaven to attain, as Browning suggests? God has spoken to the soul of man and that message is contained in the Book of God and a "Man's reach must exceed his grasp or what is a Heaven for?" The Bible is God's answer to man's search for knowledge of himself and his destiny.

The Bible is the Mind of God revealed to the mind of man. The earth with all the beauty which it may possess is as a flower "born to blush unseen and waste its fragrance on the desert air" without the soul of man to see and appreciate that beauty. Earth finds her expression in man. Now man himself is only a vague riddle unless he knows God and obeys him. Without God, man is a child of circumstance. Truly we can say with the Psalmist, "Lord, what wait I for? my hope is in thee"

(39:7). The Bible is the meeting place of the Divine Mind with the human. In the Bible man discovers God's will and being fully obedient is led of the Holy Spirit into more intimate acquaintance with the Divine person. There is only one source where man may discover something about himself and that is the Bible. The Bible does not presume to instruct man with regard to his material origin, except to say that he was God-made. The Bible does instruct man as to the purpose and destiny of his soul. The sinful depravity of man is not declared more eloquently than in the fact that some men are not interested in the primary fact of life, namely, the human soul and its relation to God. There seems to be more assurance of some hope for the heathen person who blindly adores some kind of god than for an enlightened man who purposely ignores the Divine revelation in the Bible.

The Bible reveals to man the true nature and personality of God. The natural man has always been inclined to judge God after the nature of his own sinful life. We need to carefully read the Bible to know and understand that God is full of mercy and grace. I shall quote one Old Testament passage and suggest that my readers take a good concordance and examine the references under the word, "remember;" and note the great testimony to God's gracious love for his people. "Thou shalt remember all the way that the Lord led thee" (Deut. 8:2). I used to think that the man in the parable of the talents, who returned his one talent, got a rather hard sentence; but what did he say with his own mouth: "I knew thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown . . ." (Matt. 25:24). Out of his own testimony he proved that he was a child of the world and not a faithful steward of God. The Bible gives ample warning against presuming against the character of God and trampling under unholy feet the grace of God. The appeal in the Old Testament to tempted people was to remember the goodness of God to the children of men. The Apostle Paul says, "The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance" (Romans 2:4). The Bible reveals God the Father as a God of abundant mercy and grace and because of this abundant mercy and grace the man who spurns it feels the penalty of Divine justice. Reject love and you reap the penalty of the law.

The Bible reveals God's Perfect Man, his "Only Begotten Son", our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons" (Gal. 4:4, 5). Here is marvellous grace in that, though Israel chose the law, God graciously adapts salvation for them who were under the law. Christ is revealed in the Bible as God's man, perfect in obedience and all holiness. "The highest, holiest manhood thou." Christ is he in Whom the Father is well pleased. He is the recipient of the fullest grace from Heaven and Who is empowered to impart the fulness of grace to them that believe. Man thinks of law, of judges, of penalties; this is evidence of a guilty conscience, but God speaks of abundant mercy and grace in his Word and the terrible loss sustained by them that reject this grace.

The Bibel in its climax for man speaks of man as becoming a joint-heir with Christ. Science readily perceives man as to his material body, to be related to the natural order. Shall the spirit of man ever remain an orphan? No, the Bible tells us that God endowed man with the Divine image. The short life of man on the earth is sustained by proper relation to the order of which man's material body is akin, that is, man feeds his natural body from the material products of the earth. The soul of man must look in another direction, that is, to God the Creator of our spirits. Jesus did little toward offering any solution to man's material problems because his Kingdom was not of this world. Jesus was concerned with man's relation to God. The Eternal Word of God is directed toward the program of man's eternal living. You see at once how utterly foolish we are trying to patch up this corrupt world order, hoping for material prosperity to return so we may cater to the sinful flesh with all its passions and lusts. The Word of God warns us to look for "that Blessed Hope and glorious appearing of the Great God our Savior." The Bible promises us a glorious hope, an abiding city, an eternal fellowship with our Blessed, Gracious, and Loving Heavenly Father and with Christ our Savior and with the Holy Ghost, our ever blessed Comforter and Guide. The Bible is the Book of God, our Beacon Light through the gloom of sin and human failure to life and joy and peace with God in that Kingdom that shall never be destroyed.

The Bible and the Commonwealth

Ever since the State of Massachusetts adopted the name "Commonwealth" as the proper designation of its colonies when they had banded themselves together to form one of the original thirteen states, this term has taken on a more widespread usage. It embraces that fine old Anglo-Saxon word "weal" meaning more even than our word "welfare" and something far bigger and better than our word "wealth" although this also is derived from it. Those who join hands and hearts and minds in a united organization to promote the "common weal" of all together constitute themselves into a Commonwealth.

The masterpiece of the late Viscount James Bryce, so long Ambassador of Great Britain to the United States, was his great descriptive and constructively critical treatise called "The American Commonwealth." No use of the word could be more appropriate. In these more recent years of expanding democracy since the World War, the British Empire itself has gradually granted more autonomy to its dominions until the tie that binds them together today has become one of loyalty even more than that of legality. We speak no longer of the British Empire but of the "British Commonwealth of Nations."

The basic phrase in the American Constitution is, "To promote the general welfare." A commonwealth favors no special class and grants no special privileges. It exists for equal protection and for equal opportunity to all. For this it imposes upon all an equal obligation. Now we raise this question, Whence came this idea?

Whatever else may have contributed toward it there is one very certain and direct source for it in the Bible. The Old Testament history is one progressive narrative of the development of a government in the direction of a commonwealth. The follies of autocratic kings are exposed and condemned. The close dependence of the people upon God breathes on every page. The rules for a good moral character are set forth and the rewards of good conduct are as clearly defined as the consequences of disobedience of the moral law. The principles and precepts in the books of the law in the Old Testament are written into the laws of the nations of the civilized world.

From the Psalms and Prophets we learn that the sovereign God becomes great enough to blend the full requirements of both justice and mercy in his attitude toward men. The limitations of human nature are recognized and a force is instituted more powerful than all the laws of the universe. The full revelation of Divine Love bursts forth in the New Testament in the coming of Jesus Christ the Son of God. Through him the true nature of God is known. In his life and death and resurrection our souls are challenged by the power of God's love for us. The full requirements of justice and mercy are met in him both for God and for us who believe and follow him.

Out of this springs the motivation for all that is most significant in any "commonwealth." The law is there, to be sure, but there is something more compelling and more persuasive than mere law. It is the love that constraineth us. From the Bible we derive the nature and meaning of the highest love and we learn that the highest happiness and the highest self-realization inheres in the practice of that attitude toward God and toward our fellow men. Law and order preserves stability and security. The practice of love inspires loyalty and friendship. The welfare of all the citizens is assured wherever these foundations, taken from the Bible, are placed under the government and permeate the habits of the people.

How fortunate is the American Commonwealth that our great founders, Washington, Franklin, Jefferson and others, were men who recognized these truths and wove them into the fabric of our basic laws and traditions. When Abraham Lincoln was faced with a crisis in the preservation of the nation, he brought us through victorious because he made his decisions and shaped his course of action by the teachings of the Bible. Our great country will remain fortunate in the proportion that its people remain loyal to the Word of God for without the Bible there can be no "commonwealth."—Dr. Willard L. Robinson in "The Bible in New York."

I do not believe that there was ever a saint in the world who did not wish to be better than he was; but the saints do not on this account lose their peace.—John of Avila.

THE PERFECT LIFE

Holiness appeared to me to be of a sweet, pleasant, charming, serene, calm nature. It seemed to me it brought an inexpressible purity, brightness, peacefulness, and ravishment to the soul; and that it made the soul like a field or garden of God, with all manner of pleasant flowers that is all pleasant, delightful, and undisturbed; enjoying a sweet calm, and the gently vivifying beams of the sun. The soul of a true Christian appeared like such a little white flower, as we see in the spring of the year, low and humble on the ground, opening its bosom to receive the pleasant beams of the sun's glory; rejoicing, as it were, in a calm rapture; diffusing around a sweet fragrance; standing peacefully and lovingly in the midst of other flowers round about, all in like manner opening their bosoms to drink in the light of the sun.—Jonathan Edwards.

THINGS BY THE WAY

By A. D. Gnagey, D.D.

The many friends of Dr. Gnagey will be pleased that he has consented to resume his occasional contributions under the accompanying title as his health may permit.

Submitted to the Seminary Boys.

In a theological seminary four classmates were asked to give each what he considered the loveliest biblical thought of heaven.

One quoted: "There shall be no more death."

The second: "There shall be no pain or sorrow."

The third: "They shall see his face."

And the fourth, who was that mystic writer Thomas a Kempis, quoted: "And his servants shall serve him." The writer casts his vote for the fourth. Here in this world we serve him by serving our fellow men. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me." This gives the gospel a social note which is being more and more emphasized in these days.

"Resurgam."

When the writer stood in front of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, there came to his mind a singular fact in the history of that marvelous structure. It was this: The first stone which the architect ordered the masons to bring from the rubbish of the former cathedral, destroyed by fire, was part of a sarcophagus, on which had been inscribed the word, "Resurgam," "I will rise again." The prophecy was fulfilled, for out of the ruins of the old a veritable poem in marble has arisen. Every soul born into the world has "resurgam" written upon it, "I will rise again," whether to honor or dishonor is determined by the one who bears the inscription. God has filled all nations with emblems of this doctrine. If the little insect that is formed on the leaf in a few short days and soars into new life, if the dry root that has lain motionless during the winter frosts sends its green life upward toward the tender smiling sky of the spring time; if the little grain of wheat holds in its bosom a potentiality that will produce its kind after ten millenniums have sped by, how much greater the possibility that lies in the life of man. The one sweet triumphant note which the soul of every man flings out as it passes on through the gate of the Material realm is "Resurgam." To what?

Every Need a Call.

Recently our Sunday school lessons included the story of Paul's vision and dream at Troas. In that vision Paul saw a man; in that dream Paul heard a voice. The story is familiar. But its application is not always fortunate. The man from Macedonia may be in the next street, or he may be your neighbor, no less than the man in Africa or India, and of any nationality. His need is what calls to us whether he lives in China or across the street from you. A certain deacon in a Congregational church in Boston many years ago, who, as a way of doing home mission work, set two extra plates for dinner. He did it every day, inviting two young men who were away from home to "break bread" with him. Who they were did not matter, except that they must be two strangers, that is, temporarily homeless in the city. He kept on doing that for thirty years, and of course became in that way acquainted with a great number of young men in that church, many of whom became Christians through his influence. When he died (many years ago) he was to be buried in Andover, thirty miles distant, and a special train (there were no automobiles in those days) was chartered to carry friends who wished to pay their last respects to the well-known merchant. Notice was given that a special car would be set apart for the young men who had entered the Christian life through his influence, should they desire to attend. One hundred and fifty young men accepted the invitation and packed the car in honor of his memory. They had not asked his help, they were not beggars, but their spiritual need had been a mute appeal to him. No car could have held the number of those—no longer young men—who had become Christians through his leading during those thirty years. But the harvest was far greater than one hundred and fifty young men. What about the influence of each one of these one hundred and fifty and their impact on the life of others? That influence was cumulative and no mere human mind can follow it in all of its ramifications. "Let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

Who Was He?

"He was a foe without hate, a friend without treachery, a soldier without cruelty, and a victim without murmuring. He was a public official without vices, a private citizen without wrong, a neighbor without reproach, a Christian without hypocrisy, and a man without guilt. He was Caesar without his ambition, Frederick without his tyranny, Napoleon without his selfishness, and Washington without his reward." Yes, who was he? Not you, not I,—who?

All for Christ—A Message for Boys and Girls.

Just now the Sunday schools of the world are studying the life of St. Paul. Do not read and study this heroic life-story lightly. It has a mighty message for your life. Try to find it and live it today and this very week and month and year. If there was no point to Paul's varied hardships and sufferings, then he was a heap of trouble to himself and all in vain. An unnecessary martyr is a poor hero, either a fanatic or an actor. There is no necessary glory in martyrdom. There is greater glory in living for Christ than in dying for him. There surely is a clue to Paul's life which accounts for all his heroism. He did it all for Christ and for the world Christ died to save. His was consecrated heroism, all offered in a mighty cause. Does it make life seem a more noble and glorious thing as you think of the way Paul lived it? Test the fiber of your own life this week and all the weeks by trying out Paul's great motive. Do everything for Jesus' sake. Put a tiny motto, "All for Christ," where you will see it often, and watch the effect upon your day's program. Perhaps you will find the secret of Paul's joyous enthusiasm and his dauntless life.

You will never enter into the life of rest and victory, you will never know what it is to be one with the Father in Christ through the Spirit, until you have learned the divine law that life is one, that you cannot sever the secular from the spiritual.—Webb Peppoe.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

"WORTHY OF LIBERTY"

The following item from a paper devoted solely to business matters ought to have the attention of, not only the wet crowd, but the church people as well:

Beer Brings Increase in Arrests

(Commerce and Finance, No. 1, 1933, p. 948)

It is stated by Frank A. Lindsay, statistician for the New York State Department of Correction, that arrests for drunkenness were 10 per cent more numerous during the first six months of legalized beer than during the corresponding period of 1932. Arrests for driving automobiles while intoxicated showed an increase of one per cent.

While these increases are not large, they serve to give the lie to assertions that prohibition increased drinking and drunkenness.

The slogan that prohibition was an infringement of personal liberty was a valid one, but it is up to those who use it to show that they are worthy of liberty, and are not disposed to abuse it. Making a nuisance or a menace of one's self is certainly an abuse of liberty, and if society should again show a disposition to protect itself from such an abuse, let no one blame "prohibition fanatics" for it. The fault will be with those who know not and care not how they use their liberty.

That's speaking the truth pretty plainly so far as responsibility for prohibition legislation is concerned. It is clear to every sober-thinking person that the past legislation restricting manufacture and use of intoxicants grew out of abuse of personal liberty and desire to control those who could not control themselves and so became a menace to their fellows.

Now what church people need to keep in mind is that that is the fundamental reason for such legislation. We have no mandate to use the laws to make people good. The fact of the matter is that the Christian dispensation differs from the Jewish dispensation precisely in the fact that the Jewish dispensation provided for control of personal conduct by law, whereas the Christian dispensation, going away with the law, seeks to commit the individual to Christ so that the law is written on his heart and he lives the good life because he so much wants to and has the help of Christ to do it.

The Christian is, however, a citizen and he must as such seek the best interests of his neighbors. Prohibition is no more a tenet of the Christian faith than the traffic laws are; but when it is manifest that unregenerate citizens can not so use their personal liberty as to avoid injury to their fellow citizens the Christian has an obligation to assist in so writing the laws as to curb the citizen's personal liberty.

Meanwhile, however, it becomes increasingly manifest that no law will go very far in curbing abuses unless there be a large body of citizens who are actuated by a genuine love of their fellows. That is a task for the church. The church must produce regenerated citizens or no law will be of any avail.—Christian Standard.

CO-OPERATION IN RELIEF WORK

In the United States, relief of distress, due to lack of employment various forms of disaster, individual inefficiency and in some instances carelessness in spending, must come during the coming months from four sources. National, state and other forms of taxation is the first. The National Red Cross is a second and local Relief Funds gathered by community appeals is the third. The first we could not escape if we wished to do so. The second, enrollment in the Red Cross Society, has gained a permanent place in the affections of the people by its efficiency, preparedness and broad scope. None feels membership in its ranks other than as a privilege. Local funds for local relief, especially as appeals have been coordinated, synchronized and skillfully managed reach our support by personal observation of neighborhood distress. Welfare Work is here to stay.

There is a fourth source of relief, which is large in volume but not easily reduced to figures, namely, the Church's ministry of mercy. We have no hesitancy in urging congregations to look after their own brethren in distress. These have a prior lien on the resources of the membership. People should provide for the hunger, warmth, shelter and encouragement of their fellow believers and then participate in community and national helpfulness.

Against this policy, there can be no logical objection. Were the congregations to relinquish their care of their own, the burdens of the secular organizations would be increased both in demands for aid and in overhead. Every dollar spent by the Church in its ministry of mercy means reduction of the number of persons eligible to community aid and fewer dollars requiring collection by taxes and appeals. Help your own first.

The Lutheran says that, and The Brethren Evangelist thinks it's good gospel for Brethren people, too. See 1 Tim. 5:8.

PROGRESS IN TUBERCULOSIS FIGHT

A serum which applied to tubercle bacilli will create an acid destructive to itself and to tuberculosis in the human body was described by Dr. Stephen J. Maher, international authority on tuberculosis. Dr. Maher said the temptation "to preserve silence on this work of ours until we could say 'here is a cure for tuberculosis' has been very strong. We have resisted this temptation because we realized that if we are on the right track the cure will be achieved much sooner if we impart our knowledge of direction to the whole world than it could be if we tried to find the cure alone. Once sighted, nothing, not even political scheming, or lack of funds, could keep the world from obtaining immediately and developing immediately the cure for tuberculosis. The possession of which is the greatest prize in the world."—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

THE LUTHER ANNIVERSARY

The Lutherans gave large attention to the 450th anniversary of the birth of Martin Luther, which came on November 10. All Protestant churches might have observed this anniversary with propriety, since Luther certainly was the outstanding leader of the Protestant Reformation. The modern student is called upon to make some allowance for things which he did which cannot meet the approval of our times. Nevertheless, it has to be admitted that his constructive services in the interest of religion outweigh his blunders. If we could enter into the spirit of Luther's times and into the problems with which he was confronted, we might be more charitable toward his action in connection with the peasant revolt, but there is no blinking the fact that his action crushed the peasant movement and placed the peasants under a heavier yoke than they had ever borne before. Some of the speakers present him as the champion of orthodoxy and as unwavering in his loyalty to the Bible as the sure word of God, forgetting, or ignoring the fact that he once spoke of the book of James as "a book of straw." Notwithstanding all this, Luther's influence in the advancement of evangelical religion was very great.—The Presbyterian Advance.

The Bible the Blessed Word of God

those things which are written herein." In 1 John 2:5, the aged apostle says "Whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected."

(6) Teach and commit to those "who shall be able to teach" (2 Tim. 2:2). It is the task of feeding and enriching life with spiritual things. "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock . . . to feed the church of God" (Acts 20:28). Hold fast the form of sound words" (1 Tim. 1:13) and rebuke the wranglers and unsound in the faith" (Tit. 1:9, 13).

(7) Proclaim the Word. The church must make disciples. Matt. 28:19 must be faced. Appreciation of the word results in a desire to share it. It led Philip to begin "at the same" Scripture and preach unto him Jesus" (Acts 8:35). It led Paul into the synagogues where he "reasoned with them out of the scriptures" (Acts 17:2) and enabled Apollos to "mightily convince the Jews" from their scriptures. If we love the Word we will seek to propagate it.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Philemon

In a quiet talk in the State House, Springfield, Illinois, during the campaign of 1860, the great American Emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, said:

"I know there is a God, and that he hates injustice and slavery. I see the storm coming and I know that his hand is in it. If he has a place and work for me,—and I think he has—I believe I am ready.

"I am nothing, but truth is everything. I know I am right because I know that liberty is right, for Christ teaches it, and Christ is God.

"I have told them that 'a house divided against itself cannot stand,' and Christ and reason say the same; and they will find it so. Douglas don't care whether slavery is voted up or voted down, but God cares, and humanity cares, and I care; and with God's help I shall not fail.

"I may not see the end; but it will come, and I shall be vindicated; and these men will find that they have not read their Bibles aright."

"These men," shouts the outraged President, "will find that they have not read their Bibles aright." And who were "these men?" Preachers and politicians who misread and misinterpreted the book of Philemon and every other passage in the Bible which bears on the injustice of human slavery; Actually it is true that Southern and Eastern American theologians defended slavery as an institution sanctioned by the Scriptures. They were wrong—dead wrong. Thousands of American citizens know that today.

Proclamations of Paul and Lincoln

The ways of Providence are devious and strange to the mind of man. Had not Lincoln been a regular reader of the Bible and St. Paul's letter to Philemon in particular, he probably would never have penned the lines, against subtle and violent opposition in his cabinet, that set the slaves of America free.

Though the Pauline epistle is not a treatise on slavery as such, yet it provided the basis for freedom from bondage to the slaves of the last nineteen centuries. That basis is spiritual regeneration of the human heart. It is the work of the Trinity—God, the Father, Christ, the Son, and the Spirit, the Regenerator. Without the work of the Three-in-One mankind would be a pagan mass of howling brutes, grovelling in the mire of human misery and utter sinfulness. But, thanks to the Great Giver, grace and truth have been extended to us and we now know how to treat our fellow-men—Christians and slaves alike. The aged Apostle has set the pace for us in preaching Christ Jesus and his love.

Again, let the writer repeat—Philemon as a writing is not a proclamation of emancipation—it is emancipation itself, emancipation plus, if you please.

Some Opinions Concerning the Letter

Even the casual reader will be greatly impressed with the epistle of the first imprisonment. It is a gem; it sparkles like a diamond when it is held up before the light of critical scrutiny. The more one studies it, the more he is attracted to it. Its rhetoric is not brilliant—the style is simple and easy—but its spirit is that of I Corinthians thirteen. Paul preached love and then acted out in actual life his actual convictions. O the pity of it—that we should have so many prophets of love and so few Samaritans in our century.

"Do you know the world is dying,
For a little bit of love?"

Sabatier says: This short epistle gleams like a pearl of the most exquisite purity in the rich treasure of the New Testament." Franke, so Bengal writes, said: "The single epistle to Philemon very far surpasses all the wisdom of the world." "Here", avers

Luther, "we see how St. Paul layeth himself out for poor Onesimus and pleadeth his cause with his master, and so setteth himself as if we were Onesimus and had himself done wrong to Philemon. Even as Christ did for us with God, his Father, thus also doth St. Paul for Onesimus with Philemon. We are all his Onesimi to my thinking." Another suggests: "This epistle is a masterpiece of persuasion, tact and delicacy, and an enduring model of the truest Christian courtesy."

The Story Unfolded

Onesimus a slave in the household of Philemon—a good churchman in Colossae—robbed his master and fled to Rome the rendezvous of fugitive slaves. While there he came in contact with Paul, who recognized him, and won him to the Saviour. The apostle, feeling that Onesimus should return to Philemon, wrote a lovely personal note to Philemon, his brother, recommending Onesimus, his newly-found brother, to the household of Colossae anew. The letter praises the character of Philemon and intercedes for the now happy, but fearful runaway slave.

Matthew Henry, than whom there is hardly a greater commentator on the English Bible, ingeniously analyzes the arguments hidden beneath the sentence structure of the epistle under a caption of the present writer's arrangement:

Matthew Henry's Reasons Why Philemon Should Receive Onesimus Back as "A Brother Beloved"

- Arguments variously stated are from
1. Past Goodness of Philemon, etc. (Thanksgiving Section and "Wherefore" of Vs. 8a).
 2. Paul's Authority (8b).
 3. Love's Authority (9a).
 4. Priority of Age—the Prisoner's Appeal (9b).
 5. The Spiritual Bond between Paul and Philemon (10).
 6. Philemon's Own Interest (11).
 7. Paul's Affection for Onesimus (12).
 8. The Apostle's Self-denial in Surrendering Onesimus (13-14).
 9. The Fact that Onesimus—a Changed Man—Would Do No Further Harm (15).
 10. The Capacity under which Onesimus would Now return (16).

St. Paul, A Man of Wide Friendships

The conclusion of the Philemon epistle indicates that the aged Apostle—(also other epistles like II Timothy and Colossians)—had many noble friends. Some of the more important men and women of the New Testament appear in his circle of friendship.

Peter, the intrepid disciple.

Barnabas, the tolerant missionary laborer from Cyprus.

Silas, the helper of the second missionary journey.

Mark, the unprofitable servant, who became profitable.

Luke, the historian and physician.

Lois and Eunice, the devout women of Lystra.

Lydia, the seller of purple—a thrifty business woman.

Timothy, the faithful son who became a bishop at Ephesus.

Titus, the church arbiter and level-headed organizer.

Aquila and Priscilla, workers, builders, advisers.

Apollos, the brilliant orator from Alexandria.

Others of Caesar's household, church leaders, etc.

Pertinent Lessons for Today

1. "The church in thy House." What place does the church of the living God occupy in our own home today?
2. "The Hearts of the Saints are Refreshed by thee, Brother." How many hearts leap for joy because they know you, brother?
3. "For Love's Sake I Beseech Thee." Paul laid aside the garments of authority as a leader and put on the robes of love? The commands of authority and the commands of love are two wholly separate things. Love alone rules when power and authority are done. Is this not so?
4. "A Brother Beloved." There are no real brothers in the world except those who know themselves to be the redeemed children of the Heavenly Father. Who can gainsay the point?
5. "If He Hath Wronged Thee . . . Put that on my Account." How noble! How gracious! How lovely! And does not this remind us of him who was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him? That is why we are Brethren beloved.

HONOR ROLLS HELP

By Jennie E. Stewart

Our Home Department superintendent and each of her helpers has an honor roll. The rolls are stiff cards, about 8½ x 11 inches in size, daintily decorated to attract attention. On the roll is entered the name of every person who studies each lesson, reads the Bible at least three times during the week, and makes an offering, no matter how small.

When the workers go to collect reports and deliver new materials, they carry these cards with them. When a member who has fulfilled all the requirements gives her report, she is given a silver star. If she is partially keeping up the requirements but not quite reaching the total, she is given a red star. If she is doing some worthwhile service for the church, department, or school, she is also given a gold star.

Since this plan was started fifty per cent of the members are silver-star members, ten per cent are gold-star members, and ninety per cent are red-star members. At the start, with a membership of fifty, only one was a gold-star member, and only forty per cent could claim a silver star. Two members cannot see to read and are not on the roll card. The ninety per cent of faithful members averages high, when we realize that all are more or less feeble or invalidated or else are busy, shut-in mothers.

USING THE ASSISTANTS

By Wouter Van Garrett

There are in many schools a group of assistants who are practically forgotten. A few weeks after the annual election, the average pupil could not even recall their names. These assistants should be put to work and be given a chance to develop their latent talents.

Once a month, or every six weeks, the school can be placed in their charge. The assistant superintendent can be put in charge of the school, the assistant pianist can be asked to play, the assistant chorister can be given entire charge of the music, and the assistant secretary can read the report. If there are other assistants, they also can take charge of their superior's work for the day. The plan has been tried in our own school with great success.

Another method that has proved its merits in many schools, and a method that is preferred by some, is to have one assistant take charge each Sunday. The assistant superintendent, for instance, takes the superintendent's work the first Sunday and all other officers are in their regular places; the next Sunday the assistant secretary takes charge of the secretary's work, and all other officers assume their regular work; and so on down the line.

Some schools prefer this method. They feel that it disturbs the regular routine to a smaller degree than the first method. In our own school, however, we have found that the entire school feels friendly toward the method of turning the work over to all the assistants at periodic intervals.

If the assistant is given an active part in the program, the work will assume a greater importance in his thoughts. In a short time, he will feel free to offer suggestions for the improvement of the school.

In the course of time, it always becomes necessary to fill positions that are vacated. The natural successor should be the assistant. If he has been wisely trained, he can take the place and carry the work forward.

NINE GOOD FEATURES FROM ONE SCHOOL

By Elizabeth Williams Sudlow

The First Presbyterian Bible School of Coral Gables, Florida, is not large in numbers, but some unusually good features may be found in its program. Following are a few of the things which make it outstanding. Any one of them might be adopted by other schools:

1. On the platform each Sunday morning are the superintendent and his two assistants. Each has a definite part. One is responsible for the birthday service, another offers prayer, and so forth. This makes the assistant superintendents more than mere figureheads. Every pupil knows who they are. In case the superintendent is absent, the two assistants can carry on without any trouble.

2. A birthday secretary has a record of all birthdays. A card is mailed so that it will reach the home on the exact day, and on Sunday morning a list of those who should celebrate that day is handed to the superintendent.

3. At the door are stationed two "greeters." They shake hands with everyone coming into the building. They also maintain order by not allowing late comers to enter during certain parts of the service.

4. The school has a finance committee composed of three persons. Anyone is privileged to make requisition for anything needed, using a special form provided for the purpose, but nothing may be ordered without approval of the finance committee. No bills are paid by the treasurer until they have been approved by at least two members of the committee.

5. Hanging on the chairs which form the center aisle are small cards, each bearing the name of a teacher. These designate the place occupied by a particular class. Where it is necessary for a class to occupy two or more rows, a card is used for each row. This permits all class members to sit together. After the closing song there is no mad rush to classrooms. Instead the classes march in orderly fashion to their respective places. Beginning with the two rows nearest the pulpit, the pupils face the center and march to the rear of the auditorium, in turn being followed by the other groups.

6. An effort to eliminate the accumulation of wasted illustrated papers was made by having every pupil who wanted a paper sign a card. Then a paper of the kind designated is ordered for him and kept at a certain place in the rear of the church. At the close of the service those desiring their papers go to the librarian and get that to which they are entitled. A record is kept of each pupil who has asked for papers, and those whose names are in the book are supplied. Not only does this help to save the expense of ordering papers not really wanted, but it places a real value on the paper. Only those who want papers can have them, and they must go after them before they get them.

7. Each Sunday the songs are selected by some members of the school. It may be a boy in the Junior Department, or a member of the Woman's Bible Class, but some member has the privilege of selecting the songs to be sung that day. Each Sunday the person for the next week is designated, and he is asked to meet with the superintendent at the close of the session so that together they may make out the song list. This simple plan has worked wonders in improving the singing and increasing interest in the songbook.

8. Outside the main door of the auditorium hangs a large bulletin board. On it are fastened all notices of the school. This does away with having such announcements made from the platform and saves some time. Then, too, it gives importance to the announcements through having them written in proper form for the bulletin board.

9. A special-day superintendent is responsible for all special-day programs, not only the several big occasions but the special things as they come along. This brings variety into the program many times throughout the year.—The Westminster Quarterly.

PAUL IN ROME

(Lesson for December 17, 1933)

Scripture Text: Acts 27 and 28. Golden Text: Phil. 4:14

MONDAY,

Arriving in Rome. Acts 28:11-22. "And so we went toward Rome!" The great missionary to the Gentiles at last reaches the Imperial City. But how different the occasion than what he possibly had dreamed. Instead of arriving with his party and seeking the synagogue of the Jews, he is quartered on Captoline Hill and the chief Jews come to him! He had appealed to Caesar to avoid being assassinated by his countrymen. He was dispatched on a 1500 mile voyage without being indicted. He had been shipwrecked, bitten by a reptile, but according to the angel: "Thou must be brought before Caesar." (Acts 27:24) How God's ways are higher than our ways! Entering the world capital chained to a soldier, the fearless preacher testified before Caesar's household, before the chief of the Jews, before his humble brethren in "The ...ith". Man's disappointment proves his disappointment!

TUESDAY

Preaching in Rome. Acts 28:23-31. "Some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not!" "Tis ever thus—the two-edged sword cuts both ways. Belief and unbelief are the chemical jars in which spoken truth is precipitated. "But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doeth evil, of the Jew first and also of the Gentile; but, glory, honor, and peace to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first and also to the Gentile—for there is no respect of persons with God!" (Rom. 2:8-11). When Paul preached in Rome, as elsewhere, "he expounded and testified the Kingdom of God, persuading them concerning JESUS, both out of the Law of Moses and out of the prophets!" He appealed to the authority of the revealed word!

WEDNESDAY

A Happy Prisoner. Phil. 1:12-21. "I am set for the defense of the Gospel ... and I therein rejoice, yea, and will rejoice. ... for I know that this shall turn to my salvation ... in nothing I shall be ashamed ... Christ shall be magnified in my body ... for to me to live is Christ—and to die is gain!" So wrote the Apostle during his imprisonment in Rome. He sought to make every circumstance eventuate in magnifying Christ, and was never petulant, never revengeful. Through his poise, his nobility of character, his sheer manhood, he won the respect of soldiers, seamen, business men, government officials, fellow prisoners—even his enemies, and thus cultivated the soil of human hearts, making them receptive to his message. He proved the Gospel by living it—even in prison!

THURSDAY

Faithfulness Rewarded. 2 Tim. 2:1-13. "I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory!" Salvation cum laudis—what a goal! The apostle disparages in another place (1 Cor. 3:15) being "saved yet so as by fire." Paul's ideal was "suffer and reign with him". James Gribble, another who endured wrote to his sister: "Your brother Jim is always busy. If he were a business man he might be a millionaire, but he will have much more than that in heaven where he wants all his treasures to be!" (Undaunted Hope, page 337). How beggarly will be the reward of many believers! The apostle echoes the words of the Master: "For their sakes I sanctify myself!" Would that every soldier of the cross so lived as not to give the suggestion of cheapness to the believer's reward!

FRIDAY

A Message to Romans. Rom. 1:1-18. What a message; we note but two points. "To all that are in Rome—beloved of God, called to be saints!" O the glory of the "high calling of God in Christ Jesus!" Paul desired the Romans to evaluate the Christian life, not on the basis of what must be given up, but on the basis of what he receives—"the free gift of God is eternal life!" Let us, too, proclaim the saved life in the light of John 1:12: "But as many as received him, to them gave he the power to become the sons of God!" Again, Paul cherished the "fellowship of kindred minds". He wrote that he longed to visit Rome's believers, "that I may be comforted together with you by the mutual faith both of you and me." The hero of the cross sought the simple fellowship of the naive believers in the city of the Caesars! Little wonder "the brethren" went forty miles out of Rome to Appii Forum to greet the prisoner!

SATURDAY

Love Fulfilling the Law. Rom. 13:8-14. What a world of trouble could have been avoided had both individuals and nations heeded, literally, the admonition of this scripture: "Owe no man anything but to love one another—for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law!" Although the Apostle wrote these words from Corinth, months before he was mobbed in Jerusalem and ex-tradited to Rome, he had the grace in his heart to exemplify this axiom in his social contacts. The erstwhile exponent of legalism came to assert "the letter killeth—the spirit maketh alive". The Christian life is a life of principle, not merely of rule. Justice is negative—"do not"; love is positive—"Thou shalt love ...!" Paul was no "clanging cymbal".

SUNDAY

The "Good Shepherd". Psalm 23. How comforting this "Shepherd Psalm" must have been to the prisoner as he faced martyrdom! The Psalmist's soliloquy: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil" is paralleled by the assurance of the Apostle: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand" ... "To depart and to be with Christ is far better" ... "I know him whom I have believed". Paul declared in Philip's home in Caesarea: "I am ready—not to be bound only—but also to die at Jerusalem for the Name of the Lord Jesus!" Fellow-believer, let us meet death as the going into the Presence of "that Great Shepherd of the Sheep" (Heb. 13:20), and say like Stephen: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!"

Is There a Smouldering Fire in Your Heart?

By Catherine N. Wilson, a member of the Senior C. E. of North Long Beach, California

"My son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandments:

"For length of days, and long life, and peace, shall they add to thee.

"Let not mercy and truth forsake thee: bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thine heart;

"So shalt thou find favour and good understanding in the sight of God and man." Prov. 3:1-4.

If you have named the name of Jesus Christ as your Saviour, God will give a fire to your Spirit, but it is up to you to keep this fire ablaze. We are told to write mercy and truth upon the table of our hearts. In 2 Cor. 3:3 we read: "Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart." Also in Jer. 17:1 we read: "The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart, and upon the horns of your altars."

I wonder if any of us have sin written upon the table of our heart. Each of us should thoroughly examine our heart and truly identify the contents. Have you lost interest in, or a desire for, spiritual satisfactions because the fire in your heart is dying down for lack of fuel? Do you desire in your heart to do the will of God? Or do you have a smouldering fire in your heart? If you no longer have these things written upon the table of your heart you are in a grave danger.

Many of us get one foot planted on the firm foundation of God and the other foot planted on Satan's unstable side. Are any of you in this grave situation? On which side are you going to fall? Will it be on God's firm foundation or on the Devil's instability? It is easier than most of us realize to fall on Satan's side because he never loses an opportunity to cause a child of God to fall.

It is quite evident, if the fire that God has given to our spirits is dying out, that we need more fuel. There are three things that will furnish fuel for smouldering heart fires. There is a plentiful store of fuel in the prayer closet. A closer heed to the daily habit of Bible study is like draught from heaven upon dull embers. Fellowship in worship and song and service with Christians will quickly enkindle the flames of devotion and draw you closer to God's firm foundation.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. Prov. 3:4.

I wonder why some of us even make the effort to lean upon our own understanding when we have the wonderful privilege of trusting in the Lord. In Psalms 37, verses 3, 4 and 5 we read: "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.

"Delight thyself also in the Lord and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass."

"In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." Prov. 3, 4.

What a wonderful thing it is to have God directing our paths. Are you allowing God to direct your paths? In Jer. 10, 23 we read: "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Every one of our ways should be God's way. We should take heed of our ways every day and commit

Missionary Items from Far and Near

Gathered by Samuel M. Zwemer

"Re-Thinking Missions"

The attempt to push the sale of this discredited volume with its unevangelical basis and humanistic motive in the hope of arousing deeper interest in missions is futile and pathetic. We are told in the new announcement by the National Committee (see "The Presbyterian" of November 9), that this book is "potential leaven which must be imbedded in the thought of the local churches." God forbid! To do so would be the death-knell of the enterprise. Rather we should search the house of God for this kind of leaven to get rid of it. It is like the leaven of malice and wickedness. One would have thought that a volume characterized by the North China Herald as "Re-tinkering Missions," by Toyohiko Kagawa as "Christianity without the Cross," by Dr. Visser t'Hooft as "spineless Christianity," a volume repudiated by a number of the leading mission Boards after it had been riddled by criticism in the religious press—that this volume would have been suffered to die on the bookshelf. But Liberalism has found in it a useful piece of propaganda. The erstwhile two dollar volume is now offered for twenty-five cents complete and in milder abbreviated form for four cents a copy—surely a bargain. Great is the Diana of the Ephesians! We learn that in spite of earnest protest by leading missionaries, the book has also been translated into Chinese not, it is true, at the expense of the National Christian Council, but with their approval. One is almost tempted to use the sharp words of the Sunday School Times and speak of a "Betrayal Commission." Suppose that all Christians agreed it was time to rethink the life of Jesus Christ, would they select for circulation and translation into Chinese, Strauss or Klausner or Renan? Why repudiate the gospel in order to evangelize? There is no advantage in broadcasting to the world what Dr. Warfield so well characterized as "Christless Christianity."

The Spirit of the Martyrs

The Chinese Church in Honan has been in the crucible of persecution by Red Communists. The Rev. W. W. Gibson of the English Methodists tells of the martyrdom of one of their devoted workers, Yuan Kwan-jen:

"When an armed guard of the Reds entered the chapel and told him to accompany them outside, he did not suspect any immediate trouble, and, at the street door, seeing it was raining, he asked the escort politely if he might return for his umbrella. 'You won't want an umbrella very long,' they replied, and Yuan knew he was in evil case. Outside the gate of the street he was told to kneel down. The broad-bladed sword of the executioner descended on his neck, and in a moment his earthly ministry was over. The circuit steward heard of the tragedy, and greatly daring, he went to the spot, gathered up the remains of his friend and pastor, and buried them in a corner of his farm."

"Give up your hymn-book and Bible," was the order to an old member when the Reds entered her village. They were exasperated when she cheerfully replied, "Take them if you must; I can sing most of the hymns from memory, and the teaching of the Bible is in my heart."

"What if we kill you?"

"You will only send me to the Heavenly Halls, where I want to be," was the reply of this faithful and devoted Christian convert.

"It soon became known that the first attack of the Reds was directed against Christian literature, and a woman whose home in the country was a 'church in a house,' hearing of the approach of the enemy, gathered up the Testaments and hymn-books, packed them in an empty paraffin oil tin and hid them in a cave until the danger was past."

Newspaper Evangelism in China

One of the China Inland missionaries reports from Central China:

"The work of Newspaper Evangelism has continued throughout the year, and God has seen fit to use this means for the propagation of the Gospel and salvation of souls. There have been well over a hundred responses, either by letter or in person, to the daily tract placed in the paper, and several decisions for Christ. Some of these have gone away and we have not heard from them, but three have enrolled as enquirers and are preparing for baptism. Two of these, one a teacher of English in a law-school, the other a Middle School graduate, were contemplating suicide when they read the tract. Both are, we believe, genuinely converted. The latter, a young man of twenty, has broken clean with his past sinful life and has been enrolled in the Bible School as an auditor. His change of life and disposition, keen delight in God's Word, readiness to testify, all point to a definite experience of salvation. He has felt God's call and yielded his life to him for his service. The tract that arrested the teacher's attention is on the Lord's Second Coming. This doctrine has become the most precious truth in this man's life and is his greatest hope. The contract with the same newspaper has been renewed for another year."

Foreign Missionary Barrels

BARRELS OF MONEY FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS! That is what it will take. Yes, BARRELS OF MONEY. The need is imperative! It is so apparent that it is not necessary to recite the different items that make it up. PRAYER CHANGES THINGS! But, there are needs in our Foreign work that only MONEY CAN SUPPLY: Prayer will bring the money, but the money is an absolute necessity. If we are to maintain our present work with no recall of missionaries or closing of stations there must be BARRELS OF MONEY FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS AT EASTER! Then,—if we are to advance, even in the least, there must be more of them. How shall they be secured?

BRETHERN FOREIGN MISSIONARY BARRELS

The Foreign Missionary Society of the Brethren church will furnish the BARRELS. Free of charge! Sent prepaid! They are neat, wooden barrels, sealed with our Foreign Missionary name. We send them to the churches, either through the Pastor or someone whom the church may designate. We ask that you see that they are distributed to those persons, families, or societies asking for them. Then, they are to be brought in at Easter. They can then be opened and the money collected be a supplement to what regularly is given. THEY CAN THEN BE SEALED AGAIN AND USED ANOTHER YEAR. The Society will furnish the seals for another year.

NOW! WORK THE PLAN!

It is one thing to PLAN THE WORK, but another to WORK THE PLAN. Will your church work the plan? Will you get busy, pastor and ascertain how many barrels your church will use? Use the best plan that will work most effectively in your own field, but get busy at once and send us your order for the Barrels. Pastors, churches, we are depending upon you! The Lord is also. Send all your orders to Rev. Charles H. Ashman, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, R. D. 5. He has been appointed and authorized by the Foreign Missionary Trustees to care for this. These barrels ought to be given out just as soon as possible now. Easter will soon be here. Let us gather in the pennies, nickles, dimes, etc. in the BRETHERN FOREIGN MISSIONARY BARRELS.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

THE REVIVAL AT MOUNT PLEASANT

Two years ago we worked in a meeting at Highland, Pennsylvania, with Brother W. Grey and it was a real pleasure to work with him again in his new work at Mount Pleasant. This Mount Pleasant church is now over thirty years old and has had a rather checkered career. At various times the congregation has grown fine, and then again it would dwindle till it had a struggle for existence, never seeming to have that ability to maintain its growth.

However, since the State Mission Board took a hand in the direction and support of this church, things have changed. A new standard of Christian living and service has come to pass, the interior of the church has been renovated and made most attractive. Much of this has been due to the leader the Board selected for the work.

Brother Grey is a man whose life is clean and whose whole purpose is to have his church good rather than great. The business men of the town hold him in highest regard. The spiritual standard brought about in this church has won the admiration of local ministers and congregations. It is beginning to mean something to belong to the Brethren church in Mount Pleasant now. That is a name worth considering in any church. Brother Grey is a real soul winner, a hard worker, a man of God, and that is saying plenty.

There have been some very fine people brought into the church in recent days and there will be many more in the future as the church is getting a name for standing for a real gospel. The people of the church are very hospitable and faithful. We greatly enjoyed their many favors extended to us. Our home while there was with the pastor and his good wife, and this was also a privilege to enjoy once more.

There is a real future for this church in this community if they will all with one accord live closely to our Lord, be faithful to the church and in witnessing for Christ. The pastor has great plans for the immediate future and they will be realized if all his folks join shoulders with him at the wheel. May our Lord richly bless these children of the Lord and give them vision and strength to win a great victory.

We had plenty of bad weather and good weather, small crowds and good crowds, all of which are found in the battles of the gospel. God giveth the victory.

R. PAUL MILLER.

FOR SCOTT, KANSAS

The work here is moving along in a way that is encouraging to the workers. Attendance at the regular services is increasing, and if our people could all have employment we would have a happy group of good workers. Sunday morning every two weeks we have a unified service, which furnishes an increased attendance.

Then this service is out in time for me to go to Godfrey just in time to preach after their Sunday school. This works very nicely and some of the Godfrey people attend the evening service here in the city.

The writer was completely, but agreeably surprised by about forty members and friends, invading his home at about 8:00 P. M., singing a song as they entered.

They offered congratulations on his birthday, being November 24th, he also received some lovely chrysanthemums, a decorated cake, and many other useful gifts.

The visitors brought their refreshments, and all had a good time together. The writer was called upon for a speech, but he was not altogether prepared, however, he expressed his appreciation for all kind remembrances.

On Sunday evening of November 26th the Signal Lights gave a missionary play: "The House of Do What You Can." This play occupied about half of the evening hour and it was followed by a brief message by the writer. A large audience enjoyed the evening program and the promise of some new recruits were received.

We are encouraged with the outlook, but crave an interest in the prayers of the brotherhood.

WEST KITTANNING CHURCH

Kittanning, Pennsylvania

The Lord has been richly blessing this church in the past few months, and to him we lift our voices in praise this Thanksgiving season. In the Spring we organized a "Young Men's Gospel Team", and they have been very active in Christian work. There are eight young men on the team, ranging in age from 15 to 30. They have held evangelistic meetings in churches, schoolhouses and barns. Personal work is encouraged, tracts are distributed, and souls have been saved. Every one of the young men takes his turn at conducting the meeting and speaking. All of them have prayed, testified, and given messages in these public meetings. In a nearby schoolhouse, nine souls confessed Christ in their one week of services, and several of these have united with the church. For two weeks in September they held a meeting in a barn situated about one mile from the church on a State Road. They constructed wooden benches, installed electric lights, built a pulpit, had a large sign painted for the outside, bought hymn books, canvassed the entire community and distributed tracts, advertised the services in the local paper, and conducted 15 services themselves; the pastor preaching only once. The meetings blessed the boys and helped the local church. Five of the eight boys were converted and joined the church in March of this year! The best thing for new converts is to put them to work. We need more "Lay Evangelism" of this type.

In October the pastor conducted a "Harvest Home Week" service, with preaching services every night, being assisted on two of the evenings by local ministers. The week closed with "Harvest Home Day", at which time the roll of the entire membership was called, and loyalty to the church emphasized. The financial goal for the needs of the local church was more than met through the help of the Lord and the sac-rice of the members and friends. Rev. Claud Studebaker of our Pittsburgh church was the special speaker for the afternoon, and in the evening began a series of six Bible Conference Lectures on the Book of Ephesians. This second week of meetings was well attended. People brought their Bibles and note-books, they studied and read their Bibles, and all received a blessing. It is the aim of this church to have one evangelistic service and one Bible conference each year. Brother Studebaker quickly won his way to the hearts of the people, and in his kindly way led them through a carefully planned series of Bible studies. Although the meeting was not evangelistic, yet several folks publicly rededicated their lives to the Lord.

On Friday of last week we had a special Home Mission Program in the church. The children gave an exercise on "Foundation Builders" and sang the song. The pastor gave a short message on Home Missions and the Senior Sisterhood girls directed by their patroness, Mrs. Hamilton Bowser, presented the Brethren Play, "Dollar for Dollar."

The Young People's Christian Endeavor Society has elected new officers and is steadily growing. Twenty-seven of the members attended the Northwestern Pennsylvania District Brethren C. E. Rally in Pittsburgh on November 18. The record for the Sunday school attendance has been broken three times in the past year. The Rally Day mark of 338 on October 1, was the highest record. The superintendent, Mr. Ira Bennett, is working hard. Three new Sunday school rooms were built in the spring and still we do not have adequate room for the scholars.

Who said there was a "depression"? We Christians better write it—"do-press-on".

ROBERT D. CREES.

WASHINGTON, D. C. REVIVAL

On Monday night, November 6th, the revival at the First Brethren church, Washington, D. C. began. It closed on Sunday night, November the 19th. Rev. Frank G. Coleman, pastor of the First Brethren church of Hagerstown, Maryland, was the evangelist.

Although the public meetings lasted only two weeks, there had been a week of intensive personal evangelism carried on prior to the opening of the meetings. This was supervised by the writer and in it the prospect list was rather carefully visited. This personal visitation, no doubt, had much to do with the interest and harvest manifest when the meetings got under way. And great blessings came to those who actually did the work of personal evangelism. They were conscious of doing the thing that their Lord is calling all of his disciples to do. And this is the thing which seems to be fast becoming a lost art in the church and the results are tragic indeed.

The meeting opened with about the largest opening revival crowd we have ever had. The church was comfortably filled. Thus the outlook at the beginning was encouraging. Brother H. C. Dooley, for long an active and beloved worker in the local church, was the revival song leader, and he gave a splendid account of himself during the meeting. He was ably assisted by a chorus choir and the cooperation of the entire congregation.

Evangelist Coleman from the beginning of the meeting preached straight from the Book to the hearts of his hearers. The folks liked him, and when it came time for him to say "Good-bye" at the close of the meeting he was leaving many friends behind him in Washington. There were no high pressure methods used in getting people to accept Christ. There was no effort at sensationalism which has done no little harm to the cause of evangelism in general. Brother Coleman depended upon the simple declaration of the whole council of God and left it to the Spirit of God to finish the work in human hearts. This method was appreciated on the part of the folks here.

In spite of a record cold snap for November, the attendance was good at all the meetings. It was difficult to get the un-saved to come in large numbers, but some of them came, and surely they heard the Gospel and some of them embraced it.

The fine interest and cooperation of the young people during the meeting was indeed gratifying. They attended in a body each Monday night and provided a special feature. Also on the last Friday night, which was designated Young People's Night, there was a great crowd of young people on hand. Thus it would seem that young people may be interested in the things of God if properly challenged.

We were favored during the two weeks by delegations from two Brethren churches outside of Washington. On the first Sunday night 33 Brethren with Brother J. L. Bowman their pastor, came down from the Linwood, Maryland, church. We expect to return this visit during the Linwood revival under Dr. Charles Bame, which is now in progress. Also one car load came over 130 miles from the Cumberland, Maryland, church, one night during the second week. Their pastor, Brother Charles Wakeman, was with them. We appreciate this friendly spirit.

It is impossible to compute the results of such a meeting as this. We can never tell the influence, much of it unseen which follows such a meeting. For one thing it advertises the church. Many strangers came among us for the first time. Then there is the benefit that comes in the strengthening of the spiritual lives of the believers. As one indirect result of the meeting a Gospel Team of young man is being formed to witness for Christ wherever opportunity beckons. Then there were over forty who came forward for confession or re-consecration of life during the meetings. At this writing we have baptized and taken into the church 17 of this number and other baptismal services are to follow in the near future. For all the results seen and unseen we are thankful to God. We trust that this revival has not been an end in itself but simply an added impetus to go forward in the work of evangelism throughout all the year.

Brother Coleman, we are glad for your coming to Washington. We might add that Brother Coleman came to us at no little sacrifice to himself, inasmuch as when he came he left his wife ill at home. And during his stay here she was brought to Washington for an examination by a specialist and returned to her home. Join with us in prayer for the physical welfare of Sister Coleman.

As we write these words we are anticipating a visit to our home from Professor and Mrs. Black from Ashland College. They will be with us over the Thanksgiving vacation. The Blacks are friends of college days and Mrs. Kent and I will count it real joy to have them with us for this visit.

The Washington church sends greetings to all the Brethren.

HOMER A. KENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington is truly a southern city. One meets here that warm congeniality found only in the south. Then, too, every American has an unusual pride in the Capitol City. This accounts for the many foreign cars seen upon its streets. We had visited Washington on more than one occasion and did not take much time for sight-seeing during the meeting.

This was our first meeting with the Kents and while we had known them for some years yet had never discovered all of their fine qualities. Brother Kent is "A workman that needeth not to be ashamed"; an ideal pastor and a perfect Christian gentleman. Sister Kent was hindered in attending the meeting because of sickness in the home, but she was a great help in prayer and in making a home for the evangelist. I enjoyed every minute of my stay in their home.

We had met many of the Washington Brethren in our District Conferences and Brethren reunions, but to be entertained in their homes was to know them better and to learn to love them more. Certainly they are a wonderful people. Under the pastor's direction they had spent a week in visitation work before the meeting opened. This accounts in large measure for the results obtained in the meeting. This church is blessed with a fine group of consecrated leaders. The musical part of the program under the direction of Brother H. C. Dooley was far above the average. He in turn was assisted by an able pianist and as loyal a chorus as ever helped in an evangelistic meeting. The daily entertainment of pastor and evangelist was more like an endurance test than anything else. We were out every day to two wonderful meals put up in true Southern style.

The Brethren Church has a wonderful opportunity here. We are only sorry that the Brotherhood did not respond in a more generous way to the call of National Conference to help build a Memorial Brethren Church in the Capitol City. It was their intention to build and dedicate the new building in time for this meeting but were held up in negotiating a loan. They are expecting to go ahead in the next few months. The way the Church is growing we doubt if the proposed plans will be sufficient for their needs.

The meeting opened November 6th and continued for two weeks, closing on Sunday night, November 19th. Aside from the thermometer sliding to the lowest point ever known in Washington for November, and staying there for better than a week, the weatherman treated us fairly decent. No complaint can be made of the attendance. Here again records were smashed. The largest crowds ever seen in the church crowded in during the meeting. The first Sunday night a delegation of 31 from Linwood with their pastor, J. L. Bowman, came to swell the crowd. They brought along their singers and sang a chorus number. The last Sunday night without a delegation the crowd overflowed the accommodations. We were especially glad to have in the audience on this last day, a member of the Sunnyside, Washington church in the person of Mrs. Sargent, daughter of Brother Fred Westcott. We know the good work of the Washington church will take care of her.

One of the high spots of the meeting was the organization of a Young Men's Gospel Team. This came from the young men themselves. These young men are on fire for their Lord and are out trying to lead others to Christ. The young people of the S. C. E. were a great help in the meeting. They have 75 or 80 in their C. E. Society.

We shall ever cherish the memory of this meeting and the warm, beautiful friendships formed as one of the happiest experiences of our ministry. May God richly bless the church at this place.

IN THE BLUE RIDGE MOUNTAINS

Editor, The Evangelist:

Last Sunday I was in the mountains, in the Blue Ridge, and preached in what is called Brown's Hollow for the Church of the Brethren. In the afternoon I went over to Copp's Chapel or church. Brother John Cline of the Church of the Brethren went with me.

Missions are failing in the mountains. The only way to save them now is to preach without money and without price. Let us go. It is a sin not to go. The greatest work the Brethren church has ever had to do is being faced right now. Let us be up and at it, not with a growl, but with a whistle and a song. And don't forget to pray. The harder the job, the better we like it. Let us go for Christ's sake, lest we sin.

A. J. RAMEY, Manassas, Virginia.

RESULTS OF A CHURCH DANCE

Some years ago a young girl, fourteen years old, who had consecrated her life to Jesus Christ, stood as it were within the portals of a church. Her uplifted countenance recorded sweet childhood, and promised noble womanhood. Her heart was thrilled with the idealism of innocent girlhood. As she looked upon the Church her eyes were bright with eager expectancy.

In all probability this was the trend of her thoughts:

"It is here that I shall learn more of him, my gentle Saviour, whom my soul has learned to love. I shall kneel at the altar and in spirit feel his tender touch upon my head. I shall look up into his lovely eyes and find the joy and gladness that only he can give. Within the Church I shall be sheltered from the nameless things I fear that so fill the world with sorrow and tears."

None but God knows the reverses, the intricate details of this child's life in the few years that followed. But at the age of nineteen she was a remorseful, broken-hearted, sin-crushed girl. She wrote to one of the high officials of a well known Christian society for young people, begging the privilege of reaching the ear of youth through him. Her letter for the most part was a heart appeal to boys and girls against carnal pleasures, and a prayer to be true to their Saviour despite the allurements of the world. However, one paragraph was directed to the Church in general, for she said it was at a dance given in a church parlor when she was only fourteen years old that she took her first step away from God:

"Where is your Christ? Is he an idol? Is he an image? Is there not enough real joy in religion to make young people happy without these things?" (referring to the card parties, dances and so forth). "Oh, when will the Church awaken and get close enough to her Saviour to feel his heart of love beating, and find in him her pleasure!"

Just a few days after sending this letter

She Committed Suicide

Oh, the mute appeal of this girl to the professing watchmen of the Church of Christ! She felt that somehow, somewhere, the Church had broken faith with her, had actually started her on her downward way! She had come to a place where she wanted only to crawl away and end it all! But even with these her last sorrowful thoughts and reflections, she remembered those who were still as pure and innocent as she once had been. For these she stretchd forth her arms to the Church, pleading with the under shepherds to conform to her ideals of what the Church ought to be by letting the great Shepherd have preeminence in the midst of his flock.

This girls' letter was copied and sent forth, and today there are thousands in circulation. From the misty background of the past she has stepped into the imagery of the present. Her eyes are luminous with tears, her little hands implore, her childish voice trembles with the pertinent question, "Where is your Christ?"

Is the Church that enfolds us and our little ones clothed in the beauty and strength of Christ?

Jesus laid down, not so much a set of specific rules of "does" and "don'ts", but great principles which require a simple standard of godly living. It is only the Church complacent with secondary principles who subjects herself to the reproaches of fallen youth. It is therefore a duty of tremendous import that they who seek the greatest good of the Church keep themselves hidden away with Christ in God, where they will find the highest level of righteousness, the warmest atmosphere of divine love, and the deepest operations of the Holy Spirit.—Edith May Evetts in "Moody Monthly."

THESE DOGS DO NOT BARK

SIBERIAN sled-dogs are reputed to be the best in the world, are short-haired and generally a kind of gray—might be called mouse-colored. They seem to be more wolf than dog, and never bark, but howl like a wolf.

Considering their short hair, I believe you will find them to average larger than the Alaskan sled-dog, writes Captain Oliver, in Adventure Magazine. Teams generally average about eight dogs, and they pull sleds across the tundra in summer as well as winter. It seems to be the jobs of half-grown boys to break these dogs.

Their food is generally some kind of frozen fish, but in winter, when food is scarce, their lot is generally a hard one, and they often starve.

The natives seem to have no love for them. I landed on King Island one summer, and found the small island infested with dogs. All the natives had left for the summer, as was their yearly habit, and the dogs were left to shift for themselves. Many were almost starved.—Presbyterian.

THANKSGIVING

By Arthur R. Baer

(This poem was not discovered among our copy in time for our Thanksgiving number, but it ought not to be too late to express gratitude, in fact, every day ought to be a real thanksgiving day.—Editor.)

"Lord, we thank Thee now for our health and wealth

Peace and sweet content in this land so free."

Thus each year these words from our lips arise;

Then feel that we have rendered thanks to thee.

If through our efforts we seemed rich and strong,

And thoughtlessly we turned to self from thee,

Content to lean upon the strength of men

And never lift our eyes in love to thee:

Oh, may thy mighty arm in wrath be stayed,

Yet purge from us our self-sufficiency,

That in a humbled lot—our vision cleared;

We'll see our strength as weakness beside thee.

Now that the scales have fallen from our eyes,

We thank thee Lord, that thou didst make us see

The sordid things that we enthroned as gods;

And mockingly we brought our thanks to thee.

So with a spirit pleasing in thy sight

And hearts atuned; now may our lips speak praise

And render thanks to thee from lifted hearts,

On this the best of all Thanksgiving Days.

them unto the Lord. God is a jealous God and it is for our own good that he is jealous. If God were to be less strict with us, it would soon result in our own degradation and ruin. Every one of God's laws reach down to the very foundation of character and up to the very heights of prosperity. A thought, whether we realize it or not, is the root of everything we do. And so we immediately arrive at the conclusion that in order to acknowledge God in all our ways, we must first acknowledge him in all of our thoughts. Every thought that we think is heard aloud in heaven. The vaguest imaginations are seen in heaven.

In Phil. 4, 8 Paul tells us some very definite things to think about: "Finally brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." It should be the daily discipline of each of us to give thought to God and to the virtues which flow from him. Neither should we be unstable in our ways. Dependableness is a fine trait in character. Can God depend on you? The apostle Peter is a good example of this. We read in some portions of the scriptures how unstable Peter was in his ways, and then in other portions we see how Peter acquired faith like granite. Peter should give us great encouragement if we are tempted to stray from the center of God's will.

"Be not wise in thine own eyes; fear the Lord, and depart from evil." Prov. 3:7.

In Romans 12:16 we read: "Be of the same mind one toward another. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits." Some people deliberately choose the way of falsehood in preference to the way of truth. Their visions cheat them and their wills become twisted so that evil seems good to them. We are to flee the path of evil for it is the path of death.

"Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase:

"So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.

"My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord; neither be weary of his correction:

"For whom the Lord loveth he correcteth; even as a father the son in whom he delighteth." Prov. 3:9-12.

Do you put God first in your life? Do you despise the chastening of the Lord? Reproof from God strengthens us. God may test us but he will never forsake us.

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding." Prov. 3, 13.

Every one of us need the wisdom that can be obtained by meditating on the word of God. In Prov. 1:5 we read, "A wise man will hear, and will increase learning; and a man of understanding shall attain unto wise counsels." Prov. 1:7 says, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom and instruction." I wonder how many of us are just a bit foolish? Our grandfathers and grandmothers read the Bible for the wonderful promises it contains. A large majority of the younger generations either neglect the Bible entirely, or it is used as a point of departure for theological speculation. The older generation sought help from God's Word in this difficult art of living. Most of the younger generations profess to pursue abstract truths. It is many times harder for young people to live true Christian lives now than it was for our grandfathers and grandmothers. Why are we so cock-sure that we know it all that we make the grave mistake of not seeking God's help and wisdom? This very thing often leads young lives to destruction. To store one's mind with the scripture is to pursue the most profitable course of education. Real wisdom is in portable form in the Bible. Wisdom must go deeper than words. Word-wisdom is only surface wisdom. In religion mere word-wisdom is to be deplored. Religion must be genuine, through and through; it must be from the heart. We must worship Christ in spirit and in truth.

"Surely he scorneth the scorners: but he giveth grace unto the lowly.

"The wise shall inherit glory: but shame shall be the promotion of fools." Prov. 3:34 and 35.

"For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Luke 14:11.

Christ advises us to deliberately seek out the humblest positions in life. This is exactly counter to common custom. Most men push themselves forward and try for the chief places. The wise man will not put himself where there is no chance for promotion but where there is no chance for demotion. Pride has many falls but humility never falls. Pride provokes envy but humility arouses admiration and liking. Life is too short in any case to warrant exertion for worldly honor. We have only one life to live on this earth. How are you living your life? Do you seek wisdom from God's word? The favor of God is infinitely more to be desired than all the glory of this world, and that favor goes to the lowly. If we will only study ourselves, recognize our failures and shortcomings and faults, we can obtain a lowliness of mind.

in the U. S. A. write from Japan that you cannot "baptize paganism":

As far as our knowledge of conditions in Japan goes, native Christians do not concern themselves particularly about salvaging the useful elements in the religions they have abandoned, finding all needed good in their new faith. The fact is that seemingly identical ideas in the minds of Christians and non-Christians upon careful investigation prove to be radically different, because of the implications. After all, pagan pantheism and Christian Theism, though capable of being combined in a "mechanical mixture" cannot coalesce after the manner of a "chemical compound." The man-centered, prudential, hedonistic morality of paganism will not fit into the same scheme with the God-centered, altruistic, idealistic morality of Christianity. As in an age of railroads, automobiles and flying-machines, we have scrapped palanquins and horse-carriages, not because they are bad, but because better conveyances have come into existence; so ethical and religious systems implying special and hereditary privileges, caste, absolutism, serfdom and mass-ignorance are no longer suitable in an age of "liberty, equality and fraternity." Our motto must always be: "Behold, I make all things new."—(Rev. 21:5).—The Presbyterian.

got into the swamp. Your shoes and suit were covered with mud, and I had to work very hard for over an hour to get them clean. This is your first visit to grandma's and you have got into trouble every day of your visit.

"Yesterday Uncle Alfred told you not to go near the pigs, and you climbed the side of the pen to look at them and fell over into the mud and dirt. The other day you took down the bars and let the cows all out into the road and grandfather and Uncle Alfred had a long walk to get them when they found it out and hard work driving them home. Grandmother thinks I am to blame that you do not mind any better, and that makes it very hard for me."

Bobby did not want mother blamed for what he knew was his own fault; so he hugged mother very, very hard and promised that the very next time he would surely do just as she said.

"Very well," said mother, "run out on the piazza and sit on the steps until I come. We are going to Aunt Mary's to spend the day and I want you to keep clean. I am going to help grandma pack a basket of good things while Uncle Alfred gets the car ready."

Bobby sat down on the steps. This time he was going to mind mother. There were so many interesting things to see he did not mind waiting a bit. He sat with his chin in his hand, waiting and watching.

He saw the white clouds sailing by and amused himself in trying to make animals and people out of the shapes. Now one looked like a big, shaggy dog; then it changed into a hump-backed camel, and later into a galloping horse.

Then he looked out into the grassy yard. Over in the hen yard he could see the hens dusting themselves in the dirt or pecking at tiny bugs on the ground.

All along in front of the piazza was grandmother's garden, filled with sweet and fragrant old-fashioned flowers. All at once, watching them, Bobby sat up straight. What was that flying above one of the flowers? It must be a butterfly. He looked and listened. Yes, he could hear the buzz, buzz of the bees as they dug deep into the flowers after the precious honey, and the butterfly must be after honey too. How he would like to see him nearer, and Bobby tiptoed off the steps onto the grass so as not to scare it.

But just as he almost was near enough to touch it, the butterfly spread his wings and flew away, and after him went Bobby, over the green grass of the yard, with eyes and thoughts on nothing but the pretty butterfly, until crash he went into a white house that sat with several others on a long board held up from the ground by wooden posts.

Over went the white house, and out from it came a cloud of angry bees. How they buzzed and stung, as they flew all around him and landed on his face and hands and legs. Bobby yelled as loud as he could and grandfather and Uncle Alfred and grandmother and mother all came running.

When they saw what was the matter, Uncle Alfred ran to the cellar and came back with a torch blazing with some stuff that made a thick, black smoke. He had tied a veil around his head over his hat and put on thick gloves. Right into the angry bees he went, brushing them away from Bobby, and the thick black smoke made them stupid so they dropped to the ground.

At last Bobby was safe in the house with grandmother and mother bathing his swollen face and hands and legs. How they ached and stung! He sobbed and sobbed until at last the medicine grandmother had given him began to make him sleepy and he dropped off to sleep.

"Poor little boy," said mother, looking at him, "I don't think after this lesson I shall have any more trouble with his minding me. He will lose the day at Aunt Mary's and it will be a week before he can see out of his eyes and use his hands comfortably. Yes, I am sure he will always mind me after this."

And Bobby always did.—Children at Work.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

MELVIN-STEINER—On Thursday, Nov. 9, at 6 P. M., at Smithville, Miss. Dacie Reta Steiner and Rolland Fort Melvin were joined in marriage by the writer. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Alice Steiner of Rittman and is a faithful member of the Smithville Brethren church. The groom, whose parents live in Tennessee, holds a responsible position with the Packard Company at Rittman. For the present they will make their home with the bride's mother. A large circle of friends wish them "Bon Voyage." May they walk with the Lord in the Light of His Word.
G. C. CARPENTER.

BOOTON-PALMER—At the close of the morning church service, on October 8, 1933 at Fort Scott, Kansas, Miss Nina Palmer and Mr. Walter Batoon were united in the bonds of holy matrimony.

All but about ten of the congregation had departed and a couple came forward to the writer and asked that the service be continued, and it was so.

They are both members of our Christian Endeavor Society and Miss Nina served very efficiently, as president for several terms.

We are glad to announce that they will continue to reside in Fort Scott, therefore we will still enjoy their attendance and cooperation in the work of the church. A very large circle of friends are now wishing them much joy and prosperity, as they journey through life as one.
L. G. WOOD.

BENSHOFF-RICHARDS—Dean J. Benchoff and Miss Gertrude I. Richards, both of Johnstown, Pa., were united in marriage in that city, October 14, 1933. The ceremony was performed at 10:30 A. M. in the (Catholic) Methodist Episcopal church by the undersigned, uncle of the bridegroom, assisted by Rev. C. P. Silladay in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends of the well-known couple. The double ring ceremony was used.

The bride was graduated from the Johnstown High School in the class of 1926, and from the State Teachers' College at Indiana, Pa., in 1928, since which time she has been employed in the public schools. The bridegroom graduated from the Johnstown High School in 1927, and from the University of Pittsburgh in 1931, receiving the bachelor of science degree. For two years he was employed in public and private accounting work. In September he entered Ashland College as assistant to the business department in accounting and business law. These young people have the best wishes of their many friends. They will make their home in Ashland, Ohio.
W. C. BENSHOFF.

IN THE SHADOW

LICHTY—Elias E. Lichty, the eldest son of S. A. and Cevilla Lichty, was born May 21, 1860 at Somerset, Pennsylvania, and died at his home in Carleton, Ohio, October 6, 1933, at the age of 72 years, 8 months and 85 days. Nearly fifty years ago he came to Nebraska, settling in Carleton in the latter 80's. He was married on September 5, 1889 at Berlin, Pa., to Rebecca M. Musser, daughter of Jacob and Mary Musser, charter members of the Berlin Brethren church, by Elder J. H. Kuepper and immediately established their residence in Carleton. To this union was born one son, Ralph A. Lichty. At the age of four Myrtle Frost was taken into the home and reared to young womanhood.

It was 53 years ago under the preaching of Elder S. H. Bashor, when he made the good confession and was baptized into the Brethren church. He has always been active and interested in the welfare of the church and his friends. He was called upon to serve as a member of the Board of Trustees of Ashland College which position he acceptably filled and for a number of years was a member of the District Mission Board. He was a diligent Bible student and a teacher in the Sunday school. He had been a subscriber of The Brethren Evangelist and other Brethren publications for the past fifty years.

His father and mother, three sisters and one brother have preceded him beyond the veil. Those surviving besides his over-faithful wife, son and daughter and six grandchildren, are his sister, Mrs. S. J. Lichty; and brother, J. W. Lichty, four nieces and two nephews, many cousins and a host of friends and neighbors.

Funeral services were held at the Brethren church on Wednesday, November 8th, with Elder Kuepper in charge, assisted by Rev. W. R. Deeter, with interment in the Carleton cemetery.

WHEN BOBBY LEARNED TO MIND

By Emma Florence Bush

"Bobby," sighed mother "you will never learn to mind. You do not pay any attention to what I say. Some day you will get into trouble that will be hard to get out of."

Bobby was sorry to grieve his mother. He put his arms around her and hugged her. "Never mind, mother," he said, "I will try after this, really. Next time I will do as you say."

"But it is this time that counts, Bobby," said mother. "It does not do a bit of good to intend to obey me next time. You promised me not to leave the yard, and you went after some red flowers you say, and

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

A VERY Important Matter

In the midst of the furore over Repeal, while the politicians are trying to figure out a way to get rid of the saloon and keep its "benefits" at the same time, the public is in danger of overlooking a proposed measure that is truly revolutionary, namely the new Pure Food and Drug Bill. It proposes not only to enforce strictly the matter of "truth on the label", but also to make it a punishable offense for any seller to misrepresent or make false claims for any "food or medical preparation" in advertising either through the printed page or the radio.

Every sane person who tunes in on the radio has been annoyed by the programs of a certain "insane concoction" which if drunk according to directions, will cure anything from flat feet to bald heads. If the new bill is passed, all this sort of thing will end so far as the federal government is able to control matters.

Of course, all the patent medicine quacks, the drug stores that sell their dopes, and the publications which profit from their advertisements, are busy with hired lobbies to destroy the measure, or at least pull its teeth.

It is one of the encouraging signs of the times that such a bill is even proposed.

NOTICE Who Owns the Building

In a suburb of a western city recently two churches stood side by side, one a Catholic and one a Protestant. One of the buildings caught fire and was destroyed. The other congregation offered to share its building until the burned church could be reconstructed. Newspapers played up the generous offer as an indication of the growth of religious toleration.

Now which of the churches, do you suppose was burned? The reader will need but one guess. The Roman Catholic was Protestant, but he does not loan his temples to the latter. The Catholic is always on the receiving end in such acts of "toleration".

THE Strange Lure of Rome

High Church Episcopalians, with all the fanfare and ritual of Rome itself, celebrate the centenary of the Oxford movement by holding a "solemn Eucharist in honor of the Blessed Sacrament." About 10,000 people were present when the "solemn high mass" was held at the Municipal Convention Hall in Philadelphia. Nearly 1000 bishops, clergymen, monks, acolytes and choir boys took part in the service.

Canon Bernard Iddings Bell declared to the assembly that "it is the hope of most Catholics (including High Church Episcopalians like Canon Bell himself) that when unity of faith is realized, it will be achieved under the earthly guidance of him who sits in Peter's seat, the Bishop of Bishops, the Bishop of Rome."

How strange and fatal is the lure of Rome! Men of intelligence, pride and independence seem ready to forget everything when fascinated by "the Woman arrayed in purple and scarlet." Only one thing obstructs the "unity" for which Canon Bell longs; that is the refusal of the Pope to recognize as valid the ordination of those churchmen who are outside "the fold." On the day that this problem is solved, as it will be, you will witness a mighty procession marching toward the city of "seven hills."

It is only fair to say that some real Protestants still remain in the Episcopal body, and they characterize the Philadelphia meeting as "an act of betrayal of a sacred trust."

THE Biological Battahon of Death

The new professor of military science in Berlin writes. "Inasmuch as gas and the horrible effects of modern artillery have robbed war of all its chivalry, biology will be justified in enabling it to exterminate entire nations. We shall have recourse to the poisoning of drinking water with typhus germs, by means of fleas, and to the spreading of cholera by artificially contaminated rats."

"Biological warfare is the kind appropriate for disarmed nations. When a race is driven to desperation, its only way out is to attempt the seeming impossible and, without the smallest regard for international law, consider good all the means—yes, all—by which it may defend itself."

The labors of the scientists in the field of biology constitute one of the most brilliant chapters in the history of human learning, bringing untold blessing to the race; but we may as well face the dreadful threat, that this science in the hands of men who are not truly Christian may yet bring upon the world a judgment indescribable.

Read the prophetic vision of the Four Horsemen: White, Red, Black, and Pale (green or livid). Notice the order: first, false religion; second, war; third, famine; fourth, pestilence and death.

The most important thing in the world is religion: true religion brings life; the false brings death. Upon this one thing hangs not only the fate of the individual soul, but also the fate of nations. Religion can turn the tools of science into either a blessing or a curse.

Christ is still the only "WAY".

WHY do Mothers Die?

A recent investigation into the causes of maternal mortality revealed some startling results. It is higher in the United States than in any other major nation, according to the report.

In New York City alone, the investigating committee finds that 66% of deaths in childbirth during the last three years could have been prevented. Physicians were charged with responsibility for 66% of the whole number; the patient for 36%; and the midwife with 2.2%. The committee cautions the public, however, to remember that the difficult cases generally go to the hospital and physician. But even so, the situation constitutes a serious charge against modern medical methods.

The Committee believes that a chief reason for this high mortality is the widespread use of anesthetics, and this is directly connected with a large increase in Caesarian operations.

We should thank God for every scientific advance which alleviates the pain of motherhood, and which lengthens the span of life, pitifully small as the latter is. But we cannot remove from the Word of God two passages: "In pain thou shalt bring forth children"; and "dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return". (Gen. 3).

Science must go on with its age-long task, and still more progress will be made, but Pain and Death will never be wholly abolished by the efforts of man. That is the work of him who is the "Prince of Life". He must reign; and he will reign until all enemies are beneath his feet. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is Death" (1 Cor. 15:26).

Then at last "Death shall be no more . . . nor Pain" (Rev. 21:4).

I Say NO"

This is the answer of Karl Barth, followed by 3,000 pastors, to the dictum of Hitler which would make the church the tool of the State and turn Christianity into a Nordic national cult with mythological gods.

It takes courage to make such an answer in Germany today. Stanley High points out that, whether Hitler changes or not, "the historic fact remains that, in the midst of the Nazi revolution and in the face of Nazi violence, Christianity alone among the forces in Germany's national life, has produced a leadership that refuses either to compromise or to surrender."

And Karl Barth, by the way, is no liberal theologian, but the leader of that great German movement which has for its slogan "BACK TO THE WORD OF GOD."

We need some men like Barth in this country, men who have the courage to stand up and cry, "I SAY NO."

He who looks up to the heavenly Father for a deeper insight into spiritual things will gain a larger outlook upon life.

The Urgency of Christian Education

When we first wrote the heading for this editorial, it read "Religious Education". We changed it not because we have any antipathy toward the use of that term, but because it does not in its popular signification carry the meaning we have in mind. Religious Education has come to refer to education in matters pertaining to religion, the imparting of knowledge—more or less systematic—of the Bible, of religious thought, methods and activity. And as such, it has its place. It is perfectly proper to use the term Religious Education as indicating the kind of education one gets at a theological seminary, as over against the kind of education to be gotten at an agricultural school. But we do not have in mind a technical or specialized education in religion. Of course, it is entirely proper to refer to a theological education as Christian education, in order to convey the thought that it conforms to Christian teaching in theory and not to some humanly devised or modified form of teaching. But that is not a technical term as is Religious Education.

There is also a sense in which all education, whether in the Arts and Sciences, or some other field of learning, should be Christian education, that is, it ought to recognize God and have reverent regard for the Christian revelation and for the Christian way of life. And that approaches more nearly to the meaning we wish to convey and deal with, yet it does not exactly coincide with what we have in mind. We are thinking more definitely of that education which both instructs the mind concerning Christian truth and leads the heart into the acceptance of the Christian life and way. We are not primarily concerned with mere religious instruction, or the imparting of knowledge, though that is important, but with that higher and more vital education, the leading of the individual out of the darkness of selfishness and spiritual ignorance and out of indifference and sin, into religious light and understanding and appreciation of righteousness and truth and godliness. And for that reason we call it Christian Education.

The Sunday School the Church's Teaching Agency

That sort of education we conceive to be the church's supreme duty, and the Sunday school is its greatest agency for accomplishing the task. It is a common expression that "the Sunday school is the feeder of the church," and that is true, especially where the Sunday school is performing its task in the highest and fullest sense of the word. The Sunday school is fulfilling the teaching function of the church in a very large way, and it is fulfilling it in the completest manner when its objective is not merely to impart Bible knowledge, but to lead the student to a real knowledge of Christ, whom the Word of God reveals, and to the adoption of Christ's ideals and standards of life and conduct. They teach best and truest who make Christians rather than students, and they have the highest aim who seek first of all to give life a spiritual motivation rather than to crowd the mind with religious facts and systems. The latter is not to be carelessly omitted from the teacher's efforts, but it is by no means to be given primary consideration.

Such a fundamental view of the teaching aim, gives increased importance and urgency to the teaching task and to the extension of the school's reach and the enlargement of its efficiency. That is the rock-bottom motive back of all Sunday school conventions, institutes and organizations extending across parish and state lines. It is the desire to advance the work of Christian education that leads to such cooperative undertakings as our National Sunday School Association and the manifold activities thereby carried on. The support of such an agency becomes on that basis the most serious matter possible and its appeal is of such a nature as to demand sacrifice.

We would understand better the force of this appeal, if we knew the real importance of religious education and the great harm wrought through its neglect. The importance of it points to childhood. There the benefits of education most readily appear; there is the Sunday school's big field; and there are its most willing subjects. The modern Sunday school is not confined to children, but it had its beginning with them and has long given its major attention to them. And it will continue to find in children its chief interest and the object of its most rewarding efforts and most challenging responsibility.

Importance of Childhood Training Recognized

There is a reason. Childhood is the most strategic time for Christian education. It is the time when the life is most easily moulded; the time when favorable response to influence is most readily and heartily given. There is no time so crucial as childhood for the teacher, no time so fraught with opportunity for far-reaching and effective change and preparation for a particular line of thought and conduct. If the church wishes to build for tomorrow she must not neglect this tender age. If she is to have strong, faithful, dependable, active, persevering Christian leaders in the days ahead, she must secure them and mould them and train them during childhood and youth. Men have ever recognized the importance of that age. A very ancient wise man has said, "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it." And some one has remarked, "When he is old he cannot depart from it." Surely it is the time for the making of character and the fixing of habits for a lifetime.

The Indians recognized the importance of childhood for the moulding of life into the kind of person they admired and idealized. One of the outstanding virtues of Indian manhood was bravery. The young man who was to have any place of respect among his tribesmen must have the courage to face any danger without flinching and to endure pain without a whimper or sigh. Steward Edward White says: "At eight years a child was made to fast a half day at a time; at twelve a whole day; at eighteen he was placed in a camp some miles from his village and fasted as long as he could hold out without absolutely perishing. When he had stood all that he could, he was plunged into cold water. This was by way of practice. It was a point of honor never to show signs of suffering, so that people began to think Indians actually did not suffer; but their nervous systems were much the same as ours. When captured the tortures became a contest between the enemies: one to elicit some sign of pain, and the other to endure." And the tortures they would endure were such as to harrow the imagination of a white man. This was all made possible to them through constant practice of endurance during the tender years of childhood. With that same assiduous care given to teaching children not merely to know Christ, but to become accustomed to facing difficult situations bravely and to enduring hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, patiently and perseveringly, who can say with what mighty power the church of tomorrow might be endowed! What leadership it would have! What aggressiveness it would display in the warfare against the hosts of sin!

The Church's Neglect of Christian Education

But because we have neglected the vital Christian education of childhood many young people grow up, not merely in godlessness, but in evil-mindedness and unrighteousness. Large numbers are passing out of childhood into manhood and womanhood without ever having made contact with a godly teacher and with never an effort of discipline and Christian influence being brought to bear on their lives. The church is being criticised for this neglect and blamed for the serious results in evidence. George W. Wickersham, former United States Attorney General, broadcast an address from New York on November 26th, when he complained of the waning authority of the church and the increasing neglect of the religious training of children. "Whose fault is it," he asks, "that nearly all the prisoners in Sing Sing (90 per cent of them according to Warden Lewis S. Lawes) never have had any church affiliation? The fault itself is a challenge to the church and to the men and women of our day. There can be no doubt that, whether from the loss of their own faith or the selfish pursuit of happiness, a large number of parents, and particularly of the well-to-do classes, have neglected the religious education of their children.

The church, too, has been neglectful of them. In our large cities a neighborhood seldom aids the church in reaching its youth. Too often church organizations exhaust their resources in providing facilities for exercise, amusement and social intercourse for the young and wholly, or in large part, neglect to teach them religion or moral conduct based on Christian principles." That is a remarkable statement and testimony to Christianity coming from a Jew. Recalling that the New York Crime Commission had revealed that a large percent of criminals had developed their delinquencies in childhood, he calls upon the churches to give more attention to vital religious instruction, saying they "could contribute more to the important task of crime prevention if they frankly faced the fact that large groups in every community, children as well as adults, are outside the influence of the church." Surely here is a challenge the church cannot evade. He is not calling upon the church to enter so-called social service work, but to do more vigorously the work it is divinely commissioned to do—gather men and women, and especially little children and young people, together and teach them the saving, purifying Gospel of the grace of God. Never was there a time when more zeal was needed in Christian education than now. Think of this need as you make your White Gift.

Just "Supposing" About Church Salary Cuts

The Editor of the Reformed Church Messenger has been doing a little "supposing" about church salary cuts, then The Lutheran took over the same, and that led us to "suppose" also about the same thing. Maybe we have missed the mark completely in allowing ourselves to suppose such a situation about any of our churches. But, anyway, here is what our fellow editor said:

Suppose a congregation had failed to balance its budget, and debts were mounting higher monthly. Suppose the consistory met and decided to meet the situation in the easiest and cruelest way by cutting in half the salary of the pastor, organist and sexton, though agreeing that these faithful servants of the church needed every cent they had been getting in order to live decently in that community and rear their children. Suppose the officials of the nation were at the same time engaged in a comprehensive plan to bring about a recovery in business and industry and were fostering a "Buy Now" campaign. Suppose the congregation above referred to had a platform calling for Christian treatment of employees, minimum wages, and other planks in a program of social justice. Suppose a passer-by raised the question whether the Church of Christ in its business dealings should not set an example which could safely be followed by other organizations, instead of taking an action which if generally followed, would plunge our entire social order into ruin. Well, in that case, what would you say about it?

EDITORIAL REVIEW

If you and your church find pleasure in reading news letters from other churches, why not send in a report from your own church? Let's be fair with one another.

One of our prominent pastors wrote the other day: "I just read your interesting editorial in Evangelist of December 2. Very good! The whole issue is full of interesting material." We thank you, good brother.

We are glad to acknowledge the service of Prof. M. A. Stuckey, representing the National Sunday School Association, in securing copy this week for the promotion of the White Gift offering. And please send your offering to Dr. K. M. Monroe, the treasurer of the Association. His address is Ashland, Ohio.

Brother William Gray, pastor of the church at Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania, tells us the results of the meeting recently held by Brother R. Paul Miller, who reported concerning it in last week's paper. There were thirteen confessions, eight of which were received into the church. It is said that a goodly number of new homes were opened up to the Brethren church, and the spiritual condition of the church was greatly improved.

Dr. K. M. Monroe gives publication in his Seminary Notes to a survey made by Brother Tom Hammers, a Seminary student, of the religious activities of the students of Ashland Seminary. It is no small service these young men are rendering to the cause of Christ and many of these are serving churches under circumstances where preaching would be impossible were not student service available. God is blessing the work of these young preachers and souls are being saved.

This is the time for many of our readers to renew their subscription to The Evangelist. Don't let it go delinquent. You can't afford to miss a single issue. No other paper that visits your home is more important than your church paper, and there are some loyal people who are telling us no other paper is as important. Those people are the kind that truly love their church and thoroughly believe in its doctrines, and enjoy having their faith still more strongly strengthened by reading their denominational paper.

A recent communication from Brother M. L. Sands, now pastor of the church at Altoona, Pennsylvania, says: "Our work seems to be going along nicely. All services show an increase in interest and attendance. The Sunday school is about as large as our enrollment. We are facing the problem of more room. Mrs. Sands is working with the Junior C. E. with good success, as the attendance moved up from 7 to 30 each Sunday night. Dr. Gnagey left the work in fine shape. We are trying to build on his foundation."

The church at Listie, Pennsylvania, under the pastoral care of Brother H. W. Nowag, recently enjoyed an evangelistic refreshing under the leadership of Brother C. H. Ashman. Both evangelist and pastor write in this issue. There were twenty-five added to the church by baptism. The weather was a bad combination during the meetings, but the Lord gave them victory in spite of it. The loyal and zealous spirit of the membership and the adequate church equipment point to a still brighter future for this splendid village church.

Our correspondent from the Dutchtown church near Warsaw, Indiana, says the work is growing in numbers and spiritually under the pastoral care of Brother William Overholser. A new minister was recently ordained in the person of Louis D. Engle, who is a product of this church. We congratulate Brother Engle on being honored with the holy office into which he was inducted by Dr. G. W. Rench and Brother B. H. Flora, and wish him God's blessing in the ministry he may be called upon to render. The church was led in an evangelistic campaign under the leadership of their pastor, assisted by others, with the result that twelve made the good confession.

"Summer Camps" may not sound so timely now, but they will be very much so next July, and now is the time to do something toward making the summer camps possible. Your Sunday school Christmas offerings will help toward the expenses of such camps. Four of the conference districts had such camps for the religious training and inspiration of young people last summer, and now a fifth district—the Iliokota Brethren—is planning a summer camp. Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the Waterloo, Iowa, church, writes of plans now under way and is seeking to discover as nearly as possible the demand that may exist for such a camp. We have no doubt there will be sufficient demand to warrant the venture in that district and doubtless when the summer days begin to appear it will be more generally voiced.

"THEY PRESENTED UNTO HIM GIFTS"

And so will we honor the Great King on His birthday

O Jesus, King supernal,
Whose throne abides eternal,
Who dwells in holy light,
Yet came in lowly birth
To succor men of earth,
Receive our gifts of white.

THE ANNUAL WHITE GIFT OFFERING!

By Rev. W. I. Duker

President National Sunday School Association

As we sit down to write our annual message relative to our usual White Gift offering, a multitude of questions fill our mind. We are not disturbed as to what we shall say or how we shall say it. We are not worried about definite plans as to what ought to be done during the year. All of these things have been carefully thought out and planned. The questions that fill our mind are something like these:

Will what we say be read by any appreciable number of people? We do not refer to the title but to the contents of the article. Will those who have been interested in the past, give the matter a fair hearing? Will other interests of the church crowd out this necessary matter of religious or Christian education? Are people so interested in certain activities of the church that they will turn a deaf ear to this matter? Need we again repeat the proposed budget and indicated activities of the Association? If you, dear reader, will answer these questions it will help greatly to our peace of mind as we continue this article.

First, it has been our privilege to capitalize the Christmas Spirit for Christian education. This is our field by action of National Conference and common acceptance. And after all, what is more appropriate than that at the time when we recall the birth of our Master, we attempt to accelerate the common knowledge of his life and our relation to him? To celebrate the birth of the Master and forget his life would be a rather sorry celebration. The best way to remind ourselves of his birth is to become increasingly familiar with his life. This is the field of Christian education.

We do not feel that we ought to speak too much of our accomplishments in this particular field, and yet we who are in the thick of the fight are increasingly happy as our work grows and grows. The many splendid activities sponsored by our Association would work untold harm were they to be withheld. We can hardly contemplate just how far reaching would be the results, were we forced by economic difficulties or lack of proper interest, to bring these indicated activities to a close. Pray God this may not occur!

Our relationship to our college and seminary has always dignified our work. To be able to be of such pronounced assistance in the efforts of our college at this time of her severe trial and evident success, marks the Association as one of worth and merit. Each year we receive letters from those entrusted with the College's tasks and activities, reminding us that without our continued support they cannot continue upon the present splendid high plane of scholastic attainment. You will remember that it was a straw that broke the camel's back, so inversely it is the assistance of a relatively small group that will save the day and turn the tide. This has been the place of our Association in our College's present standing.

Then, again, just what part does our seminary play in the continued success and life of our church? No one can measure its influence. Only if it were to be discontinued, could we measure its worth. I have the firm conviction that the present and future success and continuity of our beloved fraternity, rests in the lap of our seminary. Certainly, I am speaking of the different departments of the church as determined by men. The support the Association has given and continues to give to the Seminary is essential to its continued life and service. It cannot stand the loss of this service, and yet we are forced to realize that this can only be continued as long as our rather small liquid reserve remains. This can not be done on today's offerings! We are riding for a fall and an indescribable rude awakening, else we evaluate our activities and govern our gifts accordingly.

Another splendid work of the Association that is receiving increasing attention is our summer institutes. To see the young people sit in quiet attention and listen to the story of our church's growth and faith, would cause any lover of our denomination to be thrilled with its possible influence. This work today is not so much the result of the money we are able to secure and spend for this cause, as it is the immediate result of personal sacrifice and effort of those immediately interested in this field of endeavor. The movement is catching fire and is now spreading like wild-fire. I have often said that the most hopeful sign of our church's continued life and success is found in our young people. Thank God, we have a splendid group of young people, naturally endowed and trained for service. Some of us older folks, who are worried about what will happen after we are gone, had better look about us and we will see that as soon as we step out of our present place, a more efficient person will step in. It may not be so very pleasing to some of us who believe that the world rests upon our shoulders, but it is the truth! You may talk all you wish about our "terrible young folks," but I know of a great host of honest, spiritual, God-fearing, trained young men and women that will soon man our walls and carry on for Christ! Certainly, they are young folks and see with the eyes of young folks, but all we have to do is to turn the leaves of our beloved Book and we will see that like the Master himself, many a young man and woman started for efficient service at the Foot of the Cross, both in youth and humility. If any of us can not see this field of force and power within our church we are blind and need to be awakened by shaking off our selfishness and self-centered interests.

Other interested Brethren will call to your attention certain phases of our work. Each will speak as the Spirit leads. It is our honest hope that each of you will ponder well our present problem. We are not asking our editor for unlimited space in the Evangelist. We only desire that each of you will prayerfully read and then attempt to assist us in spreading the news of our problems and our need. Surely the work is of the Lord. Surely we have had repeated indications of his presence and assurances of the Spirit's leading. Shall we lay down the sword and shield before our Captain calls a halt! While he still leads, will we halt, stumble and fall! You know, Brethren, it takes more than the saying of "Lord, Lord!" to make us Christian. We must do the will of the Master. And doing his will is not always easy. May we not grow weary in well doing.

THE WHITE GIFT OFFERING

By Rev. E. L. Miller

Vice President National Sunday School Association

Our day appointed for national thanksgiving has just passed by again. Surely we stopped to give thanks to God for his wonderful gifts to the children of men. These were gifts of substance, and some less tangible but none the less real. Now we are approaching another day of rejoicing when we stop to celebrate the advent of the greatest of all Gifts to men, the beloved Son of God himself. Shall we not pause to thank him for this wonderful Gift?

But there are many ways in which we might show our appreciation of God's love, kindness and thoughtfulness of us. By assembling ourselves together to give him the praise of our hearts and minds we can and will return thanks to him. Yet much of this might be purely personal and rather selfish. God has given freely to us of the things he has in store and he withheld not the best he had in sending Jesus to us. The One whose birthday we celebrate at this festal time also gave freely to us of his unsearchable riches. Then he tells us that inasmuch as we have so freely and largely received from the hand of the Lord, so ought we also freely give of what we have and can give to make the world happier and to extend the work of his kingdom and make it more efficient.

Some years ago some one discovered to us the custom of some many years ago. This custom was beautiful in that it was the bringing of gifts, either white in themselves or wrapped in some white cover or other. Not only the purity of the gift but the purity of thought back of the gift was denoted in the white appearance of it. This idea was brought to us with the suggestion that Christian folks do for their Ruler, their King, as did these subjects of an earthly ruler for their overlord. The idea has taken quite well among folks and many poor people have been cared for by this means and many others have been assisted to better things by means of the offerings of money given to church boards and the like for pushing the programs of the church.

In our own beloved fraternity we have adapted this custom to helping the educational program of the church. This is done through one of the church's educational boards, the National Sunday School Board. Each year we are asked to present a gift to this Board by means of which they may support the work of the Seminary and College, keep Teacher Training work before the brotherhood, assist in conducting summer camps for our young folks, where Christian leadership is stressed, and other like work may be conducted. The Board has even had a hand in preparing workers for the mission fields in Africa and South America. Surely the church should be back of such work to the fullest extent. If the Sunday schools and churches neglect to support the Sunday school board in this work, there will be nothing done along these lines, for it is the only agency doing this kind of work in and for our church at large.

All the work this Board does is done with a very limited income, but the work we feel is of the most importance. And now the Board comes to the churches and Sunday schools this Christmastide again asking for the annual White Gift Offering and we hope that it will be not only given freely but that it will be of such size that we can go on with the work committed to us by the churches. There should be a decided increase over the gift of last year, else work will have to be left undone that is very essential to the progress of church and the Sunday school. Remember that this is Jesus' birthday and then instead of giving yourselves gifts, present some to him in honor of the day. Were you having a birthday celebration and those celebrating with you were to give themselves all manner of nice things and you were left entirely out in the cold, how would you like the situation? Well, that is the way I feel at times Jesus might feel about us at Christmas time. So let us change the usual order of things and this time give him a gift in a rousing response to the call for a White Gift Offering for the furthering of the cause for which he was given to the world. The Board wants to do greater things for Christian education and will do them if you make it possible. I see you doing it hilariously this Lord's birthday.

WHITE GIFTS FOR CHRIST and the Brethren Church

By Rev. N. V. Leatherman

General Secretary

The term White Gifts and White Gift Offerings are general terms. So general are they that they are very apt to be misconstrued, so far as their particular meaning is concerned in the Brethren Church. The terms were popularized among the Protestant churches by the White Gift programs published by one of our leading publishers of Sunday school materials. The Brethren Church among many others have used these programs of service. The appeal for offerings in these programs was necessarily general. As a result many of our churches have fallen into the habit of making their gifts at Christmas time general also, instead of giving to the particular and specific purpose agreed to at General Conference and fostered through the years by the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church.

Now in order that our Sunday School Association may accomplish the tasks assigned to it in our denomination, it is absolutely essential that we give our White Gift Offerings this year to the real Brethren intent. We appeal to all our pastors and Sunday school workers to be just as fair in presenting their appeal to their local church for this offering as they are with all the other special offerings in their church. In our church it is not consistent to appeal for a Home Missionary offering at Easter, no more than it is to appeal for a Foreign Missionary offering at Thanksgiving time. We say this, not that we have the notion it is done; but to make the basis for our suggestion that it is equally as inconsistent for Brethren to make their various other appeals at Christmas time, than that, for which the White Gift offering is intended.

You might ask, for just what, is this White Gift offering intended? And we reply, it is to meet the budget of the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church adopted at General Conference this last August. Doubtless this itemized budget will be found elsewhere in the pages of this issue of the Brethren Evangelist.

There are three major things which your association is seeking to accomplish. The first is to maintain the chair in Christian Education in our Seminary at Ashland College. The second is to extend the standard, the objectives and the interests of our association for the efficiency of our Sunday schools. And the third is the conducting of summer camps for the young people of our Sunday schools and churches. While intensely interested in all three functions of our association the writer will leave the first two for others to emphasize in their articles, and confine himself to a presentation of our interests in summer camps.

Our summer camps are a part of our Christian education department of our association of which Prof. M. A. Stuckey is the head. The promotion, growth and success of these camps is due in no small way to his interest, enthusiasm and ability. The Brethren Church can well be congratulated for the splendid men of her Seminary. Prof. Stuckey is well prepared for his field there, and his work in our teacher training program, which is an extension of his field, of which our summer camps are a part, is meeting the peculiar needs of our Sunday schools and the Brethren Church. The new teacher training program set up by him has met a crying need existing in our church for years.

Our interest in summer camps started at Shipshewana Lake, Shipshewana, Indiana. The steady growth in attendance at that camp tells its own story of interest on the part of the young people. The attendance report year by year is as follows: 1927—41; 1928—45; 1929—37; 1930—70; 1931—85; 1932—115; 1933—164. There seems to be a pressing need to have two groups coming at different times, one older and one younger, to care properly for all those interested in this camp. This is true even with the most excellent facilities afforded by our Indiana Conference, at Shipshewana Lake.

Last summer there were two other camps begun for our young people. The first, Camp Juniata, on the beautiful Juniata river about twenty miles south of Huntingdon, Pennsylvania. This was a ten day camp. The leaders of this camp report their pleasure in its success. There were forty-four in attendance. Many more are talking of attending this next summer. The young people themselves are the best promoters for these camps.

Camp Buckeye was also a new camp started last summer near Canton, Ohio. There were 76 in attendance at this camp. Plans are being perfected to hold this camp near Cleveland, Ohio on the shore of Lake Erie next summer.

At present there is promise of two more additional camps next summer. One located in the Illiokota district and one in the Southeast district. There is no reason why we should not have a young people's camp in each district. We are praying and working to that end.

The purpose of these camps is to provide an occasion for gathering the young people of our Brethren churches together where our own church leaders can direct their thinking, their attitudes and their conduct in Christian and in Brethren things and ways. Of course there is no comparison so far as education is concerned between what the young folks receive at Ashland College and these camps. On the other hand our camps are giving in many respects, fully as much as our college is able to give, when it comes to building a Brethren attitude and moral. And be it said no church can prosper without this. By the very circumstances, convenience and appeal we are able to reach ever so many more than our college. Besides in our camps we are able to give incentives and direction to attend Ashland College. Many of our pastors testify to the increased value of their young people to the church, from one or more seasons in our camps. We have talked with parents who rejoice in the change they note in their children who have been to camp.

Then too we thus afford excellent means for our young folks becoming acquainted with other young people of like faith in Christ. We know of many adults today in our churches who only wish they had similar advantages in their day. Talk about church extension, which is needful, and as we may, who can gainsay the fact that to us, church preservation is as essential. One of the constant drains in the Brethren church is the frequent marriage of our young people into other Christian bodies than our own, and all too often in many instances into the world to be entirely lost to the church. Too long the church has feigned dumbness and silly parents have only smiled while the young folks formed relationships to their sorrow in later years and the church has lost their usefulness if not their lives. Many times they were entirely helpless because of their limitation in meeting suitable young folks. While our camps are not set merely to appeal to the amorous, or in any manner attempt to direct these young people in their choice of their associations, the circumstance afforded does provide in a very natural way a means to get acquainted with one another in the midst of an intensely Christian and spiritual environment. At the same time we wish to assure the parents that your camp leaders are not unmindful of their responsibility to guard and protect the folks entrusted to their care. We do not assume the laissez-faire attitude toward your confidence and faith.

It is true that we do provide a very wholesome program of recreation. But our major interest is to develop an appreciation of the devotional life and train for real service in the church and Sunday school. Our curriculum is a regular three year course, giving instruction in Bible, History, Teaching and such special studies as Christian Endeavor Principles and Methods, Evangelism, and Biblical Archaeology. Each year some class is held of particular interest and appeal for the Brethren church. Such as, Brethren Church History, Doctrine, treating the doctrines of "The Message of the Brethren Ministry," and Brethren Missions.

We seek to train our young men and women not only to be ready to take up the work of the church when the present leaders are ready to pass on; but we endeavor to prepare them for service now. We ask that each congregation send their young people to our camps for this preparation and then give them an opportunity to use their training immediately.

However if our interest in your young people is to continue in these camps we must have the funds with which to carry them through to success. The White Gift offering is the only source of income your association has for this worthy cause. While we have not space further to go into detail, we are making the assertion that your National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church is doing more the real work that should be expected of it than ever before. So let us give both honestly and generously, White Gifts to our Lord and Christ who in his day will be King of kings and Lord of lords. Berlin, Pennsylvania.

TEACHING PROPHECY in the Sunday School

By Rev. Homer A. Kent

Home Department Superintendent

The NEGLECT of prophetic teaching in many Sunday schools is very conspicuous. This is true of many churches as well. A certain woman whom the writer one time engaged in conversation said that until recent years she had never heard of such a thing as the Second Coming of Christ in its true meaning. Whenever she had heard it mentioned it was always referred to as Death. Yet here was a woman who had been brought up in the Sunday school and church. She testified that the Bible had become a new book to her since she has learned the meaning of the prophecy of Christ's Second Coming. The experience of this woman may be duplicated all up and down the land. Such as she are not taught the prophetic Scriptures. Many Sunday schools and churches leave the subject of prophecy strictly alone, seeming to think that it is a very dangerous subject or one so fraught with mystery that it had better be avoided.

But when we turn to the Bible itself, we are amazed to find the VERY PROMINENT PLACE that the subject of prophecy occupies. A very large portion of the Scriptures deals with future events. Prophecy looms large on the pages of the Old Testament. Verse after verse, chapter after chapter, book after book, deal with coming events. Many prophets stand upon mountain peaks with prophetic telescopes in their hands peering down through the centuries, viewing things which are yet to come to pass. Types and figures and ceremonies all unite in calling men's attention to history that is yet to be. Whosoever, then, neglects the prophetic element in the Old Testament misses the very heart of its message. It looks forward in a thousand different ways to a Messiah who is yet to come, to events yet to be made into history.

And when we open the pages of the New Testament we are face to face with the same fact of the prominence of prophecy. The New Testament looks forward to amazing events all connected in one way or another with the Second Coming of the Lord Jesus. Dr. Torrey has stated that the Second Coming of Christ is mentioned 318 times in the 260 chapters of the New Testament and it occupies one in every twenty-five verses, from Matthew to Revelation. It would seem to be careless Bible study, do you not think, that would entirely omit an element in Scripture so prominent as the prophetic element? Especially so, inasmuch as every important doctrine that we hold dear in some way or another is vitally connected with the fulfillment of the greatest prophecy of all, namely, that Jesus Christ shall come back to earth again. Vital and constructive Sunday school teaching cannot and will not omit the teaching of prophecy from its program.

A PECULIAR BLESSING is promised those who faithfully give themselves to the understanding of the message of prophecy. "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein" (Rev. 1:3). "Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book" (Rev. 22:7). There is real joy and satisfaction that comes from prophetic study. Let those who engage in it testify. This is not to be wondered at when we are told in the Word of God itself that prophecy "is as a light in a dark place" (2 Peter 1:19). It shall shine more and more until the great day of his appearing, guiding men and encouraging them to keep faithful in his service and undisturbed by the roaring waves of this world. It is time many more were receiving this blessing that God has for every searcher after truth. Let our Sunday schools with their teachers do their part in presenting prophetic truth so that many shall come into the enjoyment of the light of the unfulfilling word of prophecy.

Surely if there were more time given to the consideration of the VAST CONTENT of prophecy there would be fewer who would despise it and look with disdain upon the whole subject. There is the study of prophecy in connection with Christ's First Coming into the world. Search the Old Testament and you will discover that practically every phase of his earthly ministry was told beforehand. In the New Topical Text Book there are listed sixty-five items in the life of Christ which are prophesied in the Old Testament. In connection with each item of prophecy there is given the passage in the New Testament showing the exact fulfillment of the Old Testament prophecy. That is interesting prophetic study. Why not also study prophecy relating to Christ's Second Coming? The one coming is no more real than the other. The Second Coming is surely the goal of the Scriptures. In it will all the high hopes of men be realized. It is the purifying, energizing, victorious hope of the church. The Sunday school is supposed to be the church studying the Bible. Can any Sunday school really study the Bible and fail to study this crowning doctrine of the Lord's Return? It would seem to be impossible, for somehow this doctrine is woven into the warp and woof of every book of the Bible and every great doctrine.

Related to the particular and outstanding study of prophecy which is the Second Coming of Christ, there are many other vital prophetic subjects. There is the subject of resurrection, the Resurrection of Christ and the resurrection of the righteous and the unrighteous dead. This is a vital prophetic subject and one in which every one should be interested. There is the subject of judgment about which there is so much misunderstanding. There is the matter of Heaven and Hell. These are prophetic subjects. Every spiritually minded person will want to know about them. The content of prophecy also includes a consideration of the destiny of nations, the triumph of right over wrong, the fulfillment of the plan of God for the Jew, the establishment of Christ's righteous kingdom on the earth and the dawn of the Golden Age. All of these and many other subjects come rightly under the consideration of prophecy. What an interesting study it is! And one that will build a solid foundation beneath any school or church. It will make the Bible a new Book to those who grasp its significance.

A word should be said in closing about the method of teaching prophecy in the Sunday school. If it is to be done it will mean that our teachers must know something about it. But many Sunday school teachers appear to know very little about it. That being true the responsibility rests with our schools to teach them. One of the best ways of doing this would be the incorporation of a course on prophecy in our Teacher Training curriculum. In fact, this already has been done. Let the pastor or some qualified person present the elements of prophetic truth to those who are to teach in the school. When once they grasp this truth their hearts will glow with the force of it and naturally it will become a part of their teaching. Where there is no Teacher Training class in the Sunday school let every effort be put forth toward organizing one. But if this seems to be impossible those who are interested in becoming better acquainted with the phase of truth we have sought to emphasize in this article may receive helpful advice on how to obtain helpful books and pamphlets on the subject from the Brethren Sunday School Association. Write Professor Stuckey at Ashland College. He will be glad to serve you as he is our Educational Superintendent.

By teaching prophecy in the Sunday school it is not necessarily meant that there should be given a definite course in prophecy which would displace the international lesson series. The regular lessons may be followed. But in practically every passage of Scripture studied there is something which relates to the great subject of prophecy. The teacher should be able to interpret such passages in their true light. The teacher should possess a prophetic background which he may use whenever opportunity presents itself. Thus little by little there will be built up in the school an appreciation of what wonderful things God will yet do for men through our Lord Jesus Christ. His plan for the ages will be unfolded in its true perspective.

Giving THE BIBLE A LARGER PLACE in Brethren Sunday Schools

By Rev. Leslie E. Lindower, Adult Superintendent

I. THE BIBLE MOST IMPORTANT

The public schools began with the Bible as their textbook. When they began to print other texts the Bible was the basis for them. To learn to read in those days meant practically to learn to read the Bible. But the educational emphasis has been changed radically. Today the public school textbooks do not consider the Bible at all. Some teachers, by their own choice, read the Bible in the schools and recommend it to the boys and girls, but in some States there are laws against reading the Bible in the schools and the teacher would lose her job if she read the Bible to the students. Of course, this is contemporary with the popularity of modernism. There are many teachers who openly ridicule the Bible and those who believe it, and if it is mentioned at all it is to introduce doubt and unbelief in the minds of our boys and girls. The teacher who does this has about thirty hours a week in which to spread such damning propaganda.

Our Sunday school teachers have just THIRTY MINUTES one day a week to counteract the influence of THIRTY HOURS a week. THIRTY MINUTES AGAINST THIRTY HOURS. How hopeless it would be for the Sunday school teacher to attempt to do this with human wisdom and learning. It takes God's Word. The Sunday school teacher must saturate her teaching period with the Bible or her work is lost.

The Church with all its organizations has no excuse for existing except to spread God's message, the Bible. It should be the TEXTBOOK of every Christian life. It must be the textbook of our Sunday Schools. With the radios, newspapers and magazines which are available to everybody today, the BIBLE is the only thing they do not get a chance to learn from these sources. How cheap we make ourselves and how unprofitable for the Lord's work, when we simply rehash to our Sunday school classes what we have received through the radio, newspaper or magazine article!

The statement was made before a Men's Bible Class that in the opinion of the teacher it was our business to let Politics, International relations, Social Betterment and Reform and kindred topics alone, and teach the Bible. After the class a man came with the statement that he knew of a good many men who said they would be more interested in attending Sunday school and church if they knew they would hear the Bible when they came. Everywhere we are finding that when we come before people with the wonders of the Bible as God's Word there is a great interest. The Bible is the most important thing in our Sunday schools.

II. THE BIBLE PROVIDES TRAINED TEACHERS

The work of our Sunday schools goes backward under the influence of teachers who are not trained. The hit-and-miss fashion of Sunday school teaching merely takes up the time and encourages those present to stay away the next time. The teacher must know how to teach; not just give information, but help to build Christian lives. To do this she must know the ones she is teaching. Not only should she know the age-group but she should try to know each individual. She must also know WHAT to teach: the BIBLE. In order to teach the Bible she must KNOW the Bible.

With all the fine courses which the Brethren Sunday School Association has made available for teachers, all have the opportunity of being trained, if they so desire. Whatever the Brethren Church gives as a White Gift offering this year will be used in the promotion of this great work of training teachers and young people in the Word of God. This work merits the best gift that the Church can give.

III. THE BIBLE PROVIDES A MISSIONARY EMPHASIS.

The Missionary emphasis is needed in our Sunday schools. This does not mean merely FOREIGN missions. We cannot have successful Foreign Missions until we have been faithful to our Missionary obligations at home. The Sunday school needs a Missionary emphasis on the part of everyone of its scholars in order that they will seek to bring others to the school and introduce them to Christ. As one of our pastors has said in his weekly church calendar, "Here are three suggestions to make the Sunday school grow: (1) Pray daily for it; (2) Use every opportunity of telling others about it; (3) Never fail to attend it yourself." This is the Sunday School Missionary emphasis.

It has been well said that the Sunday school is the door of the Church. Therefore we need constantly to be seeking new scholars for the Sunday school, with a view to introducing them to Christ and membership in the Church. The BIBLE gives an intense Missionary emphasis. When the Sunday school scholar has been instructed in the Word of God he will naturally seek to bring others to hear it also.

IV. AROUSING INTEREST

If the Sunday school gives the Bible the central place in its work it will arouse an interest in the PREACHING of the Word. For the teaching of the Bible in the Sunday school does not constitute all our obligation as far as the Word is concerned. It is the opinion of the writer that the Sunday school lesson does not afford enough opportunity to present the whole Bible to the scholars. Especially is this true in a Sunday school where a great many never stay for the preaching services, and hence never hear a sermon preached on the Bible. So a new program has been instituted. Fifteen minutes has been added to the Sunday school session and a ten or fifteen minute talk given in each department before the class study of the lesson. A special superintendent has charge of each Sunday in the month in each department. There are four superintendents:—Stewardship, Missionary, Temperance and the pastor. Each superintendent gives a talk or sees that a special speaker is present to give a talk in his or her field, while the pastor seeks to give general education on the Bible. Thus these great subjects are being taught to the whole Sunday school alike and are adapted in turn to the ages and understanding of each departmental division. When there is a fifth Sunday in the month the Evangelistic appeal is presented to the whole school gathered together after the classes. By this system the pastor has the opportunity of reaching every scholar with Bible teaching, whether they will stay for the sermon or not, and it is hoped that this may be the means of arousing their interest to hear the preaching of the Word. If not, they have heard it anyway.

This is somewhat of an adaptation of the unified service in the Sunday school hour, but the worship service is still maintained following the Sunday school, and the attendance has increased in it.

But whatever system is used, it is the Sunday school's business to introduce folks to the Word of God and the Word of God to folks. For this purpose the National Sunday School Association exists and the White Gift offering is received. Warsaw, Indiana.

LIFT UP YOUR EYES

By Rev. Miles Taber

Missionary Superintendent of the Sunday School Association

"Behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." The disciples were looking down. Their eyes were good, but the bounds of their observation were limited. They could see well, but not far. Perhaps they saw only the bottom of Jacob's well, a deep well to be sure, yet less than a hundred feet from their eyes. Perhaps they saw only the small parcel of ground surrounding the well. Nevertheless, their trouble was not due to weak or blind eyes, but to wrongly-directed eyes. They were near-sighted, not by nature, but by choice. Before they could look on the fields around them, their eyes must be lifted.

How like the disciples are we! We see only our local Bible school, with its needs and opportunities. We see them clearly enough, but we do not see beyond them. We see the well from which we have received the waters of life, but we fail to see the thirsty land. We see the field in which we happen to work, but we do not see the "fields" of the world. We, too, are near-sighted by choice. Lord, help us to lift our eyes!

After the disciples had lifted their eyes so that they could look on the fields, then Jesus said, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." The teaching work of the local school is not finished when its own scholars are taught; it is scarcely begun. If we will but lift our eyes, God will give us a vision of the fields of the world—fields which are waiting to be harvested by the teaching ministry of Brethren Sunday schools. If we lift our eyes, we will see—and go.

Now it is evident that no local Bible school can carry on this world-wide teaching work alone, and consequently we have Sunday school associations through which many cooperating schools "teach all nations." Unfortunately, many Brethren have become discouraged in any union Sunday school effort because the interdenominational associations have proven unsatisfactory as teaching agencies. Their teaching is not only not Brethren, but in too many cases it is liberal and infidel in its tendencies. Fortunately, we have a National Sunday school association which is loyal, both to the Bible and to the Brethren church—an association through which every Brethren Sunday school can teach Brethren doctrine in the fields beyond.

This teaching work is of necessity diversified, yet it is carried on most economically, and that fact deserves some consideration in these days. Though we work in many fields—as many as we can—we do not work in competition with other agencies of the church, but rather through them. When our work takes us into the field of higher education, we work through the College and Seminary at Ashland. When we do educational work on the foreign field, we do it through the Foreign Board. When we use the press for teaching, we do it through the pages of The Brethren Evangelist. When we use the spoken word, we do so at the National and district conferences, gladly sending speakers to contribute to their success. In all of these cases it will be seen that our watch-word has always been cooperation, not competition, and that has meant economy in the past, and may I add, it deserves cooperation in return.

However, we are not simply a board created for the purpose of distributing money to other church boards. We have our own peculiar field which is not being touched by any other board, and an important field it is. The Brethren church of the future will be what the young people of today make it. No matter what we think of them, we must, soon or late, leave our church to them to do with as they will. Everything will then depend on their consecration and loyalty. Realizing this situation, your association is striving to locate a Brethren young people's camp in every district. I cannot fully explain the psychology of camps and youth conventions, though probably others can. But I know from experience something of their lasting effect on young life. I know that they fill a place in young people's lives which is left untouched by the regular program of the local school. And if these camps are to produce a generation who are loyal to the Brethren church, they must be Brethren camps—Brethren in leadership, in teaching, and in conduct. To place such camps within the reach of all Brethren youth is the purpose of the National Sunday School Association. Thus the gift to other fields comes back in increased blessing to our own.

To divert the White Gift Offering from its intended purpose, to purely local work, is to be wilfully near-sighted. To "lift up your eyes, and look on the fields" and "teach all nations" is to know the joy of obeying our Lord—and to find in the end that our own field is among those most richly blessed. "Lift up your eyes."

GIFTS FOR THE KING

By John F. Locke, Citizenship Superintendent

When we approach the Christmas season our thoughts automatically move to others. People are less selfish at Christmas than at any other time of the year. The hard lines on many a face are softened as we begin to think of the other fellow. We think of a friend far away that we would like to make happy by some remembrance, or, as I did today, we begin to think of folks about us that should be helped a bit extra at Christmas. I was thinking of little colored boys who like candy.

Christmas is a time when we who belong to the King take him a little more seriously than we do ordinarily. Those things which he taught about our manner of life come to us and demand our attention . . . and so we sacrifice a bit and find joy as a reward for the experience.

We think of the Christ Child and our thoughts go out to children everywhere. We want to do something for children. We exalt home and family life. Christmas away from home just isn't Christmas. The sweetest thoughts of my childhood are about home and Christmas. There is something indescribably beautiful, a feeling of deep joy, which lingers in my heart in connection with Christmas. A few years ago when I was in London in a residential district an Englishman who was showing us about the town asked me how I liked it. What I replied I don't recall, but I do remember how London made me feel, . . . it seemed to remind me faintly of Christmas and that is no small compliment to London!

Now is about time for the gentle reader to say, "What is he getting at?" "What has the above reverie to do with the subject as announced"? Well, I'm glad that you became impatient and asked the question. I said that Christmas is a time of less than ordinary selfishness; a time when we take Christ more seriously and a time when we think of Children. COULD THERE BE A MORE IDEAL TIME FOR OUR WHITE GIFT OFFERING when we consider its significance and the uses for which the offering goes?

Do you want to be unselfish? Your gift will aid some black boy or girl in Africa, some young student for the ministry in South America.

Do you resolve to take Christ seriously when he commanded, "Go . . . Teach"? Then this offering which goes to the cause of Christian Education at home and abroad gives you the opportunity of fulfilling, to a certain extent, that last command of Our Lord and Savior.

Are you thinking of children and their joy at Christmas time? Then remember that if the good news is not preached and taught, believed and obeyed there is no Christmas joy for children. A million little cheeks will bloom with joy roses and a million little eyes will sparkle with heavenly happiness, because Jesus has come. But what of the homes where he is unknown or unwelcome?

Of all the stories ever told, this is the sweetest, most precious, the most needed: THERE IS BORN UNTO

YOU A SAVIOR, WHICH IS CHRIST THE LORD. This offering is to help tell the story—to aid the whole business of telling the story here at home and on the far off shores of other continents.

It was night when the first Christmas service with angels and shepherds was held in the field near Bethlehem. It was night morally, religiously, politically—every way. The world was steeped in lust, idolatry, injustice, debauchery and political tyranny—"In the fulness of time God sent his Son".

How like that, is our world of today. Morally, politically, religiously the world seems to be decidedly askew. Again lust reigns in our own beloved land with even the President backing and blessing the Repeal of liquor laws. The First Family has given us a Hollywood type of divorce. There is widespread idolatry, men are making a fetish of anything the politicians may offer. Injustice parades in false attire, a wolf in sheep's clothing. This promises to be the most thoroughly debauched Christmas in many years.

In the midst of the dark picture with our spirits attuned to his, may we hear the angel's song again. May we remember those who so need to know about our Jesus, "The Unspeakable Gift". And remembering, may we as certain wise men centuries ago, bring to him our gifts. Gifts, that blessed and used of him may tell of him until by his coming they are made no longer necessary.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL IN A MISSION CHURCH

By H. W. Koontz

Tract Promotion Superintendent

I like to compare the Mission church to a youth. The youth has everything in front of him; the world is his to conquer. He has the fervor to throw himself into the task with an unbounded enthusiasm.

This is the case with the Mission Church. It has before it the possibilities of reaching and winning the unreached fields for Christ. Growth and expansion are its key-words. There can be no complacent resting upon the laurels of past victories, for it has none. It can think only in the terms of the future. So with a spiritual enthusiasm the Mission Church, looking forward, prays, works, and sacrifices to establish in a new field a secure church foundation and build thereon a structure of a saved and consecrated membership that will ever stand as a living memorial of the mighty hand of God.

To accomplish such a work the Church must lean heavily upon the Sunday school. And for this reason this article will be devoted to the Sunday school in the Mission Church. We shall consider four essentials for the successful establishment of a Mission Sunday school.

First, there must be a nucleus of members who have been "born again" and who show the results of this new birth by the way in which they conduct themselves. Like Stephen they must be "full of the Holy Ghost." Two reasons for this are evident. This is the only kind of a member who will have the stamina to take a community for Christ, for only men of great faith, much prayer, and a willingness to make any sacrifice can overcome the obstacles that are bound to come. Then, too, the proper impression must be made upon the community from which the Sunday school expects to get its growth. Interest and respect must come before the support of a community will be given to a new work. Many a Mission Sunday school has failed in a most fertile field because of the type of its charter members.

Secondly, a location must be made in a field where growth is a possibility. There must be a constituency that can be reached and won for Christ. A merchant would not set up a business in a section of the city that he knew would not patronize him. A school building is not erected in a locality that already contains a sufficient number of schools to take care of every child. A Sunday school cannot afford to build in a field that dooms the work before it is ever started.

Is the day past for new Home Mission Fields to be opened? Some say yes. "We are overchurched now; why build more churches?" we are told. Yet the facts reveal that there are more fields ripe for the building of Sunday schools THAT ARE UNWAVERING IN THEIR STAND UPON THE WORD OF GOD AND THE CHRIST REVEALED IN THIS WORD than ever before. At least three reasons can be given in support of the building of such Sunday schools in almost every city and town of America. First, as much as we like to call America Christian, the fact remains that about one-half only are church members, and those of this number who have been truly born again by the precious blood of Christ are but a small number when compared to our population of about 130,000,000. Secondly, There is always the oncoming generation that must be given the Gospel. Unless provision is made for an ever changing population in a few generations our country would be sunk in the depths of heathenism. Third, the Laodicean apostacy of the church must be considered. The time has come when many churches have sold out to the Devil, and have become propagandists for his Christ hating, blood denying, Gospel rejecting campaign against God. In any place where the churches have become apostate from the faith there is an open field for the Whole Gospel Sunday school.

Thirdly, care must be taken that the Mission Sunday school permeate the community with the proper kind of propaganda. There is the negative, unconscious kind that may in time seriously impair the influence of any Sunday school. Let us consider just one example. You can add others. Money is needed, so the officers send the children throughout the community to pester the people in buying things like candy, jello, pencils, soup, tickets for this or that money making activity, and what not; things people often times do not want but feel that they must buy because "it is for the church."

Instead of this, and other negative, hurtful, unbiblical money raising efforts the Sunday school should use God's method of financing his program upon the earth. Let those who believe God's promises meet often in prayer about the needs, then as he leads (and he will lead those who wish to be led) let them reach down into their own pockets, going to the very bottom if need be, and make such sacrificial gifts that will finance the work. The community will soon learn God is meeting every need through prayer and this positive, unconscious propaganda will immeasurably increase the standing of the Sunday school.

Lastly, there must be the proper goal to reach. Christ had a goal to reach. As individual Christians we have a goal to reach. Hebrews 12:1, 2. The Mission Sunday school also must know the purpose for which it exists and ever seek to accomplish that purpose. If there is no definite goal it will be like the preacher who was asked to preach to an audience on ship board one balmy Sunday morning. Some one remarked about the sermon later, "He aimed at nothing and he hit it."

Just a few days ago our city was canvassed for the annual Community Chest Fund. There was no haphazard, aimless shooting done. The goal was carefully planned. Every effort possible was made to inform the city of the goal and the absolute necessity of it being reached. Signboards, the newspaper, the radio, stores, churches, organization of all kinds were used to inform every one of the need and encourage the support of all. Only by such a program could the needed money be raised.

Let the Mission Sunday school also have its goal. Let it know that there is no greater one to reach than that which Christ gave as the marching orders to every church. Matthew 28:19, 20. "Go . . . make disciples . . . baptize . . . teach . . ." Let it place itself under the absolute leadership of the Holy Spirit and put forth every effort pleasing to him to reach this goal. Then the community will be awakened to the fact that there is within its midst an organism pulsating with life and power.

Recapitulating, four essentials for the establishing of a Mission Sunday school in a new field are— (1) A nucleus of "born again" members who live the life of Christ daily. (2) A field where growth is possible. (3) A positive propaganda that will draw people to the Sunday school (4) The proper goal for which to strive.

With the out-going of the White Gift number of the Evangelist the National Sunday School Association takes pleasure in announcing to the brotherhood at large the New and Larger Teacher Training Outline of subjects and books as printed on this page. It is to be hoped that our pastors and superintendents will receive it graciously. Next week explanatory suggestions concerning the Course will be printed on the Sunday School page. M. A. S.

The Proposed Illiokota Camp

By Rev. E. M. Riddle

I am writing about an aircastle. However, in the minds of the Church School Council of the Brethren church of Waterloo, Iowa, it is the picture of a Summer Training Camp for Brethren Young People of the Illiokota district. The pastor and the general superintendent are beginning this week a publicity campaign to ascertain about how many might be expected for such an undertaking.

We believe our readers will be interested to know of the camp site. We have arrangements with the local Y. M. C. A. to use their camp, known as Morris Isle, four and one-half miles northwest of Cedar Falls, Iowa, on Route 218, passing also through Waterloo. The distance from Waterloo is about twelve miles. The place is an island in the Cedar River. The writer knows the place quite well, having been there six days in succession last summer for Bible lectures before one of the Y. M. C. A. groups. It is a most ideal situation for a camp. The place is beautiful, with much undergrowth, much of it being evergreens, nice sandy walks, large trees and small, with the river running on each side of this island of one hundred acres. There are bunk houses, properly screened, shower houses, a kitchen and dining room, ice house, chapel with a fire-place, gas-engine pump furnishing drinking water and supply for showers and also for kitchen, boats for rowing and to complete the trip to the camp, when you arrive.

Y. M. C. A. Provides

the use of buildings and equipment, tennis courts and kitten ball grounds with equipment; ice, food, dishes, and an experienced cook, a life-guard. They also take care of transportation of all food stuffs to the camp. They ask for the right to run the commissary, providing ice cream and a few other delicacies which might not be expected on an island but sorely missed if not to be had. Campers would be expected to bring silverware, linen for bed (if you desire it), clothing suitable for camp life and be willing to take their turn in groups at helping care for the dishes after each meal.

The Expenses

I must say we have a very wonderful offer. With a number the minimum of 30 and the maximum of 100, they will receive us at the rate of 85 cents per day, per person. There is not likely to be any change in these figures, unless prices should greatly change in the next few months.

Time

Two possible dates are being considered: first, the week before the Shipshewana school and the other immediately following. This arrangement makes it better for Prof. and Mrs. M. A. Stuckey to attend, he to serve as Dean, if at all possible. The very urgent request for their presence and the fact that it is a new adventure in this section, we feel constrained to ask for them. The local Y. M. C. A. informs me today that the weeks in July beginning with the 16th and the 23rd are both open, so this will guide our people quite closely until the definite date is known, which will not be long.

Previous Announcement

The proposed camp was mentioned briefly at the District conference at Milledgeville. There was a goodly interest shown and a number of encouraging words from young people were given, indicating their interest. These camps are no longer an experiment in our church. The Shipshewana camp has rendered a really wonderful service to the church in the past eight or ten years. Other states followed last year with successful schools. The writer has observed, as many others have, some of the fruitage in the lives of our young leadership, to be expected from such Christian training. Our young people need this training and the Brethren Church needs her YOUTH. As for future leaders, we can't survive without them. Without Brethren Church contacts, what will they be?

The course of study will be presented at a later date. Sufficient to say, it will be in harmony with the outlined schedule for such schools as fostered by our National Sunday School Association.

A VISION OF WORLD PEACE

(Lesson for December 24)

Lesson Text: Isa. 11:1-9; Golden Text:
Isa. 11:9

MONDAY

A Vision of World Peace. Isa. 11:1-9. How appropriate this Scripture, setting forth the glorious results of Christ's return to earth to REIGN! Note what divine prerogatives shall be his: He shall "judge", "reign", "know", "smite" and "slay". How extraordinary will be that government when the Ruler shall "reprove (decide) with equity", and wickedness shall be banished. Just how low humanity has fallen is reflected in the "curse" which is upon both animals and the ground itself. When he shall reign, ferocious carnivora shall no longer crave flesh, "the lion shall eat straw like the ox", reptiles shall have lost their venom, and the "desert shall blossom as the rose". (Isa. 35:1). Then the creation shall cease its "groaning" (Rom. 8:19-22). "Hail! peaceful earth! Thy Kingdom Come!"

TUESDAY

The Prince of Peace. Isa. 9:1-7. The Millennial Kingdom, the foregleams of whose glory were vouchsafed to the eloquent Isaiah, shall be magnificent because of the divinity of the King. Just as human institutions are the lengthened shadows of men, Christ's Kingdom will partake of his greatness. Mere human governments, whatever their type, are ever limited by the frailties of unregenerate men. He who was begotten by the Holy Spirit, born of the virgin, who spilled his blood upon this sin-cursed earth, and who have been meditating in the glory for nineteen centuries—David's Greater Son—shall be the incarnation of PEACE—"The Prince of Peace!" His will redeemed humanity obey. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus!"

WEDNESDAY

The Covenant of Peace. Ezek. 34:25-31. Under the intimate symbolism of a shepherd and his flock, Ezekiel portrays his impressions of the Kingdom. The Lord will make a covenant with Israel—a covenant of PEACE. They shall be spared the ravages of "evil beasts", the stint of famine, the slaughter at the hands of the nations, and the anguish of fear. Verily, "there shall be showers of blessing"! This covenant will be no mere "scrap of paper". The redeemed shall be the sheep of his pasture, and they shall KNOW that the Lord their God is with them. What a contrast this with the perilous times in which we live. Revelation warns us that they will continue to grow more hazardous as man's futile schemes continue to be frustrated.

THURSDAY

The Bond of Peace. Eph. 2:11-22. "He is our peace". The great apostle to us Gentiles reminds us that there is a "peace" which the world can neither give nor take away. The most harassed of all believers, Paul bears testimony to that "peace of God" which we now enjoy because of the reconciliation Jesus effected for us by his Cross. While we "serve and wait for his Son from heaven" (1 Thess. 1:9, 10), both Jew and Gentile may have a foretaste of that Eternal Peace. The Saviour vouchsafed it to his little flock when he said: "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom". (Luke 12:32). Let us "endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace!" (Eph. 4:3).

FRIDAY

The Blessings of Peace. Ezek. 36:22-31. What a catalogue of the blessings Ezekiel saw in store for Israel when God shall take them "from among the nations and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land"! "Ye shall be clean ... I will cleanse you"; "A new heart also will I give you and a new spirit taking away the stony heart"; "ye shall keep my statutes"; "ye shall dwell in the land that I gave your fathers"; "ye shall be my people and I will be your God"; "ye shall receive no more the reproach of famine"; "then ye shall remember ... and loathe your iniquities"! But, how terrible will be Israel's chastisement in The Tribulation, before the "veil is removed" and before they finally "look upon him whom they have pierced". (Zech. 12:10).

SATURDAY

Peace on Earth. Luke 2:8-20. The Nativity! Was ever a scene so sublime? Peaceful shepherds watching over their sleeping flocks in the stillness of the night on the sombre Judean hills! Suddenly, the heavens are rent with the heavenly choir singing the Anthem of Peace! Then, if ever, the "glory of the Lord shone" upon this war-torn earth. If the coming of the Babe to the humble manger called forth such a demonstration of heavenly exultation, what will be the reverberations "when he shall come in his glory and ALL the holy angels with him, and sit on the throne of his glory"! (Mt. 25:31). If the shepherds "came with haste and returned glorifying and praising God", how much more should we "make known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this Child"! "Publish glad tidings"!

SUNDAY

Universal Peace. Isa. 2:1-5. 'Tis futile for mere man to imagine, that by legislation, education, or armed occupation, he can usher in the Christ's reign of universal peace. Christ declared before Pilate: "My Kingdom is not OF this world" (John 18:36). Nevertheless, just as he will give peace to the whole world when he comes, he offers peace "here and now" to everyone who will receive him. That was no empty gesture of Jesus when he said: "Peace I leave with you—my peace give I unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid"! (John 14:27). We need not await the Millennium to be at "peace with God" nor to have "the peace of God" in our hearts. Let us be, not as the busy inkeeper too preoccupied with the rush of the day and say to the Christ Child "No room"! Rather let us say: "Come into my heart, Lord Jesus"!

SEMINARY NOTES

Mr. Tom Hammers, a Middler in the Seminary, has made a survey of such interest that we are glad to pass it on to you, especially in light of this being the White Gift issue of the Evangelist and the Seminary is among the interests of the National Sunday School Board. His report is as follows:

A recent survey reveals some very interesting facts concerning the activities of a number of the men of Ashland College and Seminary. Leaving Ashland any time after the last classes on Friday, until early Sunday morning, fifteen men regularly go out to carry on the duties of pastor and preacher.

Into twenty different churches these men go, some serving two different congregations on the same day. A constituent body of approximately fifteen hundred members in these various churches represents six different denominations, which in order of frequency are as follows: Brethren, Methodist, Presbyterian, United Brethren, Congregational and Lutheran.

No less than 1462 miles are traveled weekly by these men in going directly from Ashland to their churches and return. As there are many rural churches among this group, this mileage rises considerably over the 1750 mark due to their work of pastoral visitation. The longest hop is made by a Pennsylvania student who rolls up 500 miles weekly in order to serve two churches in the Keystone State, Vinco and Mundy's Corner respectively.

Sundays are busy days for these young men who conduct no less than twenty-two regularly scheduled preaching services. In addition to preaching, some conduct the congregational singing as well as special choirs. Then there are Sunday school classes to be taught, young people's meetings to be directed, and business sessions at which to preside. The afternoons are usually devoted to pastoral visitation, Bible classes, and many other duties requiring the careful attention of the efficient pastor.

Mid-week prayer services are conducted weekly by six of the men. Weddings, funerals, special social gatherings, and numerous other meetings call the men back to their churches during the week. At the present time, one man is traveling seventy miles daily in order to direct an evangelistic campaign that will extend through a period of two weeks. Similar meetings are conducted throughout the year in many of these student pastorates, while carrying a full schedule of seminary work and attending all classes. This coming Christmas vacation will find a number of the men engaged in intensive campaigns of evangelism of at least two weeks' duration.

By no means are the other men in the seminary idle during the year. Practically every Sunday finds other of the men preaching as supply pastors, teaching Sunday school classes, directing young people's gatherings, and participating in gospel team work.

In most cases these men represent a part of that group which has been largely self-supporting in the acquisition of their college and seminary training. Recognizing the great value and importance of practical experience along with study, as an aid to development in preaching, a number of these men have turned from financially profitable fields of endeavor in order to devote full time to their preparation. Incumbent upon any man assuming the responsibility of a student pastorate are obligations which in many times set up a responsibility almost equal to that of their seminary work, thereby making a double load for them to carry. It is to be remembered, also, that many hours of hard work must be devoted in preparation for every worship service conducted. Yet in every instance we find these same men little mindful of their extra responsibilities in view of the fact that this work provides; first, a very definite opportunity for them to serve the Lord; second, an opportunity for actual, practical experience on the field; and third, some financial remuneration which will aid them in self-support. And seldom is the actual contribution received for this work more than an aid, when we consider in summary that: during each month these fifteen men are traveling no less than 7,000 miles in order to conduct no less than 125 worship services in twenty different churches, ministering to no less than 1500 people. For this service these men receive on an average, in combined salaries and contributions, $465.00 per month. On the accepted basis of four cents per mile as the cost of operation of an automobile, these men are paying $280.00 per month for transportation. The balance of $185.00, when divided on the basis of the number of worship services these men conduct, indicates an average of $1.90 per service. As this amount forms the larger portion of and in many cases the entire personal income there is great need for close trimming of the weekly budget.

Certainly the circle of influence described by the activities of these men in their efforts to spread the Gospel of Jesus Christ, radiates far from Ashland.

KENNETH M. MONROE.

MT. PLEASANT, PENNSYLVANIA

The Brethren here at Mt. Pleasant have just had a refreshing from the Lord, in an evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller. The meeting opened on October 24th and closed November 12th. This meeting proved to be a great blessing to the church, and the community in general. Services were held each night, and three services on Sunday. Many people attended the meeting who had never been in our church before, and rejoiced to know that there was still a church in Mt. Pleasant that was true to the Bible.

Thirteen came to Christ for the first time in this meeting, and of this number, eight have been received in the church. This may not seem like a great meeting, because of the small number coming to Christ, but it has opened many good homes for us, and the church is in a good spiritual condition. There will be more to come into the church throughout the winter months as a result of this meeting.

Brother Miller made his home with us during the meeting. It was the second time that we had Brother Miller with us during a meeting, and we greatly enjoyed his fellowship. We feel that we cannot say too much in regard to Brother Miller as an evangelist. His messages ring true to the WORD of God. Our Brethren here are awaiting his return next year, if the Lord should tarry in his coming. We ask that the Brethren pray for us as we labor here for our Lord.

WILLIAM GRAY, Pastor.

JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

"The Listic church recently closed a three weeks' revival effort under the able leadership of the Rev. C. H. Ashman.

The Scriptural messages accompanied by the Holy Spirit brought conviction to the hearers. Every phase of work was inspired to greater zeal. Careless church members were persuaded to a re-consecration. Twenty-five applicants were identified with the LORD in his death, burial and resurrection. Inclement weather created a handicap that tested our faith; our God proved himself greater than the handicap however, and gave us the victory.

The congregation celebrated the Lord's Supper December 3rd and a worshipful spirit prevailed.

H. W. NOWAG.

LISTIE REVIVAL

Listie is a mining town of around 500 inhabitants, including the environs. There are three churches there. The Brethren church is the largest and the most active, but the community is "churched." Inasmuch as Listie is only 35 miles from Johnstown, making it possible for us to care for much of our own church work, the First church granted us the privilege of holding this revival. We journeyed back and forth each evening with but a few exceptions. The pastor, Brother Walter Nowag, lives in Johnstown, laboring in the steel mills and going to his church on the Lord's Day. These conditions made it impossible for either pastor or evangelist to do much visiting during the revival.

The Listic church is composed of a company of well-instructed, faithful Brethren. Their pastor is a Bible teacher who knows the Word. We enjoyed the fellowship of both the church and the pastor very much. They have a neat, up-to-date church edifice, large enough for their congregation and equipped for both church and Sunday school services.

We have never gone through more severe weather in any one revival, than we did in this one. There were just four nights that it did not either rain or snow or sleet or blow. There were three blizzards. The roads were almost impassible with drifts and ice many times. But, God gave victory in spite of this handicap.

Special music was furnished on several evenings from the First church of Johnstown. The church choir came on one evening and the Ladies' Quartette on another. There were representatives from the First church present on other evenings. The church had loaned their pastor and was deeply interested in the revival.

The pastor will report the visible results. We believe it was a Victory Revival. The prayer life was strengthened. A goodly number were "added unto the church". The Blessed Hope of our Lord's Coming was proclaimed. Distinctive Brethren practices were set forth. The fellowship of the church, preparatory to the communion following the revival was made stronger and sweeter. Unto him we give the honor and the glory, praising him for the joy we enjoyed in laboring with this dear people for the salvation of the lost.

REV. C. H. ASHMAN.

DUTCHTOWN, NEAR WARSAW, INDIANA

We are happy to report on the splendid work of the Brethren church, at Dutchtown. Rev. Wm. Overholser and his talented family have had the work in charge, at this place for the past eighteen months, and have done much for the welfare of the class and the community in general. Rev. Overholser is a forceful speaker and untiring in his efforts, the church growing spiritually and in membership. The Sunday school and all the church auxiliaries are active and wide awake. Rev. Overholser has had a faithful helper in Brother Louis D. Engle, during his pastorate. Brother Engle has been an ardent worker in the church since he was eight years old, having been converted and baptized by Rev. Thomas Plew. Thanksgiving Day, Brother Engle was ordained to the ministry. Rev. Rensch of Goshen and Rev. B. H. Flory of North Liberty, assisted by Rev. T. H. Plew and Rev. Overholser, had charge of the ordination service.

The revival meeting of two weeks closed December 3rd. Rev. Overholser preached soul stirring sermons each evening. Rev. Engle led the devotionals and the music was in charge of Evangelist Ross McDonald and Mrs. McDonald of Ada, Ohio. There were twelve conversions during the revival. We feel that Dutchtown has been wonderfully blest and will continue to grow, under the leadership of these faithful Christian leaders.

WHAT About "Sensational" Preaching?

Every once in a while the question is raised whether or not the sensational happenings of the day should be taken into the pulpit and discussed; or whether they should form the subject of discussion in the church paper. I refer to such matters as the recent mob-lynching in California, the catastrophic loss of the ill-fated dirigible Akron, the rise of Hitler to power, the NRA, etc.

In answer to this question there are two extreme positions which may be taken: first, there are those who contend that such things have no place in the sermon and only tend to lower the dignity of the pulpit; and second, those who spend all their time rehashing the news of the day in sermons that resemble the front sheet of a Hearst newspaper. The proper attitude, as I see it, lies somewhere in between these two extremes.

DID our Lord indulge in Sensational Preaching?

The first question to ask in all matters of preaching concerns the example of Christ who is the great Prototype of all true preachers. He prayed concerning his first disciples, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world."

There are many examples which show that Christ did not hesitate to discuss the sensational happenings of his day. Read Luke 13:1-5. Pilate had killed some Galileans; a tower in Siloam had fallen and snuffed out eighteen lives. Both of these events would have been in the headlines of the modern newspaper. Our Lord deals with both events, interprets the meaning briefly, and drives home a spiritual lesson.

If you study the record of Christ's preaching, you will find that his motive in discussing these things was not a mere passion for the sensational as such, but rather that he was anxious to reach the ears of the people with the message of God, and he used the things which already had their interest as a medium through which to gain attention. Our Lord was no academic philosopher delivering himself of abstract tenets far removed from the life of the "man in the street." He had a message from "above", and was willing to use the medium at hand, whether the fall of a Siloam tower or a sparrow, as a means of getting that message into the consciousness of his hearers.

SEIZING the Opportunity

The greatest problem that faces any man with a message to deliver is HOW TO GET THE ATTENTION OF THE PEOPLE. The Communists are in some respects wiser than the children of light; they will cheerfully accept arrest and court trial just for the opportunity of speaking their mind in a forum which has the attention of the public. Read the Book of Ezekiel for several Biblical examples. The prophet had difficulty getting public attention, so God commands him at different times to lie on one side 390 days and on the other 40 days; to eat bread prepared with cow dung; to shave off his beard and hair and divide it into three parts, burning one part, striking another part with a sword, and scattering another part to the wind; to remove his household goods bit by bit and depart in the darkness.

Certainly this is sensationalism; but of a kind that it would not be wise to indulge in without a special revelation of God, such as Ezekiel had. However, some will recall how that Billy Sunday used to smash chairs and lie down on his stomach while he conducted a highly dramatic conversation with the devil; and people did seem to understand his message better than the deadly dull preaching which is current today. Do not misunderstand; the dull preaching may be perfectly orthodox and very simple; but it may get nowhere because the people are not listening. And unless the people listen, the preacher may be only a voice crying in the wilderness.

Not many of us, perhaps, would feel entirely at home doing what Ezekiel had to do. Furthermore, we have noticed that the imitators of Billy Sunday never had his power. But there is one thing we may do, without sacrificing any of that dearly prized possession which is sometimes called "dignity"; that is, preach the truth of God through the medium of present day events which have already arrested the attention of the public.

SOME Advantages of "Sensational" Preaching

1. Within certain limits, it has the imprimatur of Jesus Christ himself.
2. It begins with something in which people are already interested, and therefore employs a very useful pedagogical principle.
3. It keeps the preacher from becoming a "cloistered monastic" far removed from the mental processes of the common man.
4. It enables the preacher to bring the Eternal Word of God to bear upon what is happening in the world, and thus helps relate preaching to life.

BUT Let Us Beware

1. Of any form of preaching or writing which is merely a rehash of the daily newspaper. People can buy a Sunday newspaper for ten cents.
2. Of advertising much and giving but little. After a few experiences people will learn infallibly to discount our "sensational" announcements.
3. Of sensationalism for its own sake. The only justification, in the pulpit, for discussing any current event is to interpret the event in the light of the Word of God and drive home a spiritual truth. The Christian preacher can never be a mere retailer of the gossip of the market-place.
4. Of feeding the people on a steady diet of "sensational" preaching. Men can not live on "appetizers" alone; they need the milk and strong meat of the Word; and that presented in systematic form.
5. Of attempting to substitute startling discussions for the power of the Holy Ghost. The Spirit may use a sensational event, such as the fall of Siloam's Tower; but the retailing of the mere event will be spiritually impotent without the divine power.

THE Most Sensational Thing in the World

After all the most sensational thing in the world is the Gospel of God's Grace. The difficulty is to get men to preach it as it ought to be preached, and to get people attentive long enough to hear it. Even in this so-called Christian land of ours, very few pulpits proclaim it, and very few people have ever heard it.

Every cult in the world, from Modernism to Mormonism, from Mohammedanism to Masonry, preaches a message of "works". To be sure, each cult has its own peculiar system of "works"; one will ask you to do this thing, and another something else; but the basic principle is the same: SALVATION BY HUMAN WORKS AND CHARACTER.

I once asked a man the simple question: "Are you a Christian?" He snapped back at me: "I'm as good as you are." At once I assured him that there need be no argument of that score; that I was willing to admit that he was better. And then I pointed out to him that Christianity was not intended for "good men", but for "bad men." He said, "I never heard anything like that."

And doubtless he hadn't, although he was living in "Christian America" and had attended church off and on for years. Yet apparently he knew nothing about one of the simplest and most fundamental of Christian truths; namely, that bad men are the only kind that God saves. Our Lord taught it when he said he had not come to deal with righteous men, but with sinners. Paul taught it when he wrote to Rome, "God justifieth the ungodly."

IN Conclusion

I have on my desk two very excellent examples of the right kind of "sensational preaching"; two printed sermons by Dr. Louis L. Bauman. One deals with the NRA, and the other with the present situation in Russia in the light of prophecy. Both deal with events which are the talk of the world; both interpret these events sanely; and in both the event is used not for its own sake, but for the purpose of emphasizing the Word and Will of God.

Authorized Sept. 3, 1928

There are many things that Christmas means, many things very vital and very precious, and every man will have his own way of stating them. But underneath the personal preferences for particular forms of speech, there must be general agreement concerning at least four of these great values.

God's Supreme Love for Man

First, Christmas means that God loves man, loves him with a love that is beyond all human love and far beyond the possibility of human understanding. It was love that moved the heart of God to pity in behalf of sinful men. It was love that made him willing to send his Son that he might die and become the Savior of the world. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." And it was love for men who were wholly unworthy of it, men who were in rebellion against God. That is the thing that makes it all so strange, so humanly impossible and unreasonable—that God should care supremely for rebels. It is natural to love those by whom one is loved, but to love those who despitely use you—that is divine. Only God could have conceived such a thought, or adopted such an attitude. "Herein God"—not man, nor a god-like man, but God—"commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8). There is nothing else like it; it is absolutely unique; it is beyond the measure of man's mind. We cannot explain it nor understand it; we can only repeat, "God is love." And that love was made incarnate in the coming of Christ the Savior in the form of a Babe. The word from heaven was, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." That envisaged the cross, the expression of the infinite love of God. Christmas means just that, at once the most appealing and the most marvelous thing in the world.

God Spoke to Man

Second, Christmas means that God spoke to man, that he sent him a message, that he has revealed himself to the object of his love. Hear the word written to the Hebrews (1:1, 2): "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." And if Christmas means anything at all, it means that Christ came to be the voice of God. John writes: "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us" (John 1:14). It was the voice of that Word that Paul heard and that enabled him to say, "When ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth the word of God" (1 Thess. 2:13). So should all Scriptures be regarded, for Paul says: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. 3:16). They are all divinely given and are indeed the very "oracles of God." Thank God for the message of Christmas; God hath spoken: "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."

What Christmas Means

God Keeps His Promises

Third, Christmas means that God keeps his promises, that he is true to his word. "Every word of God is pure," said the wise man (Prov. 30:5). And the truthfulness of the Word can easily be verified. Note a single instance: "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel" (Isa. 7:14). Then turn to Matthew's account (1:22, 23) and read: "Now all this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us." God's word can be relied upon. As a fellow editor once wrote:

"The Book says, 'when the fulness of time was come God sent forth his Son.' Christmas is the evidence that God keeps his promises; that when the clock strikes he makes his word good. All down the ages from the days of Eden when man fell there was a voice of promise. For thousands of years men kept heart because God made a promise. There was weary waiting. Hours when the heart grew sick, when the moaning, groaning, crushed, sin-stricken race was in despair and cried out, 'How long, oh, Lord, how long?' The time was not complete. God's time had not come. And on the years swept, until the great Christmas morning when the angels sang over the new-born Babe of Bethlehem. It was God's time because it was man's time. Christ came to a prepared earth at the very hour when he ought to have come. Rome had reached her height of glory and of shame. Greece had sent forth her matchless gems of beauty in philosophy and romance and poetry, but her heart was eaten away by her sins. Israel stood weeping over her once glorious temple now under the control of aliens, fighting until the streets ran red with blood over questions that meant naught to the ancient glory she had lost. Even the heathen poets sang the story of the Messiah's coming, and the philosophers declared the earth needed to be touched with the presence of God walking among men. It was at this noon day of need when peace was abroad in all the earth and but one tongue was used among the scholars of the world that God sent his Son. 'In the nick of time,' we say. God was ready and the world was ready and the far-off promise of Eden found its fulfillment in the stable of the inn. God kept his promise and this Christmas means that God will always keep his promises and never forsake his children."

God Dwells with Men

Fourth, Christmas means that God dwells with men. John says, "The Word . . . dwelt among us" (John 1:14), that is, "the Word tabernacled among us." The tabernacle was in Old Testament times God's earthly dwelling place. It was but a temporary, movable structure, and wherever it went, it represented

A MERRY CHRISTMAS TO THE EVANGELIST FAMILY

God to the Israelites, the abode of deity. And so when we speak of a tabernacle in the biblical sense, we think of that temporary structure that was sacred because it represented the presence of God in a very direct way. When the word "temple" is applied to the human body, it signifies the divine indwelling, or the habitation of the Spirit of God. Paul inquires, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" (1 Cor. 3:16) Again in much the same words, he asks, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you?" (1 Cor. 6:19) There is to be left no doubt in the minds of his readers about the presence of God in their lives. "This strengthens the conception of Christ as the divine Son of God—God actually abiding in the flesh," declares the Religious Telescope. "So when we think of Jesus we must think of God 'tabernacling' in a human body among men, going about doing the things that represent God's will, living the life that reveals God's character, and preaching a gospel that represents God's thoughts. The tabernacle was a temporary structure, serving only for a certain period. Jesus lived in the flesh but a short time, his public ministry covering a period of only three years. Since that time his presence in the world is just as real as it was then, but it is spiritual, not looked upon with the natural eyes, but realized through heart fellowship. In this period of spiritual kingdom building, 'the Most High dwelleth not in houses made with hands,' but in the lives of his disciples."

God, who came as a little Babe to "tabernacle" among us, continues to dwell with men. No fact gives greater assurance of victory over the flesh. Nothing is a greater testimony to the high estate man has obtained through Christ Jesus. Nothing gives greater certainty of ultimately sharing as joint-heirs with Christ in the glory of the kingdom of God. Thank God for this Christmas assurance that he dwells with men!

EDITORIAL REVIEW

If you have never ordered any copies of the 1933 General Conference Moderators' Address published in pamphlet form, better send in for some and distribute them. It was a great address Brother Benshoff gave us and deserves to be widely read. It sells at 25 cents per dozen or $1.50 per 100.

Subscribe now for your 1934 Evangelist, if you are among those whose time expires during the holidays. And get some new subscribers. No Brethren home ought to be without it. There is no general religious paper as true to the Word as your own church paper. If you love your church, help circulate your church paper.

Dr. J. C. Beal, pastor at Canton, Ohio, writes of his Bible Institute conducted at Oakville, Indiana, and which was previously reported by the pastor, Brother Lowman. He found a very loyal and cooperative group of people, well supplied with musical ability, and they were very receptive of the Word.

You will find an excellent article by Brother G. H. Jones on the Sunday school page, dealing with the importance of educating our youth in Brethren schools. If the future of the church is to be insured, "Brethren schools and Brethren youth are inseparably linked together," says this pastor and specialist in boys' work.

Brother Homer Anderson, pastor of the church at Pleasant Grove, Iowa, writes that his work is going forward nicely. In August and again in October new members were received by baptism, and now as a result of a revival conducted by Brother Miles Taber, four others were received by baptism, making a total reported baptized of fourteen.

Brother Paul A. Davis, pastor of the Center Chapel, Indiana, church, reports seven confessions as a result of a meeting which he conducted in that live country church, where he has the confidence and support of the people. He also held a revival at the Poplar Grove church, where he was assisted by several neighboring Brethren pastors.

No one will want to miss reading the interesting letter from Dr. Florence N. Gribble this week. You will be specially encouraged by the report of the converts to the Gospel—nine at one meeting, eighty at three week-day meetings in the week preceding her report and twelve more on Sunday, making 101 in all. All the missionaries with the exception of Mrs. Jobson, are reported in good health. The examples cited of God's providence are reassuring to faith and are worthy of emulation. They rejoice in the permission of the Foreign Board for the opening of a new mission in Bangui, a great and needy city, with no Protestant mission.

The notice concerning Christmas gifts for Lost Creek and Krypton comes to us rather late, but still, it may turn out to be in the nick of time. Some of the young folks will just about be realizing how many superfluous gifts you have received by the time this notice is read and perhaps will be willing to share some of your brand new toys, dolls, candy, nuts, or other Christmas gifts. Clothing especially will be welcome. The Christmas spirit should not cease with Christmas day. Extend Christmas into the new year by making up a box of clothing for our Kentucky friends. Brother Miller says the Lost Creek Sunday school reached an attendance of 171 recently and that the work is growing under the direction of Brother Landrum.

It was indeed a "victory revival" that Louisville, Ohio, recently enjoyed under the evangelistic leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller. The meetings began very auspiciously with a Homecoming service and an attendance of 225. From then on the evangelistic fires began to burn very brightly, as they usually do when God's people begin to earnestly pray and to work for the salvation of souls. By the time the meetings closed there were seventy-five confessions and reconsecrations, fifty-two of which will be received by baptism into the church. This splendid victory is a testimony not merely to the Gospel preaching during the meeting, but to the worthy spiritual leadership that Brother A. E. Whitted, the pastor, has exercised in this church. May God lead pastor and people on to still greater triumphs in the Gospel cause.

It is fitting that Dr. W. S. Bell should give his "Bell Jingles" in our Christmas number of The Evangelist, but we are not in favor of his making it merely an annual affair. We would like to hear the sound of his splendid voice more frequently, and we believe we shall. He has been very busy in the Lord's work during the year and has accomplished many victories in evangelism and Bible Conference work, most of which have been reported by others. His latest completed date was that at Cumberland, Maryland, where the pastor, Brother Wakeman, reported twenty-two received into the church as a result of the meetings. Brother Bell sees in this young church an excellent opportunity for building a strong congregation, but they need help in building a house of worship and Dr. Bell to be one of a hundred to give ten dollars each to meet the immediate need.

Brother R. I. Humberd writes of his meeting recently held in the St. James church, Maryland, where Brother W. S. Baker is the pastor. The meetings, which had been planned for two weeks, gathered interest and were extended throughout the third week. We are not told the number of confessions received (the pastor will doubtless inform us at an early date), but two baptismal services were planned. Brother Humberd, as is his custom, not only dispensed the Word from the pulpit, but also by means of tracts, a service that all too many do not make use of. The churches out in that section of the brotherhood have a wonderful habit of visiting one another in their revival meetings. We were about to say they do it more out there than most other parts of the brotherhood, when we caught ourselves and remembered that Ohio furnishes a good example of neighboring church support in this week's report. And there are other districts where such cooperation is quite common. Naturally it is more common where churches are not a great distance from one another. But some of those South-eastern district churches have sent delegations over long distances to give encouragement to revival efforts. That sort of thing does more than give help to a meeting, it binds the churches together in a finer spirit of fellowship.

Dr. Charles A. Bame writes of his trip to Linwood, Maryland, and his successful campaign in that church which is under the experienced pastoral care of Brother J. L. Bowman. It was a three weeks' meeting and it developed into a real revival, many express-

GOD'S GREAT GIFT TO MAN A Christmas Meditation

—By Dr. Martin Shively, Bursar of Ashland College—

The world into which our Lord came was a vastly different world than that in which we now live. By "we", I mean of course that part of the world which has felt the influence of his revelation and touch. For many hundreds of years there had been no improvement in the agricultural methods employed, and no general improvement in home planning for home comforts. Men continued to walk from place to place, or rode on horseback or donkey back. Few could afford to travel by the cumbersome carriages which only the very rich could employ, and at best these were crude, slow and without comfort. Communication was by messenger, and if the distance was great, weeks or even months must elapse before a reply could be received. Water must be drawn by man power from wells, or carried from springs, to the homes in which it was to be used, and not infrequently the distance over which it must be transported, made it necessary to use it sparingly. Sanitation was almost unknown, even in its crudest forms, resulting in a high mortality rate, and lack of modern knowledge of the care of infants must have been the cause of the frequent blindness and other physical infirmities. Little was done for the segregation of the victims of infectious diseases, which must have resulted in alarming epidemics. These brought millions of men to a premature death. One could multiply indefinitely the lack of things with which the modern world is familiar, which were not present in that world into which he came.

The General Conception of God

But even more conspicuous was the general conception of God, for the outstanding characteristic ascribed to him was that he was in reality the enemy of man, and everything possible must be done to placate his anger. Among those who knew most about him, he was believed to be so provincial that only a single group of people could approach him, or possibly win his favor. All the rest were outside the pale. The favored group might do almost anything in their relations with other men, little matter how evil it might appear to modern eyes, but so long as a few forms and ceremonies were observed, they thought themselves to be his chosen people, and under his protection and in his favor. None might entertain the hope of an ultimate salvation unless they belonged to this group. And this condition existed in spite of his frequent pronouncements by the lips and pens of inspired men, who sought to reveal the real truth as to his nature and purpose, and in spite of the universal revelation of himself in the world round about them. His sun shone then as now, upon the evil and the good, and his rain fell upon all alike. All fed from his bounty, and were clothed by his grace. All breathed the air compounded in his laboratories, and all drank of the water he had provided. For all men were his children by creation, and all might come to him for the help which could come from no other source.

The Purpose of Christ's Coming

It was into such a world that Jesus came, his face aglow and his heart aflame with love and good will to men. No wonder the angels sang the joyful anthem at his advent, for he had come to uncover the face of the Father, and to reveal him as

One who "So loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life, with all that that implied. He came to reveal the fact that no man could earn the salvation which all covet, but that he could have it on the simple terms of his accepting it, by the grace of him who alone can bestow it. He cannot earn it because he cannot be good enough in any one day to compensate for preceding days which were full of evil. If perfect good should be required, then a single act of failure would ruin forever his ability to atone for a single act inconsistent with such demand. His stainless life was proof of his Deity, and his vicarious death is the only ground of hope for the man who knows himself to have failed. The acceptance of him and his message fulfills the purpose of his coming, as he stated it—"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." The religious teachers since his day on earth have a new message,—one in which they assure men that God is not a vindictive Deity, but that he is Love. And that, I believe, is the most wonderful announcement that has ever been made. I believe, that so far as St. John sought to express his own sentiments, he tried long to find a descriptive modifier of God, but finally gave it up and wrote simply, "God is love." Of course he is power and he is wisdom, too, but the outstanding quality of his character is thus set forth in the word love.

By-Products of His Advent

I would have you note too, some of the things which have come to the world, perhaps, as by-products of his advent. For to me it seems clear that all of the improvements we now have, as compared to those which were here in the days of his flesh, are here as a result of his coming and his message in life and death. The world into which he came was static so far as positive change for the better was concerned. The few years of his ministry were tremendously active ones, for St. John declares that "if all the words he spoke were written, the world itself would hardly contain the books" necessary to record them. His was not only a restless life so far as speaking was concerned, but it was a most active one as to his going from place to place. That same spirit was imparted to his followers, and it must seem marvelous to the student who follows the disciples in their journeys, how rapidly they evangelized the vast regions in which they wrought. That same spirit has very largely motivated the regions and the peoples who received the message, and in addition to the definitely religious activities it has inspired, its overflow has brought about the vast improvement in living conditions everywhere. Agricultural methods have so improved that we are warned that we are producing too much, and farmers are asked to sow less wheat, plow under part of their cotton, and generally reduce the output of their fields. Means of communication have been transformed, so that the whole world has been reduced almost to point of a neighborhood. Thus have come the railroads, the automobile, and the airplane. The telegraph and the telephone have sent the old time messenger to another field of endeavor, while the increased knowledge concerning disease, general and communicable, has added years to the span of life. The added comforts which have come to our homes, with all the labor saving devices employed in factory, home, or farm, are all outgrowths of his coming and the revelation of Divine grace associated with it, so that whether men will honor him or not, they are at least materially, the beneficiaries of that advent. It seems a pity, if not worse, that so many men should refuse him a vital place in their hearts and lives, in the face of what he has done for them, and what he continues to do. If the Psalmist, in contemplation of the bestowals of God upon men in his day, should cry out,—“Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men,” as he did again and again in Psalm 107, how much more ought men to be grateful now, for such expressions which are a multitude in number. St. Paul could hardly have foreseen all that would develop in the centuries ahead, and perhaps he did not interest himself in such contemplation, but he saw the changes which were taking place in men to whom the message was given in his own day, and in the joy which this inspired, he cried out, as I wish we all might do anew at this Christmas season, “Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift.” (II Cor. 9:15).

Unto Us

A CHILD IS BORN

By Dr. A. D. Gnagey

What of it? What special significance attaches to an event so common as the birth of a child? On that same eventful day at least 50,000 children were born, and on this Christmas Day, 1933 A. D. probably 100,000 children will be born. Yet every great thing in this human world has resulted from: “Unto us a child is born.” The birth of children has meant the birth of movements, and discoveries, and inventions that have pushed life upward and made the world a better place in which to live. A birth in an out-of-the-way cabin in Kentucky, February 12, 1809 meant the abolition of slavery in this country and a cemented nation. Over in England a birth on the same day meant the greatest addition to human knowledge natural science ever has made. A birth on February 22, 1732 meant the birth of a new nation on these western shores and the greatest republic of all time, a republic, however, which on this Christmas Day finds itself swinging in the balance with threatening clouds gathering over its sky, the range and significance of which none may venture to conjecture. Only God can tell what the birth of a child may mean to the world. Who knows but that even now “unto us a child is born” who shall lead us out of the maze and labyrinth into which godlessness has plunged us.

Some one has said that a new world is created every time a child is born; by which he meant that a man creates his own world, and a new sphere of thought and feeling and action is made every time a new soul enters the world and incarnates itself in human flesh and blood. It is the way God has revealed himself to us all through history. As a matter of fact humanity in this world is inconceivable apart from flesh and blood. When he is ready to make a new advance he sends a soul into the world big enough to see it. He has used the birth of children to accomplish all he has undertaken for our race. So it was only in keeping with his way of working through the human ages that when he wanted to send his Son it should be through the birth of a child. Let us not forget the possibilities wrapped up in the children born into our homes and communities. God is seeking through every one of them to bring some new blessing and some higher revelation to our world. Are we preparing them for what God has in store for them when they arrive at the age of accountability? Childhood has never been the same since that day when there was “born unto us a child.” The world has been cruel to its childhood and is cruel yet, but the child “born unto us” nineteen hundred years ago has done more to alleviate the suffering of childhood than all other forces combined. Let this Christmas time bring us an increased appreciation of the potentialities wrapped up in our children.

“God’s Gift to Every Home”

One anniversary and one only belongs to all the world. Holidays there are which engage the nations in the celebrations of their heroes, their victories, and emancipations. These are of human origin and limited in bounds. But one event in history transcended them. Only once in the year the whole earth echoes with “tidings of great joy which shall be to all people.”

Ever since the Virgin Mother knocked at the doors of Bethlehem and laid her Baby in the manger bed Christmas has been God’s gift to every home, the possession equally of all mankind. The Day comes this year to a confused world which will receive with fresh realization of its meaning the greeting of a Merry Christmas and the promise of a Glad New Year. The yearning for happiness and peace baffled in its quest finds satisfaction now in God alone. The human soul once touched by his Spirit looks beyond the unreal pleasures that leave only empty hands and hungry hearts.

Christmas will bring within the reach of men and women everywhere blessings which no change of time or circumstance can take away. It kindles flames of faith and aspiration. It lifts the eyes of men to the vision of a Living Christ, new-born as at this time. It lifts the mind to the knowledge of God’s love. It lifts the heart to find communion with him who sought entrance into human life at Bethlehem.—James DeWolf Perry.

The great need is to take time in waiting on the Lord Jesus in the power of his Spirit until the two great truths get the complete mastery of your being. As Christ is in God,—this is the testimony from heaven; as the branch is in the vine,—this is the testimony of all nature: the law of heaven and the law of earth combine in calling to us, “Abide in Christ.”—Andrew Murray.

CHRIST’S SOLUTION FOR EVERY PROBLEM

“Love God and thy neighbor,” was Christ’s solution for every human problem, actual or possible, the panacea for every human ill. Obedience to the first, he implies, saves the single soul as nothing else will; obedience to the second saves society, as nothing else can.—Dr. John McDowell.

GOD IN THE FORM OF MAN

By Leslie E. Lindower

"The Greatest Humbling of our Gracious God"

To the human senses Jesus was a good man, who was born, lived and died among his countrymen; but who was unjustly put to death as a criminal at the age of thirty-three years. But according to the Revelation which we have of God, he was more than this; for the scarlet line telling of him runs through the Scriptures prophesying and proclaiming him from Genesis to Revelation. The Bible not only tells us of his earthly life, but also something of his heavenly existence.

The angel's annunciation to the shepherds was, "For there is born to you this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." (Luke 2:11). The Greek word "Christ" and the Hebrew "Messiah" both mean "anointed", and here they are coupled with "Lord", the name for God. So the baby born in Bethlehem's manger was proclaimed to be GOD.

John, who wrote his Gospel, "That ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, and believing, ye might have life in his name," tells us that, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God . . . and the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us" (John 1:1, 14). According to the human senses the birth of Jesus was an ordinary birth, except that he had no earthly father. But the Person that was born as a helpless infant was the Word, Who was God from the beginning, through Whom all things were made.

Luke reveals God as the Father of the human body with which Jesus was born when he said, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also, that Holy Thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35). The conception of the human body of Christ took place by direct divine action in the body of Mary. In Isaiah 7:14 it is promised that "a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." But a virgin cannot conceive in the natural way. When a child is conceived in the natural way the mother automatically ceases to be a virgin. So a miracle was necessary to bring this promise to pass. Therefore also, since Jesus' human conception was supernatural and not natural, it is more easily understood how he did not receive a sin nature as every other descendant of Adam has.

The meaning of Christ's earthly life in relation to his Deity is revealed from God's viewpoint in one of the most beautiful passages of the Bible. "Have this mind in you which was also in Christ Jesus, who existing in the form of God, counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man he humbled himself, becoming obedient unto death, yea, the death of the Cross. Wherefore also God highly exalted him and gave unto him the name which is above every name, that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in Heaven and things in earth and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus is Lord to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. 2:5-11 R. V.).

If a chart were to be constructed illustrating the eternal existence of Christ, a line should be drawn from one side of the sheet to the other, with arrows pointing each way at the ends, indicating eternity in either direction, because he was in the beginning with God, and he will exist in the future eternity. In the midst of this line indicating endless time, we should erase a portion representing thirty-three years. At the beginning of this period a line downward would indicate his Incarnation, initiated with his birth at Bethlehem. He came down "a little lower than the angels" and was made "in the likeness of men." A line parallel with the "eternity" line would be made representing his earthly life; a normal human existence, but one in which the powers of God were always evident. At the end of his thirty-three year human line another representing his Ascension could be made, to meet the original "eternal existence".

As the eternally existent Christ came to the earth and lived in a human body, we are told he had emptied himself. What was he emptied of? He was divested of the "form" of God. Did this mean that he was no longer God? Not at all! What is the definition of "form"? "Form" signifies that outward appearance which indicates an inward character. Thus we distinguish humans from brute beasts. I am recognized as man because my outward appearance indicates a human nature, or I exist in the "form" of man. The appearance is not the only difference between man and the animals, but the appearance is indicative of the difference of natures. So Christ before his human birth existed in the "form" of God, that is his Divine Nature registered in his appearance and he LOOKED like God. Now to divest himself of the "form" of God, he simply clothed his Divine Nature with another "form", and he no longer looked like God. He still retained his Deity, but not the "form" or outward appearance indicating it. He assumed another "form". This was again an outward appearance indicating the inward character of a man. Therefore those who did not believe his words or his works would not accept him as God, because he looked like a man. This was his new "form". He was, therefore, not a Godly Man, or a Manly God, but he was the God-man. He possessed two full natures. He was body, soul and spirit a man, yet without sin; he was Divine Personality, the second of the Trinity, or God the Son; and he was constantly filled with the Holy Spirit. This was the combination which made up the Lord Jesus Christ on earth, and made him different from every other man.

We must remember, that, although since his Glorification he has assumed again the "form" of God, yet he is still perfect Man. There is a Man in Heaven! We shall be like him. He is the first-fruits of the resurrection.

When Christ was born in a stable in Bethlehem it was not his beginning, but it was the greatest humbling of our Gracious God, planned before the foundation of the world. He who knew no sin and had always existed in God's glory came now to experience the hardships of a sinful world in order that it might be redeemed. And that humiliation was not completed until he had gone to the depths of the worst death and had BORNE the sins of the world. He willingly stooped lower than the lowest life into death, that he might be able to raise the lowest of dying creatures to newness of life. He had to be GOD IN THE FORM OF MAN in order that he might die.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

TRAGEDY IN A MANSION

In a "palatial mansion" in New Jersey a husband and wife quarrelled. The husband struck the wife with a billiard cue, and made a wound six inches long. The wife fired a .45 bullet into his heart and he fell dead. The wife may recover. Two children are orphaned and left with a stain and a sorrow upon them that whatever life their lives may be can never be washed out of memory. The explanation of this tragedy is in the few words to the police: "John Doe said he and the dead husband had had a few drinks at the basement bar in the billiard room."

"A few drinks at the bar" and disgrace, tragedy, sorrow nothing can wipe out. This kind of thing is already increasing rapidly in the United States. The political leaders seem willing to have it in order to get the revenue on liquor to help pay taxes that need not be. Was there ever greater folly or greater political iniquity than to give the legal privilege to have such tragedies in order to raise money? Undoubtedly the people will not stand for this kind of thing long. It must make the arch-angels weep if any Christian vote went to endorse and allow liquor to come back.—The Christian-Evangelist.

GERMAN EVANGELICALS THE HOPE OF THEIR NATION

The report of the bolt of 3,000 pastors in Germany against the pagan element in the Nazi philosophy sounds a note of great promise throughout the world. Love of the Bible, a devotion to the Impregnable Rock of the Scriptures, a resolution to pay the price of loyalty to its blessed message of hope to a dying world are facts to be reckoned with in these decadent times. Interestingly enough, the Roman Catholic Church takes sides with these new protestant Protestants.

"Belief in Christ, the thing that Protestantism and Catholicism have in common, is at stake." So spake "Germania," the old line Roman Catholic paper, across its front page, a tremendously significant fact. Germany, resting her cause on Christianity without any of these strange pagan touches like the anti-Aryan clause, and the editing of the Bible in the interest of Norse mythology, can rise to an enormous height in this world, which is feeling the tide of Atheism-Communism sweep over its treasure institutions. But Germany, with a crude barbarism, bereft of the Grace of Christ, as she blindly seeks to match Moloch with Thor, will go down to a dismal end. The struggle of German Evangelicals demands our prayers.—The Presbyterian.

BEER AND TOADSTOOLS

One of the great controversies of the current hysteria is over the idea that Beer is a Food. The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union in its educational campaign against the alcohol habit finds that large numbers of people are likely to be alcoholized through the spread of propaganda that beer is a food.

The "food" properties of beer can be viewed somewhat as the food properties of a toadstool. Mushrooms and toadstools have practically the same food value—but the toadstool in addition contains poison. So it is with beer; its slight food value is completely offset by the inherent poison in the alcohol which science condemns as a beverage. The only reason this is not generally understood is because of the clamor of the liquor propagandists.

Beer is now put forward as a non-fattening food. But eight ounces of four percent beer contains two teaspoonfuls of the active poison—alcohol a narcotic, habit-forming drug.

Food furnishes first building material; second, fuel for warmth and work; and third, may be stored against future needs. Alcohol cannot be used for building purposes or warmth and all the while it is in the body it is exercising its characteristic poisonous effect.—Religious Telescope.

UNITED STATES RECOGNIZES RUSSIA

The resumption of normal diplomatic relations between the United States and Russia was announced on November 17.

A diplomatic breach of sixteen years was closed with eight exchanges of letters and memoranda in which the Soviet government guaranteed the religious freedom and civil protection of Americans in Russia and pledged itself not to propagandize, here or at home, directly or through any agency against the American form of government. President Roosevelt made reciprocal pledges, except as to religion, which the atheistic Soviet government did not ask.

Guaranties given by the Soviet government in the negotiations leading to American recognition were:

To refrain from propaganda against the political or social order of the United States, and to restrain any agency under direct or indirect Soviet control from interfering with the internal affairs of this country.

To accord to Americans in Russia full liberty of conscience and religious worship.

To afford nationals of the United States all legal rights and protection given to citizens of any foreign country within Soviet borders.

To refrain from litigation aimed at the collection of money alleged to be due from American citizens pending a settlement of all Russian-American claims.

To waive all claims against the American government arising from American military operations in Siberia subsequent to January 1, 1918.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

RUSSIAN COMMUNE'S ATHEISTIC CAMPAIGN AGAINST AMERICA

The South is sneeringly spoken of as the American "Bible-belt" among intelligentsia who take their cue from subversive propaganda centers hid away in various northern cities.

These centers are not of American origin, do not propagate American-born ideas, and are not supported primarily by American money. But the frank directness and lack of craftiness of the American mind have sadly failed to be a match for this subtle propaganda against American faith and national ideals, which has thus made almost unbelievable headway in this nation in recent years.

If the South is wise it will accept the characterization given it by men who hate the God it worships and the nation it loves. If there is wisdom among the South's men of letters and professional scholarship, they will vertebrate themselves for the best use of their powers against the efforts of prostituted intellect and scheming subtlety to discredit in the public mind those two things which are dearest and most essential to American life and American institutions, namely, holy revealed faith and free American institutions. These were made possible only through the fact that this nation was founded by men who feared God and loved liberty. A scholarship that can be beguiled by the sheep's wool sophistries of the Red-fanged Russian wolf is unworthy to teach American youth.—Western Recorder, Louisville, Kentucky.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

ing a new and deeper interest in the Christian life and in Bible study, as well as in devotion to the church. Also conversions were registered during the meetings, but we shall learn definitely the number when the pastor makes his report. Here again that visiting habit on the part of neighboring congregations was much in evidence. Dr. Bame's appeal to the churches of the brotherhood to venture forth upon evangelism is exceedingly timely. It will require real faith in some localities to undertake an aggressive program in evangelism, but God is not slack concerning his promises, and the great need is warrant for courageous ventures.

A note came to our office from Brother H. H. Rowsey of Falls City, Nebraska, stating that John David, a ten pound boy, arrived in their home on November 25th, and that the mother and babe are doing fine. We congratulate you, Brother and Sister Rowsey, on behalf of the Evangelist family, and pray God to smile upon you with his protecting and keeping power.

Brother Rowsey continues in his letter to say: "Our church work is going along in splendid condition. Three new Christian Endeavor Societies have been organized since National Conference, and all three are fulfilling my fondest hopes. We are having two Bible classes on Wednesday evenings: "Great Doctrines of the Bible" by Evans is being studied by young people and adults, and "Great Heroes of the Bible" is being studied by the children. The coming to our church of the Peck Church of the Brethren, from six miles north of this city, has added some splendid talent to our forces. Already Brother E. T. Peck, with many years of experience in local, county and state Sunday school work, has been elected superintendent of our school. Four others are serving as teachers, and one of their young men is serving as Sunday evening pianist. Others are giving their musical and dramatic ability. And last but not least, others are cooperating with their prayers and presence in work and worship." We are pleased to learn of this example of getting together on the part of Brethren groups, which ought to be followed in other localities. In some instances the conditions would be reversed, but still they would all be Brethren in either case.

Hebrews

The epistle to the Hebrews is a great treatise in defense of Christianity versus legalism. It is one of the truly great books of the New Testament Scriptures. It has been too often neglected by scholars as they have attempted to study the books of first century origin. Just because it is an apologetic of a by-gone day is not a sufficient reason why we should lay it aside and count it unworthy of serious consideration.

The Anonymous Writer

Origen was correct when he said "Who wrote the Epistle God only knows." The benediction would indicate that Paul was perhaps its author, and that was the conclusion of the early church. The reformers rejected the Pauline authorship. Many modern scholars also follow Calvin, Luther, and Beza. It would seem, judging from the general nature of the treatise, that Paul had a hand in dictating it; that Luke dressed it up with classic literary beauty; that Barnabas poured his heart into it; and that Apollos, the young Alexandrian orator, added the flavor of his schooling to its pages. Some even think that Clement of Rome, Timothy, Silas, or Priscilla, wrote it. The sane and sober student must admit that he simply does not know who wrote it. However, to the writer, it seems to be a composite work reflecting the thinking of several worthy and Spirit-guided minds. (Or it might have been a composite work reflecting the thinking of several worthy and Spirit-guided minds. (Or it might have been a compilation of St. Paul's synagogue addresses.) The writing bears all the marks of inspiration of Biblical order.

The fact that modern Christendom is not able to point its finger to the real author or authors should not cause us to reject it as a spurious or non-canonical writing. It is a work of great value—"a work of exhortation" (13:22) leading us directly to the Superior High Priest, the Lord Jesus Christ, and to the Better Covenant. The writer or writers desire to hide themselves away from the gaze of hostile Jews.

Concerning the worth of the authorless work the words of Thiesch are admirable: "If it should be found, that a noble picture, which had been attributed to Raphael was not by that artist, there would not be one masterpiece the less, but one great master the more."

Characteristic Differences

A cursory examination reveals the unique diction of the letter, if indeed it be a letter. The familiar Pauline expressions are noticeably absent. The phrase "in Christ" does not appear in Hebrews, but in the Epistles it occurs 78 times. "The Lord Jesus Christ," a favorite phrase of the Pauline Epistles, occurring 80 times, does not occur in Hebrews. There is an absence of thanksgiving; the word "Gospel," used by Paul 60 times, is never mentioned.

Doctrinal Values

1. This Epistle bridges the gap between a militant Christianity and an ebbing Judaism for Jews who were in danger of apostasy. The old world of legalistic thought was passing and a new era of grace had dawned.
2. Christ is shown as the Perfect High Priest. He is the Perfect Sacrifice—the object and end of all the Levitical ceremonies, rites, etc.
3. All the dispensations of God to man are epitomized.
4. Gospel conceptions and beliefs are illustrated and enforced. Faith takes on a new meaning. It is no longer merely the sinners' trust in a gracious Savior, but the believer's assurance of the reality of the invisible world.
5. The Christology of the Epistle is very interesting. Christ is
 1. Greater than the Prophets. 1:1-3.
 2. Greater than Angels. 1:4-14.
 3. Greater than Moses. 3.
 4. Greater than Joshua. 4:1-13.
 5. Greater than Aaron. 4:14-10-18.

In fact, the entire book is Christological in one sense or another. The first section (1:1-10:18) has to do with The Glory of the Life and Work of Christ, while the second part clearly covers The Glory of the Life and Work of Christians. The first part consists of Argument. The second part is Application (10:19-13:25).

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan thinks the work should be analyzed thusly:

1. The Foundations of Faith, (Argument).
2. The Fruitfulness of Faith. (Appeal).

The Interesting Contrasts

(Moorehead's Summary)

1. Chaps. i, ii:—contrast between the Son and angels.
2. Chap. iii:1-11:—Contrast between the Son and Moses.
3. Chaps. iii:12-iv:13:—Contrast between entering the rest of Canaan and the rest of God.
4. Chaps. iv:14-v:10:—Contrast between Christ and Aaron.
5. Chap. v:11-14:—Contrast between Babyhood and Maturity.
6. Chap. vi:—Contrast between Apostasy and faithfulness.
7. Chap. vii:—Contrast between Melchizedek and Aaronic priesthoods.
8. Chap. viii: Contrast between the Old Covenant and the New.
9. Chaps. ix, x:18:—Contrast between offerings of the law and offerings of Christ.
10. Chap. x:19-39:—Contrast between punishment under the law and under the Gospel.
11. Chap. xi:—The nature and action of faith.
12. Chap. xii:—Contrast between earthly and heavenly congregations and cities.

5. "Better Covenant . . . Enacted upon Better Provinces." 8:6.
6. "With Better Sacrifices than These." 9:23.
7. "A Better and an Enduring Substance." 10:34.
8. "A Better Country"; "A Better Resurrection." 1:16, 35.
9. "Some Better Thing concerning Us." 11:40.
10. "Sprinkling which speaketh Better." 12:24.

The Importance of Educating Our Youth in Brethren Fields

By George H. Jones, Johnstown, Pa.

(Editor's Note: The above article of Brother George H. Jones deserves wide reading. It is being placed on this page this week because it arrived too late for publication in the White Gift issue.

The promised statement concerning the New Teacher Training Course will therefore be delayed for one week. M. A. S.)

Among the privileges of modern life without a parallel in any preceding age, is that of a liberal education. An education in any age is the "ability to think clearly and act rightly," when considered abstractly. But when considered concretely, we think in terms of professional training. To most of us college and university degrees represent the training for a profession. "The real object of education is to give children resources that will endure as long as life endures; habits that time will ameliorate, not destroy; occupations that will render sickness tolerable, solitude pleasant, age venerable, life more dignified and useful, and death less terrible." Each generation adds to or changes the object or purpose of education. However the shift of viewpoint, the necessity is felt by the best men of every age. "Neither piety, virtue, nor liberty, can long flourish in a community where the education of youth is neglected."

Brethren Schools and Brethren Youth are inseparably linked together, if the Brethren Church is to exist in the future as an evangelizing enterprise—and we can hardly conceive of the Church as other than an educational agency of evangelical purpose. Our youth will attend schools of higher learning and the school of their choice should be the school where parents will be able to feel secure concerning their religious convictions and growth. Such a school should represent the ideals and conduct of the Brethren faith. It should encompass in Curriculum and Faculty the best expression of Brethren culture and selection. Courses of study have become standardized for all schools, but too often we forget the fact, that the type of teacher employed, determines the interpretation and application of the lesson content. Christian parents in the light of modern trends in education, have become culpably negligent in their careless attitude concerning where they send their children after they graduate from high school. Apparently the only matter of interest is the proper credit standing of the school.

A great preacher writing on the subject, said, "Education is the knowledge of how to use the whole of oneself. Many men use but one or two faculties, out of the score with which they are endowed. A man is educated only when he knows how to make a tool of every faculty—how to open it, how to keep it sharp, and how to apply it to all practical purposes."

Youth has obligations in the field of education which in most cases he is not old enough to properly appreciate. Duties to God that are only dimly understood. Duties to self that are often carelessly considered. Duties to the home and family that are only too often forgotten. He fails to realize until too late that we neglect our spiritual faculties at a ruinous cost, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" Few parents and fewer youth consider the religious life of a college or university when selecting an institution to complete their education. Its reputation for scholarship, research, or athletics are the chief concern, and the attitude has been a great contributing cause to the modern moral breakdown. "It should be the aim of education to make men first, and discoveries afterward; to regard mere learning as subordinate to the development of well-rounded, solid, moral and intellectual character; as the first and great thing, to supply vigorous, intelligent, God-fearing citizens for the welfare of the land."

No teacher or institution is safe for youth where duties to God are relegated to the realm of forgetfulness, or more dangerous still, where newcomers are scornfully regarded for maintaining an attitude of reverence for the Church and Bible, and treated as unsophisticated simpletons for attending divine worship. Contempt invariably breeds unbelief. The public is more concerned about the scholastic degrees that follow a name, than with spiritual grace attained. The size of the football field and the reputation of the athletics coach, are greater qualifications too often, than the reputation of the school for piety and clean living.

Education cannot be too strongly emphasized as essential to our largest usefulness. But an education that only partly educates, and that only of the lower levels of our life, is useless in such an age as the one in which we now live. Under the strain and stress of modern life foundations for a citizenship such as is now needed, must be, not only for a healthy body and alert mind, but for moral convictions that will keep life sweet in the cynical atmosphere of doubtful pleasures, physical gratifications and a shallow agnosticism.

This education must be more than a simple process of filling the mind with all the information that memory will retain; it must do more than enable our youth to master a professional knowledge; it must do more than point out possible realms of vast scientific laws: it must fit them to think clearly, as God is thinking in nature; it must fit them to consider the goal of life, as well as the means to the goal; in fact it must fit them for living as well as the expense of living. They must be fitted to explore nature and nature's laws with reverent feet. They must be fitted to contemplate the history of humanity with prophetic vision, and charitable emotions. History is more than a review of national or racial progress, it is the unfolding of Divine Providence. But few schools teach such an interpretation.

Education must be balanced by proportionate cultivation. Ignoring the most vital forces, and scorning the most powerful motives in human history, is a poor starting point for just judgments or intelligent reasoning. Acting upon the assumption that our spiritual faculties are just as real and often more potent than either physical or intellectual faculties, men only then become fit to properly teach in any school. We Brethren have discovered that to be properly educated, youth must have a greater share of skillful religious instruction than it has been getting. We have found that youth must be taught and trained with the same skill and care in spiritual matters, as in scientific, artistic or commercial. Only as this fact is recognized is the education properly directed.

Perhaps by this time the reader has discovered that the writer is trying to say that education without Christianity will never be able to meet the tests, the stress and the strain of depression so darkens life that the under which we live today, without the convictions that friendship with Jesus Christ brings. There is no inspiration in the education that simply cultivates the material, and puts material values upon all of life's relationships. Too often the stress and strain of depression so darkens life that the only release is despair and suicide. Only as mind and body become the servants of a religious spirit can a modern education become adequate to the completion of life.

That this is not the ideal of the Technical school we are all agreed, yet most of our Brethren parents are sending their children to such schools in spite of the fact that experience has taught every Christian parent the danger of such folly. Of course if our highest satisfaction is the probable income in dollars and cents of a son or daughter, irrespective of their habits, associations and possible matings, then the school that looks like the best money getter and the so-called exclusive set enrollment, will be the one to which they will go. If the record of smoking parties, roadhouse jaunts, dancing excesses and often drinking parties, do not warn thoughtful parents, then the only lesson will be the product returned to them after their thoughtless surrender to worldly

THE LIFE OF PAUL

(Lesson for December 31)

Lesson Text: Phil. 3:1-14; Golden Text:
 II Tim. 4:7

MONDAY

The Life of Paul. Phil. 3:1-14. "Saul who is also called Paul" (Acts 13:9) lived two singularly contrasting lives; first as a blameless legalist, then, after his conversion, as a victorious Christian. Back of his religious metamorphosis, Paul was a man of dynamic and cogent personality. His consummate scholarship was stabilized by an alert conscience—a keen regard for honesty. When he discovered that he was in error “he was man enough” to change. While he settled the “in” question once and for all on the Damascus road, with his characteristic thoroughness he “reached forth” and “pressed toward the mark” that he might experience the deeps not only of saving grace but the heights of sanctification (growth in grace), the length of service and the breadth of vision.

TUESDAY

Paul's Conversion. Acts 9:1-12. One of the many implications of Saul's conversion was the mental “facing about” which led him to comprehend that the “Jesus” whose followers he was zealously persecuting, was a supernatural Person who had actually risen from among the dead, and actually ascended to the right hand of God the Father! Jesus of Nazareth truly was Jesus the Christ of God! “He was seen of me also” (I Cor. 15:8) he wrote. That sight of Jesus changed his entire outlook; not only as to the Person and work of Jesus, but also upon the interpretation of the Scriptures, and upon his life work. The report was: “He which persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which he once destroyed!” (Gal. 1:23). Do not overlook the humble but necessary ministry of Pastor Ananias, of Damascus.

WEDNESDAY

Paul the Missionary. Acts 13:1-7. Despite his years of study, and notwithstanding his cataclysmic conversion, the “chosen vessel before the Gentiles” (Acts 9:15) must undergo a period of seclusion in Arabia for some three years. There he could adjust his attitude toward the Scriptures to align with his newly found Messiah, and his zeal for righteousness could be mellowed sufficiently to make him willing to suffer for Christ's sake. When the divinely chosen instrument was ready, “The Holy Spirit said, ‘Separate ME Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them!’” It is profoundly significant that “The disciples were called CHRISTIANS first in Antioch!” (Acts 11:26). A “Christian” is a believer with a world missionary vision!

THURSDAY

Preaching in Prison. Acts 16:25-31. What a kaleidoscopic career as a witness to the “Jew first and also to the Gentiles” was the Apostle for some thirty-two years! Damascus, Cilicia, Antioch, Asia Minor, Jerusalem, Macedonia, Athens, Corinth, Ephesus, ROME! He recounts some of his perilous experiences as a minister of Christ in II Cor. 11:23-28. So mighty was his power with God, that when he and his companion, Silas, “prayed and sang praises unto God” out of the depths of the Philippian dungeon, not only “the prisoners heard them”—but GOD heard also. He answered their prayers by giving them a miraculous delivery from jail, and also the conversion of the “jailer and all his house”! When Paul was called before high Imperial tribunals to make his own defense, he the rather utilized the occasions to witness for the Lord Jesus Christ. Jails and governors alike trembled when Paul preached, prayed, sang!

FRIDAY

Exhortation to Unity. I Cor. 1:10-18. How the Apostle's heart must have been pained when he learned of the “divisions” in his beloved church at Corinth. How the Church of Jesus Christ limps today because believers are NOT “perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment”. How challenging the Macedonian “call” had been, and how sacrificially he had sought to render just the “help” needed. Now, one of the Macedonian churches is rent with divisions, worldliness, immorality, and every other kind of carnality. Besides, subtil spiritual counterfeits, “tongues” and the like had crept in. I Corinthians, chapters 12 to 14. St. Paul prescribed what he considered the only lasting cure—“preaching the GOSPEL OF THE CROSS ... to them that perish, foolishness, but unto us which are saved—the power of God!”

SATURDAY

Praying for Friends. Eph. 3:14-21. What a struggle Paul had waged for the establishment of the Church at Ephesus! And not only Ephesus, but “all they which dwelt in Asia (Minor) heard the word of the Lord, both Jews and Greeks” (Acts 19:10). First he had led twelve men into the fuller knowledge of the truth; he measured swords again with the hardened Jews; he exposed the fake cult of the exorcists; he ran amuck of the principal commercial enterprise of the city through his exalting Jesus Christ over Diana! But wital, the Ephesian epistle is one of the most profound written by Paul. Evidently the church was able to assimilate “strong meat”. How appropriate it is to leave this quarter's study of the great apostle to the Gentiles literally “on his knees” praying for this great host of believers “that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith!”

SUNDAY

Blessings of Righteousness. Psalm 1:1-6. Who can say that righteousness (right living) does not pay? Paul caught the vision of the absolute righteousness of the Christ which is imparted to the believer through faith. “I suffer the loss of all THINGS that I may have the righteousness which is of God by faith!” (Phil. 3:9). Jesus declared: “Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled!” (Matt. 5:6). The Psalmist wrote centuries before Jesus and Paul: “Blessed is the man ... whose delight is in the law of the Lord in which he doth meditate day and night!” On this threshold of the New Year, may we sincerely inquire: “Lord, what wilt THOU have me do?” Then, let us not be “disobedient unto the heavenly vision”. “Thy WORD have I hid in mine heart that I might not sin against Thee!” (Ps. 119:11). “The Lord KNOWETH the way of the righteous!” Farewell, 1933; Hail, 1934!

How Christmas Is Celebrated in Other Countries

(Endeavorers are coming to give a great deal of attention to “others” at Christmas time. In line with this thought we are giving them this information about how some “others” celebrate Christmas.—Editor.)

Christmas to most people comes merrily, for it is a time of thanksgiving and rejoicing, a time to delight the senses and fill the heart with gladness. At this season all the world is kin. Voices are more cheerful, eyes are brighter, and hearts more kind and tender. Almost every country has some strange custom peculiar to that country alone. We are now going to hear of these customs in other lands.

We find in Siberia one of the most curious Christmas customs in the world. When the Christmas dinner is served, the host sets aside a portion of every course to be given to “those whom nobody must see.” A stranger in that country always thinks, “Who is ashamed of being seen on Christmas Day?” When Russia sent its prisoners to Siberia, there were hundreds of prisoners who escaped. They travelled only at night in trying to get back to Europe, and they always had the sympathy of the peasants of Siberia. Therefore every householder hoped to give a little cheer to these escaped exiles by sharing with them the Christmas dinner. The food was placed on a table at a window in a darkened room. As every other room in the house was lighted, it was easy for the exiles to know where to find their share. The same custom is still carried out; but, as there are few exiles now, the poor people may help themselves.

In Scandinavia at the Christmas season the courts are closed, quarrels patched up, wrongs forgiven. In the evening there is a family-worship service, and afterward games are played. Often these are interrupted by groups of wandering entertainers, who come to sing songs or give pantomime shows. The whole season is a time for skating, sleighing, and general frolicking. In many villages candles are left burning in the windows all night to give light to Kristine, who brings the gifts. Sometimes a cake of meal is put out in the snow as an offering, and a sheaf of wheat is placed on a tall pole for the birds.

Christmas festivities vary according to the temperament and other customs of different races and nationalities. For the Armenians the story of Christmas has been a sad one. They prefer a quiet, solemn kind of day; and so they go to church and worship in a simple-hearted manner.

In Greece the enjoyment of the holiday is in proportion to the noise. The more noise he can make, the more the Greek enjoys it.

News from Our African Mission Work

Yaloke, par Boali, par Bangui,
 French Equatorial Africa,
 October 10, 1933.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Four weeks ago today I wrote you a brief epistle which I will try to continue today. The week from September 12th to 19th was a busy one in the dispensary. We rejoiced during this week in the return of our only nurse, Andre Bernard, to Yaloke. We regret an unforeseen circumstance which led to his re-departure for Bangui on September 20th.

It was at this time also that I took my most recent Bangui trip. These trips to Bangui are difficult and expensive. Someone must go in person to get money orders cashed for the missionaries, to purchase supplies, etc. I had planned to make it a double itinerating and business trip and to sleep in my car en route. Because of an unforeseen circumstance it was necessary at the last moment to alter my plans. Instead of going practically alone as I had planned to do, the little car contained four passengers besides Joseph Nguede our chauffeur. It was therefore absolutely impossible to take camping equipment, and it was therefore necessary to stay at the hotel. Not having the funds for this unforeseen circumstance I was led to continue in definite prayer that they might be provided.

On the day before my departure I was smitten with a sudden and severe illness and was without sufficient funds to finance the trip. God wonderfully answered prayer by raising me up that evening and by giving me sufficient strength to complete the necessary preparations for the journey. That same afternoon unexpected mail arrived bringing me a single letter, a money order from the great city of Denver, which had come through from the States direct to Africa and which was sufficient to meet the immediate needs! I relate this little incident as a testimony to God's faithfulness in answer to prayer in providing our every need.

In Bangui we were able to accomplish all that we had hoped to for the missionaries of the various stations, and to have a deeply spiritual meeting with a group of isolated Christians who are there endeavoring without any definite or officially authorized leader to serve God and to worship him in the midst of that large, wicked city, where, except for the Catholics, no Mission exists.

We ask your prayers for the city of Bangui. It is the hope of our Mission to establish a work there as soon as possible. Both funds and workers are needed, but above all definite, fervent and effectual prayer. I can't tell you how my heart is burdened for Bangui. In a little article entitled "Prayer according to the will of God", one sentence touched me deeply—"When God wants to do a great work, he tells someone to pray." I am persuaded that even now God wants to do a great preliminary work in Bangui, with a view to the establishment of our Mission there. He tells me to pray. Is he speaking to your heart also?

We passed the equinox in Bangui, and during the last afternoon of our stay and the following morning while we were en route for Yaloke the rain fell in such torrents as I have never seen even in Africa. However, God wonderfully undertook for us in crossing the barge, and in spite of trials and difficulties we reached home about six P. M. to find the missionaries had given up hope of our return that night and were assembled in the Foster home for supper. They had reached the stage of dessert, but for once we were not inclined to join with them just where they left off. Motherly Mrs. Foster soon had a full meal set before me, to which I feel I did more than ample justice. The evening was divided between fellowship and business and we retired more than usually weary.

We spent two days at Yaloke and then were off for Bassai, on the 26th of September. Miss Patterson and I had planned the trip in order to have Mr. Jobson care for our teeth, but the trip was made imperative by an S. O. S. from Mrs. Jobson who was ill. It was for this reason that I was not dismayed when in the afternoon we arrived at the Ouahm River and found the barge impassable. We therefore sent a message to Mr. Jobson by runner who crossed the river in a little canoe, telling him how anxious I was to see Mrs. Jobson and asking him to make whatever arrangements were best and possible.

Miss Patterson and I then went back to Bozoum. After some difficulty Joseph got the car to the top of the hill, where we have a rest house on the site of Mr. Gribble's original rendezvous. We had no bedding except a single blanket. We were able to borrow another blanket from a friend in Bozoum. There was a cot and mattress in the house and by one of us sleeping in the car and the other on the cot we managed to exist until morning. The next morning at 4:15 porters arrived from Bassai with relief supplies. We made up our beds properly and rested for one hour before it was necessary to commence the labors of the day.

We decided to send purchases which I had made for Bellevue missionaries by porter direct. While I was doing other things Miss Patterson wrote letters to Bellevue and Yaloke explaining the situation. I cared for a few patients and at 8:30 we left for the Ouahm to meet Mr. Jobson there. We went across with our loads in canoes and when the water became too shallow for the canoe we were carried on the backs of natives to the shore.

Mr. Jobson had his car waiting for us on the other side and we went as quickly as possible to the Fougoura River (five miles from Bassai) which was so high that the bridge had been washed out. This accident happened while Mr. Jobson was holding a communion service at Baloa Chapel on the Bozoum side of the Fougoura River. He had therefore been unable to return with his car to Bassai two days before, and it was by this coincidence that we were able to have auto transportation between Ouahm and the Fougoura. We crossed with some difficulty the broken and partly submerged bridge. We were grateful for Mr. Jobson's help and that of the natives in getting across. Mrs. Kennedy and Miss Myers had sent their "pousses" for Miss Patterson and myself and by 2 P. M. we were warmly received by the Bassai missionaries. Mrs. Kennedy gave me her room and Miss Byron gave Miss Patterson hers. They themselves slept on cots in adjoining rooms. After a hasty toilet and a quick lunch I went over immediately to see Mrs. Jobson. I was relieved to find her less dangerously ill than I had feared. Miss Patterson and I had our dental work done on the following day. Mr. Jobson did a filling and a very difficult extraction for her and two fillings for me.

On Saturday, the last day of September Miss Patterson and I returned to Yaloke, reversing the trip above described, except that I waded the shallow waters instead of being carried through them. This time we found them much more extensive. We transacted a little business in Bozoum, and except for a single blowout we had an uneventful trip between Bozoum and Yaloke. We arrived home at 3 P. M. and found that Miss Emmert was planning to entertain the entire missionary staff at our home. It being the last day of the month there was much which had to be done that very afternoon, and I assure you we were glad for a good rest that last night of September.

On our return from Bangui September 23rd we held a meeting at our Boali Chapel. It was raining, but the meeting had been previously announced and was held in spite of the drizzle. I myself sat on the veranda of Mamadou's hut, but the people, 169 of them, who had assembled within fifteen minutes after my arrival, sat in the rain. I asked how many of them had accepted the Lord Jesus. They all raised their hands but

HELP MAKE A HAPPY CHRISTMAS FOR THE CHILDREN IN KENTUCKY

The Sunday School at Lost Creek reached 171 last Sunday, and it was a rainy day. This work is growing so fast that they are unable to rightly care for the work. Money is a mighty scarce article among these folks and Christmas won't mean much to many a child there this year. Brother Landrum is desirous of at least giving them all a treat in the Name of Jesus to bring some cheer into little hearts that have so little of it. Perhaps someone who reads these lines would like to help provide this. Perhaps some C. E. societies or other organizations could fill a box with toys, or fill a bag with clothing.

And while thinking of this, don't forget that there is a little worker down at Krypton who would like to pass out some cheer to her little folks also. Miss Carter won't ask for herself so we ask for her.

"What thou doest, do quickly."

nine. I asked how many of them were willing to accept him now, and these nine came to the front. We certainly have much to praise the Lord for because of his mighty working at the Boali Chapel.

During the early days of this month I have resumed village work with my car. I have given up a class in Bible school in order to do this. During the three afternoons of last week more than eighty souls accepted the Lord in nearby villages. Twelve more accepted him at Damazon's village on Sunday afternoon, through the efforts of Mr. Foster and the Fishermens' Club.

Daily services continue on the station under the supervision of Mr. Foster and his days are crowded with his many duties as Superintendent of Yaloke Station. Mrs. Foster has very busy afternoons caring for her Bible classes and the choir, since because of additional duties it has been necessary for me to resign my Bible class, she has assumed that also. Her mornings are filled with home, garden and other duties, for besides superintending our garden and other outside work she is our efficient station treasurer. We marvel at the daily strength which the Lord gives to Miss Emmert as she continues her long, arduous days of school duties with but short and infrequent vacations. Miss Patterson continues faithful in her care of the women's work in our Bible school and is also at the service of her fellow missionaries as stenographer whenever needed.

The medical work continues to be extremely heavy. Under the strange but unmistakable providence of God not only Miss Tyson our exceptionally efficient head nurse, but also the two Cameron nurses, Andre Bernard and David Remy are now absent from us. We bow to his divine will and are persuaded that there are no second causes. We have with us one of our own Banou boys, Elie Boy, who except for a brief intermission spent as helper to Mamadou at Boali, has been with us since July, 1930. He is now our most efficient helper. We have much need of your prayers in these difficult days for God's sustaining grace. I am busy these days continuing the work of translation. Just at present I am working on the 9th Chapter of Acts. The Sunday school is now following the lessons from the book of Acts. The translations are typed and distributed not only on the station but among the evangelists at the chapels.

Volongou, our assistant pastor, has just left us to go on a trip of visitation to the various chapels which will require several weeks. We hope to be able to say something about this in our next letter.

Among the early pupils of the school who are still with us as efficient helpers we mention Joseph, who in addition to acting as my chauffeur, types, teaches and translates; Timothee who does heavy work as an efficient typist; Andre Boybou who teaches in Bible school and is learning to type; and John Mbo who assists Miss Emmert as a faithful monitor.

Today we had an unexpected visit from a former evangelist, now a chief, Yolo. Many of you know and prayed for him in the days of his fruitful service here. He still seems tender toward the Gospel and we ask you to continue in prayer that our Heavenly Father may yet win great victory in his life.

We have a very faithful evangelist who belonged to our original quartet of deacons, Jodiouane. He continues faithful day by day in his somewhat distant outpost. For him also we ask your prayers. And we would not forget Yama, who has labored since 1930 in the midst of great difficulties among his own people, the Boufi. Up to this time he has had the fellowship of his brother-in-law Salekora; but the pressure and temptations of this life have been too much for the latter and he has left the work of evangelism to enter into commercial business. Will you not pray for Yama, as he stands in a very real sense alone as a teacher among the great Boufi tribe?

We were happy to be able to visit Basai, and to find, aside from Mrs. Jobson's illness, the missionaries in good health. Miss Myers is home from a recent evangelistic trip to Bey and intends to renew the work of translation. Mr. Jobson is extremely busy in the pastoral work of a large and thriving district. Mrs. Kennedy continues busy with her Bible classes, singing classes and housekeeping. Upon Miss Byron, because of the frequent absences of Miss Myers, falls much of the care and superintendence of the native hospital.

We are sorry not to have been able to be an eye witness to the great work which is going on at Bellevue this quarter. Chapels are multiplying and translation work is increasing under the skillful hands of Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon. The hospital thrives under Miss Tyson's care and Miss Crawford is being richly blessed in her school.

We leave you now with prayer for the tribes untouched, so near to us and yet so far. May God bless you as you pray for them, and may workers speedily be thrust forth sufficient to enable us to occupy new fields.

Faithfully yours in Christ Jesus.

FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

P. S., October 13, 1933.

I cannot refrain from adding this postscript to the glory of God. The above letter was dictated, typed and in the envelope, when last night came Brother Hathaway's letter with a synopsis of the Board minutes, giving permission for the opening of a work at Bangui. It had been a long, hard, difficult day, but this news caused my faint heart to sing with joy. God, who answers prayer, is infinitely near. F. N. G.

BELL JINGLES

I am reminded that nearly a year has passed since I last reported my activities through these columns. Time passes so rapidly and procrastination is such an easy habit to acquire in writing,—these are the only excuses I have to offer.

During the past year, part of my time has been given in field work for the college and the remainder in holding meetings and giving Bible lectures; in this I have covered a considerable amount of territory, as I am reminded by looking at the mileage on my car, which has covered about 30,000 miles.

Ashland, Ohio

It was here that I had the pleasure of conducting a meeting last December with Brother Belote, with whom I labored in four revivals in past years,—while he was pastor in Aurelia, Iowa; Listie, Pennsylvania; Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and Canton, Ohio. It was a pleasant two weeks in being associated with the college folks and friends of Ashland, where I lived for nearly three years.

Dayton, Ohio

This city seems more like home than any other place to me. It was here that I served two pastorates and spent one-third of my ministry in the church. We had a three-weeks pre-Easter meeting with Brother Barnard. Had an enjoyable time and God blessed our labors together.

Oakville, Indiana

I spent several days here with Brother Lowman in the last week of his meeting, after I was through with the Dayton meeting. Brother Lowman and his wife were formerly members of the Dayton church when I was pastor. It was a privilege to be with them and their people and have a part in their work.

Milledgeville, Illinois

This is now home to me. I conducted here a week of afternoon Bible lectures last Spring and held a ten days' meeting in the church with the pastor, Brother Cone.

Travel

During the Spring and Summer months I visited and worked among many of our churches and looked after some of the College properties and interest on the outside.

Uniontown, Pennsylvania

In October as I was in the East and Brother Clough had arranged with me to help in a church financing campaign, I had the privilege of sharing with them in the wonderful victory that came in, wiping out their debt. I had a part in locating our work here many years ago and naturally was interested in this work. They have been severely tried and tested and heroically have gone forward in the face of almost insurmountable difficulties. Their building is too small to accommodate their growing membership and Sunday school which is the largest in their history and has multiplied since Brother Clough has taken over the work.

Cumberland, Maryland

This is a new church and field to our people. Brother Wakeman arranged with me to hold a meeting in November. I CONSIDER THIS ONE OF THE MOST PROMISING FIELDS WE HAVE FOR BUILDING UP A CHURCH. Here without a church building of their own they have gone forward under great handicaps until they have a good sized group of people, a fine Bible school and young people's group. Brother Wakeman and his family have made great sacrifices and given themselves unstintingly to the work. Brother Wakeman is well known in the city and surrounding country. Through broadcasting twice weekly he has given the teaching of the Brethren church, has sold and distributed hundreds of Brother Bauman's pamphlets "The Faith Delivered Unto the Saints." We had a very enjoyable time in our work here.

In my judgment Cumberland should be given every encouragement and support possible. There is no question in my mind that if this work is properly supported, we can in a few years have a strong church in this place. WHAT THEY NEED MOST IS A BUILDING OF THEIR OWN, and without one the work will be retarded. They have already purchased a fine site with two corner lots. $1 000.00 will enable them to put up a basement unit. I am willing to be one of 100 to give $10.00 for this purpose. This place is worthy of the support of our Mission Boards and W. M. S.

Berne, Indiana

I am writing this from Berne where I am spending two weeks in a Bible conference and meeting. This is the fifth time I have been in Berne. The church is here located in the country, but one of the most faithful groups of people we have. The field is limited and closely gleaned.

W. S. BELL.

ST. JAMES, MARYLAND

The little Indiana stream was at flood tide. A large crowd had gathered on its banks and some were on the bridge. The pastor led a little boy into the chilly January waters and baptized him.

It would have been almost impossible to have convinced that little boy that he would some day stand in the pulpit of that minister, but almost twenty-eight years have passed and I have just closed a happy time with Brother W. S. Baker.

November thirteen we began what we planned to be a two weeks' meeting with my Bible Chart Lectures, in the Brethren church at St. James, Maryland. During my stay with these people I made my home with Brother and Sister Dan Sensenbaugh. Having been acquainted with the son, Brother Charles Sensenbaugh, (who died a few years ago while a pastor in Indiana) it seemed almost like renewing old acquaintances. Their kindness to me was much appreciated.

We were permitted to enjoy the hospitality of many homes and test their culinary skill and can say, without exception, the husbands have chosen good cooks.

This church has a large membership but many are cold and indifferent. But I find good people everywhere I go and this was no exception. Brother Baker is a very fine man to work with and I thank him for his kindness to me.

The audiences the first week were rather small but after making several calls we began to see the fruit of our labors and on Sunday we had a large audience. Interest increased the second week and it was decided to continue a third week.

Our Lord spoke of a man who bought a farm, and another married a wife and therefore they could not come. Today so many children have school lessons and therefore they cannot come. Of course it presents a problem, but fortunate is that child who has parents who are more concerned about its eternal welfare than in a few arithmetic problems. Truly we should take heed lest at any time our hearts become overcharged with the cares of this life and that day come upon us unawares (Luke 21-34). I would far rather my children would never complete the fifth grade than that they should miss the eternal truths of the Word of God.

Brother Rohart and eighteen of his people from Winchester, Virginia, visited us and rendered much appreciated special music.

Brother Joshua Long, a retired minister, lives near here and we were glad to partake of the hospitality of his home in company with Brother Baker and Brother Coleman. We also enjoyed the hospitality of Brother and Sister Coleman in their Hagerstown home.

Not only did we endeavor to put out God's Word in the pulpit but also in the use of many hundreds of tracts and other Christian literature. On the second Sunday, a large number responded to the call to consecrate themselves in a special way for the last week's meetings.

Brother Baker conducted a baptismal service in the baptistry of the Brethren church at Hagerstown on the last Sunday afternoon, and plans to have one in a stream a week later. The meetings closed on Sunday evening with the largest crowd of the entire series.

For some three years I have had great difficulty with my health, but in these meetings my strength was better. I thank all who have been praying for my health and ask that you continue.

R. I. HUMBERD.

BIBLE INSTITUTE AT OAKVILLE, INDIANA

It was a privilege and a real joy to lead in a Bible Institute with Brother Lowman and his people at Oakville, Indiana. Brother Lowman has already reported this meeting but the one who led in the meeting desires to add a few words.

While the attendance was not what we would have desired, due to causes which the pastor has stated, the meeting was in some ways one of the most interesting and helpful ever conducted by the writer. The interest on the part of those who came was very marked. The Holy Spirit used his Word in a remarkable way and lives were touched in a way that will mean much in the future. Never has the writer been in a church where there is so much musical ability. A larger number of persons were able to sing than found in any other place and the fine thing is they were ready to be used and we were favored with special music in every service. On Sunday afternoon the men's chorus from the neighboring Church of the Brethren came and rendered a fine service. Their very fine spirit of cooperation was most commendable.

While in Oakville my home was with Brother and Sister Lowman where every effort was made for my comfort. It was a real pleasure to be permitted to be in their home and it was a real help to witness the Christian faith and fortitude on the part of Sister Lowman. In spite of her affliction she manifests that cheerfulness which can come only from a knowledge of and a real fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ and her life is a benediction to those with whom she associates.

The field at Oakville is rather difficult but a worthwhile work is being done under the leadership of Brother Lowman and a definite testimony is constantly being given. May the Holy Spirit continue to definitely lead in their work.

LOUISVILLE VICTORY REVIVAL

Our 1933 Victory Revival is history. At our Homecoming on November 19th, Brother R. Paul Miller came to us as our guest speaker and remained as our Evangelist the three weeks following, closing on Sunday evening, December 10th.

We had a wonderful day to begin our special effort. There were 225 in the Sunday school and a few more for the preaching service. Some 175 remained for the fellowship meal at noon, and after a short program about the tables we were dismissed until the evening service.

In this case a good beginning meant a good ending. Brother Miller held the folks from that first day on so that the house was practically filled at each service. The pastor was Brother Miller's helper as song leader and general roust-about. It was all a pleasure, to say the least, and with two pianists and a choir that could be depended upon,—even when asked to pray or to testify,—what preacher's heart would not rejoice and be glad?

Of course Louisville knew Brother Miller, this being his third meeting with the Brethren here in the last 12 years. His love for the Book has not waned. His concern for the sinner is as strong as ever, but how he does hit at SIN. With no thought of compromise he zealously and fearlessly proclaimed God's truth and the Holy Spirit was glad to finish the work begun in many hearts.

We were favored with visits from three of the near-by Brethren churches,—Canton, Ellet and Middlebranch. Brother MacDonald of the Ellet congregation brought the largest delegation with Brother Beal and his good Canton folks close seconds. Brother Norman Uphouse of the Middlebranch church was permitted to be in one service and several of his people came at another time. We surely appreciated this fine spirit of concern and friendliness. We hope to be able to return the compliment.

I am quite sure you are anxious to hear about the results. We are more than happy to tell you. However, as we all know it is impossible for us to tell the exact results of such a campaign. A wonderful blessing came to the church through her study of the Word and in the strengthening of the spiritual life of every believer. There were 75 who came forward for confession or re-consecration during the three weeks. Of this number 52 will receive baptism and be received into the church, while 23 renewed their vows in re-consecration. We know better than ever before that God does answer prayer. How we praise him with thanksgiving!

We realize that this wonderful ingathering means added responsibility to both pastor and people. We ask an interest in your prayers that we fail not. The Louisville Brethren, through their pastor, extend the Season's Greetings to you all.

A. E. WHITTED.

THE REVIVAL AT LOUISVILLE, OHIO

This is the third meeting we have held at Louisville. It seems that each one was better than the former. Each has been a most happy experience and we thank God for his blessing without which nothing could have been accomplished.

Last year we held a meeting here in December. This year we began in November on Anniversary Sunday. Since the last meeting the pastor and people have done a splendid piece of work in establishing and conserving that which had been accomplished before and in reaching out after others. We found a people ready for the meeting from the first night, and eager to see God work in the lives of men. As the meetings progressed, other members of the church realized the need of getting real earnest with God for the salvation of men.

Brother Whitted, the pastor, is not a noisy man, but he has a way of working that gets results. During the years he has been in this church he has brought the work to where it is now the leading church in the whole community. The Brethren church here has never enjoyed the prosperity that it has achieved during his pastorate. The work now stands as an eloquent testimony of the fruit of a clean life and a spirit filled ministry. Much of the success is no doubt due to the fact that he has remained long enough to bring this about. Many good men do not stay in a work long enough to do this.

During this meeting we had the privilege of meeting with the Northeastern Ohio Brethren Ministerial Association. This was a most enjoyable occasion. A fine spirit seems to prevail among the men.

Our home as usual was with Brother and Sister Whitted, and this very fact added keenly to the pleasure of this meeting. The hospitality of this home and that of the members is beyond expression. We shall not soon forget the many friends here and the happy fellowship enjoyed with them.

The Brethren Church has a great future here in this community and will see greater days ahead if they keep close to Christ and are faithful to his Word and in seeking the lost.

R. PAUL MILLER.

PLEASANT GROVE, IOWA

Perhaps some would like to hear from this field. God surely has blessed us this year. Since March the first of this year this church has shown signs of revived interest. On August 13th we baptized three and on October 22nd, we baptized seven. One of this number went to the Christian church in North English. On October 29th we decided to have a revival. The pastor was given authority to choose a committee to secure an evangelist. Never did God work more satisfactorily for us. On November 13th, Brother Taber came with his family and began the meeting; and he proved such a fine coworker that we hated to see him leave. His messages were true to the Word and to the Brethren church. The result was that the church was revived and four were baptized and received into the church. The meetings were to have closed on Wednesday night with a communion service, but Brother Taber was called home, leaving the pastor to preach on Tuesday night. Brother Garber came on Wednesday to conduct communion and to help receive the four into membership. Our table room was too small this time, for fifty souls were there to participate in the service, the largest family of God's saints to commune at Pleasant Grove for a number of years. The results for the year 1933 were 14 converted and baptized. We thank the Leon church for the loan of their pastor. May God bless them and Brother Taber and his fine wife and children. It was an inspiration to be with these folks.

H. W. ANDERSON, Pastor.

CENTER CHAPEL, INDIANA

The revival services of two weeks, duration closed at the Center Chapel church, with only seven accessions, but a splendid attendance and interest otherwise.

The song service was in charge of Miss May Rife, a member of the church who had taken training in music at Indiana Central. She gave her service freely in the meeting. It was her first experience in a revival meeting as a song director.

The community and neighboring Brethren responded well with about an average attendance of 70 each meeting. The weather was fine for the meetings. Although there were others in the community who should have made a confession, yet I believe the spirit will win them yet. It seems that Satan caused many to doubt and to hold back. Some gripped the seats and allowed their stubborn wills to be unbroken. Satan still makes men believe it is an unmanly thing to accept Christ as their Savior, holding on to the idea that their morals will save them. Some still think there is no place of torment save on earth. For God is too merciful to allow them to go into the Lake of Fire which is the second death. Yet we all should realize that this is according to prophecy.

There will be baptismal services on Wednesday evening, December 20. I am trusting there are others to respond and be baptized at that time.

I desire the prayers of the brotherhood.

PAUL A. DAVIS.

P. S.—The writer also, with the help of Brethren D. A. C. Teeter, L. V. King and F. C. Vanator, conducted a week's meeting at Poplar Grove from November 19th to 24th. The attendance and interest was good, although there were no accessions, yet there were many present who had not been to church for a long time. This proves to me that souls are still hungering and thirsting for the Word of God. The average attendance was about fifty. Fine cooperation was given by the Methodist, Dunkard, Christian and Brethren churches. There were those who volunteered from other churches to help in the song service. The pianist was from the Methodist church and came a distance of four miles and was present every night. She took such an interest because this used to be her home church until recent years.—P. A. D.

Building a new subway around an old one, without disrupting train service, was the remarkable feat accomplished in London, England, during the rebuilding of a station. Most of the constructive work was done at night.

Dr. Bauman's Pamphlets

One on "N.R.A.—The Sign and Its Significance" (10c each, $1.00 per dozen, $7.00 per hundred) and another entitled "God or Gog" or the coming meet between Judah's Lion and Russia's Bear (15c each, $1.25 per dozen, $10.00 per hundred) can be secured either direct from Dr. L. S. Bauman, 1925 E. 5th St., Long Beach, Calif., or from Paul Bauman, 109 W. Walnut St., Ashland, Ohio. Orders from the eastern part of the brotherhood should be sent to the Ashland address.

Guarani women, natives of Paraguay, South America, are accomplished head balancers. A traveler saw one woman at market with a basket on her head containing five struggling turkeys and a chicken. Under one arm she held a baby, under the other a large bundle of firewood. At the same time she led a stubborn donkey. While the observer was wondering how this was done, a woman passed by with a small envelope poised gracefully on her head. These women never think of carrying anything in their hands.

The use of paper products in the home has been almost entirely a development of the last fifteen years and has increased tremendously in the last ten years. The quality of these products—paper dishes, napkins, towels, et cetera—has been greatly improved. Waxed paper in the home is used for a variety of purposes, being especially useful in the protection of foods. Paper is being used extensively in the production of fibre furniture and twisted fibre rugs, suitcases and other fibre-board products. Baby carriages have also been made from heavy woven cord made from paper.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Planning the Trip

For several weeks we had been planning to go to Linwood, Maryland, for a revival. I had begged Mrs. Bame to go with me for weeks and then, when the day came to go, the Lord or the weather was in her favor, for our roads were covered with a glare of ice and snow and "go over the mountains in such weather? Not she!" Not very enthusiastic—another. I took to the train and rode four roads before I arrived and even then, they came 50 miles to get me. Linwood seems about 50 miles from everywhere: Hagerstown, Baltimore, Washington and York. To beat me still more, there were four inches of snow the morning I left there, the first in three weeks of the most beautiful Winter weather I ever saw outside of Florida! Seems the auto was just out of the question all around.

Entertainment

I had the true Maryland hospitality with their special chicken Maryland-style dinners, gracious hospitality, faithful loyalty in the meetings. More special numbers of music by different delegations than I ever had in thirty years of revivals. Fifty miles seemed a common distance for we had singers from Baltimore, Washington and other distant places—but especially from nearby Churches of the Brethren of which there are many. We would not have gotten along so well but for this very wonderful and splendid fellowship. Among those who made my stay delightful was one Dunker whom I had not seen for twenty-five years, a Brother Graybill of New Windsor.

My home was in the parsonage and a "home" it was. Never had a nicer place nor better care. Never got homesick for a minute! Mrs. Bowman knows how to take care of a preacher for she has lived a long time with hers. She humors the fellows!

The Revival

They would have three weeks even though they were a small church and the evangelist had not given so much of his time to a church for a long period. The pastor had done all he knew to get things ready, yet it took a week to arouse the countryside to our appeal and from then on, we had a continual increase in numbers, interest and success. People of all denominations came regularly and in the end we had a very profitable meeting, a good offering and a great hunger for more of the Word. Among the new members are a father with his wife and children and two young people who could boast a Quaker birthright but who would not trust to it but rejoiced in the birthright that is from above.

Perhaps no one is to blame that there were not one hundred converts but there were perhaps more than a hundred who did pledge themselves to live a better life, study their Bibles more and enlist to do more fully, the entire will of God. I am sure we did have a revival and that this church, small in numbers, will give a good account of herself in the future. They have a fine, limited field and a sturdy faithful people with whom it was a pleasure to work and to whom we expect to return again.

This is one of the churches that might have faltered and said, "we can not afford a revival", but they did not. They undertook for the Lord and he helped them mightily. Let every church in the brotherhood remember our evangelistic program, venture on faith, assured that the Lord will provide.

OUR LITTLE READERS

HOW A CRIPPLED PINE BECAME A CHRISTMAS TREE

By Evelyn Gearhart Bauer

All the birds in the great forest had ceased singing! Cunning rabbits scurried here and there, to haunts, where they watched, bright-eyed, the strange movement of a crew of men and boys, with shiny axes slung over their shoulders.

What excitement reigned! It was the day before Christmas and all the trees were looking their best, and hoping within their hearts, that they might be chosen to adorn some happy home. That is, all, save little Crippled Pine, for only too well, he knew that no one would want him, with his poor crooked trunk and sagging arms, for a Christmas Tree. "Oh, oh, oh," he sighed to himself, as more than one tall neighbor was hewn to the ground and carried down the steep hill. Just, "oh, oh, oh," over and over again.

You see Crippled Pine was very sad! He had heard how on Christmas Day, beautiful trees stood, inside of the homes, in the town, with golden, green, and red balls hanging from their stately boughs. He had also heard that brightly lighted candles were fastened to them, and tissue-paper fairies, and great clusters of sparkling snow, tinsel, and red and white candy baskets and canes. While very often, from a top-most bough, a large silver star shone down on the merry children.

"Oh," sighed the Crippled Pine, "that I might just once be a real Christmas Tree!"

Soon darkness fell on the forest. Older and wiser trees whispered among themselves. The Crippled Pine looked all about him, where had once stood his tall, stately neighbors. All were gone now, and he was very, very lonesome.

Then he heard a queer sound, and noticed a little injured bird lying on the deep snow beneath him.

"Ah, poor bird," whispered Crippled Pine, "try to fly to one of my branches. Try hard little friend!"

And although the injured bird tried more than once to reach a low, hanging bough, he fell back in the snow.

Crippled Pine bent even closer. "Try once again, my brave one," he called, in an excited voice.

Then after resting a bit after his last vain effort, the bird tried once again, and this time he succeeded, and soon pressed himself against the warm, pulsating body of Crippled Pine Tree. How happy the new friends were! Was not the injured bird safe now, and was not the crooked tree of use to someone in the world?

And far into the night, Crippled Pine sang in a low sweet voice, "What a happy Christmas Tree am I! Have I not real snow lying all about me? Have I not real stars shining above me, and best of all, were it not for my crooked trunk and low sagging arms, I could not have helped the poor, hurt, little bird that now sleeps, oh, so peacefully within my boughs!"

He sings his hymns as loud as he can, and then uses firecrackers to add to the din.

The principal feature of Christmas at Naples is a pageant shown in the churches on Christmas eve. The scene of the Nativity is presented in life size, very true to the story and very real. There are several houses showing the doors with happy people standing there. The wise men approach slowly; royal families pass; men on horseback and with mules, and peasants poorly clad, each bringing gifts, which vary from costly jewels to the plainest gifts of the peasant people. After those in the pageant have made their offering the audience rises, passes to the manger, and leaves offerings of apples, chestnuts, vegetables, and money. These are later given to the poor.

In Holland there is a custom by which money is collected for the poor. Young men of the town carry through the dark, silent streets a huge illuminated star; and the crowds that gather to watch the passing of the star give money for the poor. The star-bearers take the gifts to the burgo-master, who is bound to give the young men a good meal for their services.

In South America one of the most interesting customs is called the Christmas-eve wake". On the night before Christmas groups of young people numbering from twelve to twenty go through the streets singing carols and folk-love songs. Such groups are known as "watchers," and after they have sung a number of songs one goes to the houses and requests gifts to the spirit of Christmas.

The Mexican children's interesting Christmas custom is known as the "breaking the horn of plenty." The horn is a large earthen bowl filled with candies, nuts, oranges, raisins, and small gifts. It is very attractive as it hangs from the ceiling; for it is covered with tin-foil or tissue-paper, and is often decorated with flowers. After the evening's entertainment each person in turn is blindfolded, receives a stick, is turned about three times, and is then told to strike at the bowl hanging from the ceiling. The successful one has the first choice of the good things to eat and the gifts that are scattered on the floor. There is always plenty for everybody.

In Switzerland every evening as the sun is setting the peasant highest on the mountain lifts his hunting-horn, blows a blast, and calls: "Good night. May peace be with thee." His neighbor next below blows a blast, and repeats the wish. Every peasant down the mountain does the same in his turn. The night before Christmas a little carol is started by the man at the top; his next neighbor sings another stanza, and so on. Each one calls afterward: "Good night. Merry Christmas tomorrow. Hail the King of kings; 'tis the birthday of the Lord."—Taken from The Epworth Herald.

THE IMPORTANCE OF EDUCATING OUR YOUTH IN BROTHERS SCHOOLS

values. Many of our best thinkers are sure the great moral and financial breakdown has come as a result of the kind of college and university life of the past few decades. These leaders of ours in the political and financial world, were the outstanding products of these godless and lax institutions whose sole purpose was to turn out Technicians. They did, and many of them were soulless and heartless if the record of our modern newspapers is to be believed. The writer has in mind the pride of many a fraternity that they never intended to be the "slaves of a primitive religion, which no man of reason could accept today."

Our Brethren school has traditions. Ashland College stands for some things of the past that are worth preserving. It stands for the dignity of self-restraint. The atmosphere of the campus never permitted foul language or cigarettes, even pipes and cigars were viewed askance. The bare idea of a woman smoking cigarettes, awakened an old-fashioned abhorrence that made most of the youths imagine that the woman who smoked was undoubtedly a woman of loose morals. Perhaps this is the wrong attitude, but the writer is thinking in terms of Ashland traditions. Promiscuous petting was noted for its absence. There was a scorn of vulgar display. Perhaps a carry over from the plain Dunkard homes. There was a noble shame for unfair fame. A loyalty to every desirable record on athletic field or on a forum. Back of it all a spiritual preparedness for every event, whether in contest for honor or against sickness.

With Christian teachers whose scholastic preparation is equal to that of teachers in state conducted schools, and what is of much greater importance, character and conduct preparation that brings no blush of shame; with curriculum balanced for the full rounded character of youth, and a love for Jesus Christ, that puts inspiration into their teaching, it is with peril to our youth and peril to our faith, that we decide to educate our youth anywhere but in a Brethren school, Ashland College.

Blessings on You in the Coming Year

THE OLD YEAR AND THE NEW

*Into the silent places
The old year goes tonight,
Bearing old pain, old sadness,
Old care and old delight,
Mistakes and fears and failures—
The things that could not last;
But naught that was truly ours
Goes with him to the past.*

*Out of the silent places
The young year comes tonight,
Bringing new pain, new sadness,
New care and new delight;
Go forth to meet him bravely,
The new year all untried;
The things the old year left with us,
Faith, Hope and Love, abide.
—Annie Johnson Flint.*

ANOTHER YEAR IS DAWNING

*Another year is dawning!
Dear Master, let it be,
In working or in waiting—
Another year with Thee.
Another year in leaning
Upon Thy loving breast,
Of ever-deepening trustfulness,
Of quiet, happy rest.*

*Another year of mercies,
Of faithfulness and grace,
Another year of gladness,
In the shining of Thy face.
Another year of progress,
Another year of praise,
Another year of proving
Thy presence all the days.

Signs of the Times

Alva J. McClain

To the East a Child is Born

Almost hysterical rejoicing sweeps throughout Japan as a little prince is born in the family of Emperor Hirohito. Upon his shoulders, if he lives, will some day rest the government of the most remarkable nation of modern times. To the young child the Emperor presented a ten-inch sword, sharp-edged, sheathed in gold and white, the work of the master swordsmith of the Empire.

The student of prophecy will watch with deep interest the career of this child. Some day the "kings of the east" will march west to the demonic rendezvous at the place which is called in the Hebrew "Armageddon." (Rev. 16:12-16) Since Japan is becoming the nation of destiny in the east, this little prince so recently born might possibly prove to be the organizer and leader of that fateful march.

Is There a "Yellow Peril"?

For the past fifty years the world has watched with amazement the modernization of Japan, and approved it. In fact it was an American Commodore at the head of an armed fleet who started the process. But Japan, besides mastering our industrial and mechanical technique, learned from western nations some things which are not so good. Now she is proceeding to apply these methods in taking charge of Eastern affairs.

The program of modern Japan was set forth in the famous Tanaka Memorial: "To conquer China, we must first take Manchuria and Mongolia. If we conquer China, the rest of the Asiatic countries and those of the South Seas will fear us. . . . Then the world will realize that Eastern Asia is ours, and will not dare to violate our rights. This is the plan left to us by the Emperor Meiji, success of which is essential to our national existence."

When first issued this Memorial was regarded as wholly absurd and fantastic, but more recent events indicate otherwise. The program is being carried out, as anyone may see by merely reading the newspapers. China appeals in vain to Europe and America. Nothing but armed force can halt the Japanese program, and just at present no western nation could get any support for such a campaign. Eugene Chen, Chinese scholar and diplomat, remarks: "There is no single power . . . that can now challenge Japan in the seas of Far Asia. This fact, coupled with the character of the real government of Japan, explains why the Japanese dare, with impunity, to tear up great treaties . . . to defy and flout America and the States constituting the League of Nations."

I still do not think that Roosevelt offered recognition to Russia merely for the bit of trade which we may get. There is a rising "peril" in the East; and the one genuine obstacle to Japan's triumphant march in Asia is the Bolshevik State.

What may happen immediately, no one can foretell. We only know that at last both the Russian Hordes and the Kings of the East will meet their doom in the land where 1900 years ago a greater "Man Child" was born who "will rule all nations with a rod of iron." (Rev. 12:5)

PROGRESS of Civilization in 1933

As life passes the milestone of another year, and the final pages of the ledger are written, a brief look backward might be interesting, and also (let us hope) profitable.

The League of Nations, that political promise of a new heaven and earth, reaches new depths of ineffectiveness and disillusionment. Shunned by America, treated with open contempt by Japan, abandoned by Germany, regarded indifferently by England used by France only as a device to maintain her own advantages obtained through the Versailles Treaty, the League will be relegated to a still lower place of political influence if Mussolini has his way. And he has been getting it rather frequently.

Democracy, for a hundred years the fondest ideal of a weary world, and for which millions of men were asked to lay down their lives in the Great War, is everywhere under suspicion, often openly criticized, and in many nations has been frankly abandoned as an unworkable scheme.

Atheism, in saner times a thing which existed only here and there, and which marked men as unfit to assume high positions of leadership in society, has been lately dignified by many accessions who are counted among the great in the educational realm, and has actually become a basic dogma in the political program of a government which wields the power of life and death over 161,000,000 souls and occupies one-seventh of the earth's land surface. Nothing like this phenomenon has ever been seen on earth.

Prohibition, that social reform which was made a part of the American Constitution by long and laborious effort, and which even its sworn enemies thought would be almost impossible to dislodge, has in one brief year been cast out by the American voters with an enthusiasm and unanimity that amazed both friend and foe. The present problem which worries the United States government is how to get enough "drinkable" liquor for its thirsty citizens. Scientists are trying to get a formula for producing it quickly. In the meantime, we will try to trade some of our corn and hogs to nations which have the booze properly made and aged. And some churchmen, whose entire religion once consisted in a passion for prohibition, are now hobnobbing with the modern "bar-tenders" who sell it in groceries, drug stores and restaurants.

Divorce, once regarded as something of a disgrace to those who indulged their promiscuous fancies, and which even the most secular minded regarded as a menace to society, is preached solemnly by many of our Intellectual pundits as a necessary social instrument for the rectifying of unfortunate mistakes. People divorced on any ground, legitimate or otherwise, can find preachers anywhere who for the necessary fee will bless their consecutive polygamy. As an indication of the present attitude, a newspaper writer discusses a play which a few years ago was popular in the legitimate theater. As a preliminary to putting it on the screen today, it was found necessary to change the plot because originally it presented divorce as somewhat of a disgrace, and that benighted notion is no longer held—at least not by the crowd who pay their money to the box office.

The theater, which in its better days was almost universally opposed by Protestant ministers, has recently reached what seems to be the bottom of the pit of obscenity and lewdness, if one may believe what the theatrical critics themselves write. And now many of the preachers not only have no public word of rebuke, but themselves regularly attend—for the purpose of resting his "tired mind", one told me not so long ago.

The general public itself seems to have become a little mad, if one may judge by certain tendencies. A noted doctor was some time ago lamenting the rapid increase of nervous and tubercular ailments among women, due to their passion for attaining the "slenderness" set as the fashion by movie stars. Now the same doctor is greatly relieved because the women are once more eating potatoes and bread. But he points out, dismally, that this change of mind was not effected by the solemn warnings of the medical profession, but by a moving picture actress who has become popular enough to start a new fashion! An actress who, by the way, has been arrested for producing obscene plays, whose meteoric rise to fame has come through her dramatization of the public prostitute, and whose filthy bon mots have become almost ubiquitous in newspapers, on radio programs and even on the lips of little children who fortunately do not know their meaning. But evidently some parents should have their mouths washed out with strong soap; or better yet, have their minds cleansed by the power of the Holy Spirit.

ARE There Any Bright Spots?

Yes. All over the world there are churches and faithful pastors and Godly laymen bearing a clear and uncompromising testimony against the "god of this world" and all his ways. They are bearing the Light in whose presence sin withers and dies. And they are not alone, for the Holy Spirit is bearing witness with them. And best of all, our own puny efforts will soon be supplemented by the mighty power of the Son of God, at whose coming every thing that is evil will be gathered out of the world. Then shall the righteous shine forth in his Kingdom. (Matt. 13:41) Let us be patient, steadfast, immovable.

Resources with Which We May Enter the New Year

There are resources of a kind that are very uncertain. It is especially true in these abnormal times. One never knows how long he is going to have what he thinks he has. Many a man will enter the new year having suffered the loss of much or all that he had when the old year was new. But there are certain resources that never fail; they are as unaffected by current financial conditions as are sunshine and rain. They are spiritual, but none the less real because they are spiritual. They are vital and of supreme value and one can afford to possess them at any sacrifice. The first is:

Love for God the Father

That is the very first and most vital duty of man—to love God with all the heart, mind, soul and strength. He cannot get on successfully without that supreme regard for God, his will and way, in his life. When the Bible says: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me, . . . for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God" (Ex. 20:3, 5), it is lifting a truth out of the very nature of man and out of the necessity of his being. Paul recognized the fact when he said: "But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him" (1 Cor. 8:6). "For in him we live and move and have our being" (Acts 17:28). We cannot get away from God, and we can only succeed as we give recognition to the presence and power of God in our lives. For that Presence consciously felt is the only power big enough and all-prevailing enough to save us from ourselves and all the little false gods that creep into our hearts. Therefore we ought to take him into account continually and give him first place in our affections. "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty; for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine; . . . both riches and honor come of thee, and thou reignest over all; and in thine hand is power and might; and in thine hand it is to make great, and to give strength unto all" (1 Chron. 29:11, 12). So, in the words of the psalmist, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the king of glory shall come in. Who is the king of glory? The Lord of hosts, he is the King of glory" (Psa. 24:7-10). To make sure that he is fully enthroned in our hearts as we enter the new year will give power that will be all-sufficient and furnish us with resources that will be inexhaustible.

Devotion to Christ Our Savior

One of the mightiest sources of power in the life of a man is a keen appreciation of the Saviorhood of Christ and a lively realization of the richness of grace vouchsafed unto dying men through the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus. That kindles the fire of love in our hearts for him and makes us friends of him who came to manifest God in the flesh and was in very truth "the image of the invisible God." The sacrifice he so willingly made that we might live is the thing that most of all stirs our hearts. As John writes: "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us" (1 John 3:16). The greatness and unmerited nature of his wonderful love-inspiring ministry appears the more marvelous from Paul's statement of it to Timothy: "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began, but is now manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel" (2 Tim. 1:9, 10). Just such a salvation as Jesus brought is the thing human hearts crave and have ever craved. That was the secret hunger of the Greeks who came saying, "Sirs, we would see Jesus." And our Lord by declaring, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me," acknowledged that the key to his attractiveness and popularity looked forward to his atoning work on the cross. That was the thing that caused and still causes men to cling to him with a power that nothing can break—Christ on the cross dying for our sins according to the Scripture. That is the power that causes the saints of God to say with Paul, "I take pleasure in infirmities, in necessities, in persecution, in distresses for Christ's sake," and to go on and exclaim triumphantly "neither life nor death nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." There is no more powerful incentive to faithfulness in the new year than that.

The Fellowship with the Spirit

That is another of those mighty factors in the Christian life and which will prove to be a spiritual resource of infinite power. For that fellowship brings us in touch with God and enables us to make contact with infinite power and to secure the guidance of infinite wisdom. Thus we can hear him say: "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go; I will guide thee with mine eye" (Psa. 32:8). "And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand or to the left" (Isa. 30:21). The Spirit will teach us what to say: "For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you" (Matt. 10:19, 20). The Spirit indwells us: "Even the Spirit of truth, . . . for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you" (John 14:17). "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" (1 Cor. 3:16). He is spoken of as the "Comforter" (John 14:26) and the one who is to "show you things to come" (John 16:13). And the Spirit is to bear fruit of Christian graces in the life he indwells: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; . . . if ye live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit" (Gal. 5:22-25). From these references it is evident that the Spirit is a most important resource and its presence is not to be treated lightly, for "the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal" (1 Cor. 12:7).

Faith in the Bible as God's Revelation

Faith in the inspired word of God is another great resource of the Christian, and will be found helpful in every way. Faith in the Scriptures makes it inevitable that one shall believe in Christ, even as Jesus said to the Jews: "For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me, for he wrote of me" (John 5:46, 47). The Scriptures serve to indoctrinate us, reprove us, to correct us, and to instruct us in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect and "thoroughly furnished unto every good work." The Bible is also "the sword of the Spirit" and its effectiveness in fighting temptation is beautifully illustrated by the Master's use of the Word in his wilderness temptations. The Scripture is also the food of the soul and God's undershepherds are commanded: "Feed my sheep." It is for private and home use, and also for public reading and instruction. And the Word will one day judge us, consequently we should know it well and seek by the aid of the Spirit both to understand and to practice it, remembering the words of the Lord Jesus, "If ye love me, keep my commandments," and again, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

Membership in the Body of Christ

It is also a valuable spiritual resource to have membership in the church of Christ, which is his body. "And he is the head of the body, the church" (Col. 1:18). That brings us into a very vital relation to Christ, so intimate in fact, that he says: "I am the vine, ye are the branches." What an inspiration and what a challenge that brings us! To be members of his body we must be pure and to be a part of the bride of Christ, we must be in harmony with his will and seeking his pleasure. This church membership also brings the various Christian people into a personal relationship with one another. Paul says: "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we, being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another" (Rom. 12:4, 5). Again, "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular" (1 Cor. 12:27). And being members of the church places upon us the obligation of living apart from the world. The church by its very name and nature consists of "called out" ones, consequently the Master says through his servant, Paul: "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you" (2 Cor. 6:17). That call to separation is a great help to those who would live godly. Those who truly obey and make a clean break with the old ungodly association and manner of life, find it much easier to live as becometh children of God.

The Task

We have a task, if we are members of the church of Christ, and that fact is in itself a spiritual resource. Work is a blessing, not a curse, and so it is in the spiritual realm. "The idle brain is the devil's workshop," we are wont to say. It is the Christian who has nothing to do, or refuses to accept any task that soonest wanders away from the church and becomes indifferent toward Christ. He who keeps sincerely busy, keeps spiritual and grows in strength. But everybody has a task if he will open his eyes to see it, and hear his Lord say: "Go work today in my vineyard." To all he says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." "Ye are witnesses of these things." And that, this coming year.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Send your "White Gift" offerings to Dr. K. M. Monroe, Treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, Ashland, Ohio.

Pastors and Sunday school workers will be especially interested in the Sunday School page this week because of the setting forth of the plan for the Larger Teacher Training Course, which includes the Shorter Course now being completed by some schools. This enlarged course is being sponsored by the National Sunday School Association, as Professor Stuckey says, and indicates the aggressive leadership in Teacher Training being exercised by this Association.

Dr. Kenneth M. Monroe gives us a brief review of a new book on archaeology entitled "Mooring Masts of Revelation", a posthumous publication of Dr. M. G. Kyle, published by Fleming H. Revell, New York. See his outline of the book in another department of this paper. Again, we remind our readers of the standing invitation to those who are readers of good books to share with the Evangelist family an occasional book review, telling something of the content of a book that has been especially valuable, particularly a new book, stating the exact name of the book, the publisher and price.

Brother J. L. Bowman, pastor of the Linwood, Maryland, church, reports the revival meeting recently held by Dr. Charles A. Bame, who also made report in last week's issue. The pastor says the Bible expositions as well as the evangelistic sermons were highly appreciated by the people. Eight souls were baptized as a result of the meetings and two converts will probably go to another church. Five others had been received into membership preceding the meetings. It is said that a real revival spirit was developed and that the community and church were greatly stirred. It is encouraging to note the cooperation given by the Church of the Brethren people of that section.

The Christian Endeavorers will find a message in this issue from their national president, Brother E. M. Riddle, who calls attention to the fact that the fifty-third anniversary of the birth of the Christian Endeavor movement is approaching, also the fortieth anniversary of the beginning of the Brethren young people's work. He suggests the beginning of preparation for a worthy celebration; his church at Waterloo, Iowa, has already begun to plan their program.

A part of the objective in this celebration is the lifting of an offering to apply on the evangelistic goal that the Endeavorers have set before themselves. Also, the editor of the Christian Endeavor page, Brother C. D. Whitmer, begins in this issue a series of short articles on "Christ My Master," and our readers may expect to find them very much worth while.

Brother Charles W. Mayes, pastor of the church at Whittier, California, says the Evening Bible School, which meets in his church is functioning enthusiastically. It is a unique experiment in Bible instruction and is apparently proving quite profitable to the church. The Sunday school registers a marked increase in attendance over last year. The preaching services are exceptionally well attended, sometimes running over three hundred on Sunday evening, and necessitating the enlarging of the seating capacity of the auditorium. A new building is to be erected adjoining the church, adding twenty-six hundred square feet to the congregation's equipment. Almost every Sunday witnesses decisions for Christ. It is evident that this church is going forward in a fine way.

Renew that subscription now. There never was a time when it was so important to exercise great care as to the kind of reading matter that comes into the home. Not only should the home be guarded against salacious and ill-suggestive magazines, but also against those religious magazines that cast doubt upon the word of God. Even among the so-called fundamental publications, you will find none that can so safely be relied upon for faithfulness to the Word as your own church paper. If you are interested in maintaining the Brethren faith alive in your home and in your own heart, keep the Evangelist coming and read it faithfully. And remember, if you can only afford one religious paper, that one should be your own church paper. Renewing your subscription or paying for one for a friend who cannot afford it, should be done in the same spirit that you make a contribution to missions; it's your Christian duty and privilege. And loyalty in this respect brings rich reward in the form of spiritual food.

In a letter that came to the editor's desk last week from one of our loyal pastors, who wrote expressing appreciation for the handling of certain copy, there was also this reassuring statement: "This year I am going to put forth a special effort to enroll as many of our members for the Evangelist as we can possibly get. I am hoping that the church will be able to make some concession by way of paying a portion of every subscription and thus making it possible for a large number to subscribe. Our people certainly are hard up financially and many would like the Evangelist but simply cannot afford it." That sort of a resolve shows the right kind of a spirit, and widely put into practice will bring great success. The idea of the local church paying a part of each member's subscription is good and is already in operation in a number of churches. Several churches pay a dollar of each subscription and the individual member pays the other fifty cents, making the $1.50 rate to Honor Roll churches.

Our correspondent from the Second church of Los Angeles, California, says the church has gone forward under the earnest pastoral leadership of Brother Arthur D. Cashman, who is faithfully assisted by his capable wife. A unique series of services lasting three weeks, during which time a number of visiting preachers cooperated with the pastor in bringing the messages, resulted in much inspiration to the congregation and in the collection of funds to aid in the repair of the church. The church has suffered a real loss during the year in the death of two of its prominent workers, Brother and Sister Albert E. Neher. It was only recently that Brother Neher passed on to his reward. His years of faithfulness in leadership in his own church and in the Southern California district merit special notice and we are glad to cooperate with the pastor and church correspondent in paying tribute to this godly man of the pews. The world was made better and the kingdom of God advanced because of the service of this devout and worthy deacon and for many years capable Sunday school superintendent. We may well pause in reverence at the passing of such men. His church and district will especially miss him.

A NEW YEAR PRAYER

*Father, I will not ask for wealth or fame,
Though once they would have joyed my carnal sense:
I shudder not to bear a hated name,
Wanting all wealth, myself my sole defense.
But give me, Lord, eyes to behold the truth;
A seeing sense that knows the eternal right;
A heart with pity filled, and gentlest ruth;
A manly faith that makes all darkness light:
Give me the power to labor for mankind;
Make me the mouth of such as cannot speak;
Eyes let me be to groping men, and blind;
A conscience to the base; and to the weak
Let me be hands and feet; and to the foolish, mind;
And lead still farther on such as thy kingdom seek.*

—Theodore Parker.

DOES IT PAY?

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

According to press reports, just the other day in our neighbor country a convention was held, and at the conclusion of a firey address the session ended with the delegates shouting, "Down with God—down with the church." In every community of our own beloved country there are groups of people who are saying by their lives the same thing. They are too cowardly to shout it openly in convention halls, but their lives influence men and boys to a far greater degree than Christian leaders are wont to admit.

Many church people spend much time for their cause. They give large sums of money. They are backing the missionaries with prayer and money. Preachers are burning up their nervous energy in leading the people in such endeavors. Does it pay? The widow, alone and lonely, says, "Yes—that's my greatest comfort." The broken-down preacher says, "Yes, that is my one great hope." The blasphemer says, "No; there is nothing in it." The libertine says, "Nothing in it." The get-rich-quick man says, "Nothing in it." Grouping these classes with their attitudes we find it depends:

(1) On what value is attached to God's Word. (2) On what you measure Christianity by. (3) On what we have invested in the claims of the New Testament church.

The value we attach to God's Word is the key to many a life. The all but flippant way the age in which we are living receives the revealed Word of God is back of all church-looseness. Does church-life pay? Not if it makes no difference what God has to say. The strong convictions of the apostles is the one outstanding event of the religion of the early church. They never wavered in the face of beatings, prisons and martyrdom. Not one of them renounced their faith as they approached death—and death in its most shocking and terrifying forms. Men tell us our word CONVICTION comes from "chained as a convict". The disciples were chained to what their Master had taught them. Die they might; renounce their Lord's teaching, never! In our age men think no more of tossing to the winds a plain "thus saith the Lord", if it stands in the way of their social program, than if it were so much newspaper rot. And I do not hesitate to say that the church of God is reaping what she has been sowing for these many years. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron" (1 Tim. 4:1, 2). If "the latter times" are not here, the conditions described surely are.

Still, we are happy, because whatever the near program of our Lord may be, we are chained to his teachings concerning the facts of sin which we face, and the Lord's remedy which he has in store for a rebellious world. God always warns, and warns, before he ushers in a new dispensation, whether men pay any attention or not. When holy men of God stood up in the days of Noah and pleaded with people to enter the ark against the torrents of waters to be turned loose on a disobedient world, and declared that only eight out of the whole multitude of people would be saved from the flood of waters, men could have said, "That's the opinion of an old crank; do you think that God who made all and loves all will destroy the great masses of humanity, and only save eight people?" But that is just what happened. Men may scoff at what God says, but that does not change his plans.

And, after the Lord had opened up the Red Sea and thus helped his chosen people to escape the further terrors of the Egyptians, as the thousands upon thousands faced the wilderness and the Promised Land, if some good man had mounted a rock and declared that the word of the Lord he was about to proclaim, was that only two out of that great multitude would ever be able to enter the promised land, men would have said then, as they do now, "He is an old fool; does he think that God would have opened up the Red Sea and brought us out of Egypt and then allowed only two to enter the Promised Land"? But there were only two who entered that land, whatever any man might have said,—Caleb and Joshua. It seems that this old world has such a grip upon humanity that when you talk about "separation from it and its idols", you are laughed at as one demented.

Does it pay to be out and out for him? Listen:—The dying President, at Buffalo, New York, is murmuring, "Nearer my God to Thee." Bismarck, the great German emperor, said that he hoped for forgiveness in the blood of Christ, and recognized the will of God as set forth in the Gospels. Gladstone, England's greatest statesman, declared that Christianity has not only contributed to the betterment of man its brightest and most precious jewels, but has been what our Savior has pronounced it, the soul of all the residue. Garibaldi, Italy's greatest statesman, said in addressing the army, "I am a Christian, and speak to Christians. I love and venerate the religion of Christ, because Christ came into the world to deliver humanity from slavery." Benjamin Franklin said, "As to Jesus of Nazareth, my opinion of whom you particularly desire, I think the system of morals, and his religion, as he left them to us, is the best the world ever saw, or is likely to see". Noah Webster, the great lexicographer, said, "The United States commenced their existence with the best gift of God to man—the Christian religion". Sir Isaac Newton declared, "I count the Scriptures of God to be the most sublime philosophy". Morse, the famous electrician, honored by all the civilized world, stated before the communion table, "Oh, this is something better than standing before princes". A few days before his passing, when a friend spoke to him about the great goodness of God, replied, "Yes, so good! so good! and the best part of all is yet to come". It's enough, therefore, to say with Paul, "We shall be like him." Let us meet his conditions. New Paris, Indiana.

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humberd

Study Number Twenty-five

Kept by Supernatural Power

As these two men witness for the Lord, they will bring down the wrath of evil men and efforts will be made to kill them. But strange things take place. When an assassin slips around with a gun—immediately lightning shoots out of Elijah's mouth and the man falls dead. (Rev. 11:5).

These men are impregnable until they finish their testimony (vs. 7). Then the beast will kill them and their bodies will lie in the streets of Jerusalem for three and one-half days.

Men Show Great Hatred

For three and one-half years men have been tormented by these witnesses reminding them of the God of Heaven. Suddenly the news is flashed around the world that the two men are dead. At the signing of the Armistice people went wild with joy and at the death of God's two witnesses a scene of rejoicing will take place that will outdo all former occasions. They will not allow burial for the bodies, (no doubt they will be kicked about by brutal men) a great stream of humanity will rush to Jerusalem to "see their dead bodies" (vs. 9).

"And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwell on the earth" (ch. 11:10). How foolish for men to think that they are through with God when they are rid of his witnesses. But "the heart is deceitful above all things" (Jer. 17:9) and even in our present time ungodly church members rejoice when a Godly pastor moves to another place, not realizing that God must yet be dealt with.

It is so here, the days of rejoicing soon end. Suddenly these two dead bodies revive and stand up. Earth has rejected them but they are welcome in Heaven, "Come up hither" is the cry and they ascend up to heaven in a cloud" (ch. 11:12).

Unrepented Hearts

There is a great earthquake and seven thousand men are killed. The terrifying sights move the remnant to give "glory to the God of heaven" (ch. 11:13). This does not mean that they repent, but like Pharaoh's magicians they must admit that, "This is the finger of God." But we read, "Pharaoh's heart was hardened" (Ex. 8:19) and so here, another woe must yet be visited upon them.

"The second woe is past; and behold, the third woe cometh quickly". (Ch. 11:14) The first woe was brought on by the fifth trumpet and ran for five months (ch. 9:12). The second woe was brought on by the sixth trumpet and when the seventh trumpet blows the last great woe is visited upon mankind.

Seventh Trumpet

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ" (ch. 11:15). Let us remember that the seventh trumpet covers a period of time and includes the vials (ch. 10:7).

As soon as the trumpet sounds there are voices in heaven. We will hear more of these voices in later chapters. An angel will announce the fall of Babylon, another will preach the everlasting gospel, while another will shout the doom of beast worshippers. Chapter 11:15 to 19 is a rehearsal of what is to follow up to chapter 20.

Victory Announced

A great cry bursts forth, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord". This will be facts at the close of this trumpet; that is, after the battle of Armageddon, but victory is so sure that the voices announce it ahead of time.

Our redemption depends upon the death of Christ, yet just before he died he cried "It is finished." He was not yet dead, but all was so sure that he could make the announcement ahead of time.

"The nations were angry, and their wrath is come" (ch. 11:18). Men have hated Christ without a cause and his patience has run throughout the centuries, but God's justice must bring judgment upon evil men and his wrath will finally come." What exhaustion of boundless mercy when God rises up to vindicate his people.

Rewarding His People

"And the time of the dead that they should be judged and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets and to the saints and them that fear thy name" (Rev. 11:18).

God must judge mankind. He could not be just and not do so. Rich men cheat and rob the poor yet they die happy and full of strength, while often the poor man, who trusts in his God, barely makes a living and dies in obscurity.

Full justice is never done here. Men have been stoned; have had trial of cruel scourgings; have been sawn asunder and have wandered in deserts and in dens and all because they dared live for their God (Heb. 11:37). The time must come when God will reward them that fear his name.

"Daniel must yet "stand in" his lot at the end of the days (Dan. 12:13). Moses must yet possess his "recompense of the reward" (Heb. 11:26) and Abraham must inherit the "city which hath foundations" (Heb. 11:10).

Gauge for Judgment

"And shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth." God's wonderful creation has been marred by sin. It is natural for the carnal man to love to destroy and waste. The hunter carelessly shoots down the little song bird, and laughs when the rabbit writhes in its death agony. When I was a farmer, never were horses so well fed and so much grain wasted as at noon, in threshing time, when their owners had access to the neighbor's corn-crib.

But God will rise up in judgment and it will be seen that men set the gauge for their own judgment. If they have been merciful they will obtain mercy. If they have been forgiving they will obtain forgiveness. If they love to destroy and waste they will be destroyed. This, however, is not a matter of salvation but of works.

Preparing for a Revival

By J. Milton Bowman

Shall we turn to Psalm 85:6? It reads as follows: "Wilt thou not revive us again that thy people may rejoice in thee?" Perhaps it would be well before we start preparing for a revival to find out what one is. I do not go in much for definitions, for the simple reason that they are usually inaccurate, due to the fact that as a general rule there is a word or phrase within the definition itself which needs defining. However, the following definition has helped me: "A revival is the renewal of the first love of Christians, resulting in the awakening and conversion of the sinner, to God."

There is no use in preparing for a revival, if one does not believe in them. Many persons have given me what they considered very good reasons why revivals not only are unnecessary, but also actually harmful to the church. Let us consider, for a moment, some of these objections. Many could be given, but the following three will serve as examples:

1. EMOTIONAL APPEAL. It is claimed that revivals appeal to the emotions and the terrific let down after a revival leaves the church in a worse state than it was before. It is not good to have an emotional orgy.

2. STEADY GROWTH. A gradual, reasonable growth is much more logical and successful and produces results far superior to the periodic spasms worked up by professional evangelists.

3. RELIGIOUS EDUCATION. An efficient system of religious education is a much better substitute for revivals.

There is no doubt in the minds of anyone but that there is much fanatical emotionalism, bordering upon insanity, fostered by some evangelists. We should not, however, judge the results of a sane revival,—brought about as the result of prayer, through the direction of the Holy Spirit,—by some who go off on an emotional tangent. We cannot have a true revival unless the emotions are stirred! Multitudes of material interests tend to drag even Christians away from the things of the Spirit. The Spiritual emotions must be aroused to a greater degree than the conflicting attractions, if the Christian who is drifting and the outright sinner are to be drawn to a place of complete conformity to the nature and will of God.

A steady, gradual, Christian growth would be the ideal method. Wouldn't it be wonderful, if we could take a child in infancy and train it in such a way that it would grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? Every Christian parent should do this. They do not, however, and then there is the vast multitude of unsaved parents.

Religious education of the right type is fine, but it takes more than merely education of any kind to win souls and to evangelize the world. King Charles was surprised that the learned Dr. Owen would go to hear John Bunyan, "an illiterate tinker," preach. "I would gladly give up all my learning for that tinker's power of preaching," said Dr. Owen.

The Common Method of Evangelism in the Past

There is positively no doubt but that there is Biblical and historical authority for saying not only that are revivals necessary now, but that this was the common method of evangelism in the past. Time forbids going into detail but the following references, with dozens more which could be mentioned, indicate what the Bible says concerning revivals. "Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?" (Ps. 85:6) "... O Lord, revive thy work ..." (Hab. 3:2). "... take up the stumbling block out of the way of my people for thus saith the High and Lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, ... I dwell in the high and holy place with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones."

All through the New Testament, we have THE SPIRIT OF REVIVAL. Paul for example, constantly went about confirming and reviving the churches. If he couldn't go himself, he either sent another, or wrote a letter, or both.

The ups and downs of the children of Israel; the great revivals under the apostles, where in forty years the whole known world heard the Word; and the later reformations, are proof that revivals were the method. The divine will and plan in this matter are set forth by the apostles; the later church fathers; the reformers, such as Luther; Huss, Calvin, Fox, the Wesleys and Whitefield; the Moravians; Spurgeon; Moody; Torrey; and Charles Finney. These servants of God are authorities beyond questions.

Spurgeon said, "A genuine revival without joy in the Lord is as impossible as spring without flowers." Finney is one of our later authorities through whom possibly six hundred thousand souls were won to Christ. He makes the following statement: "If men were disposed to obey God, there would be no need for the prayer, 'O Lord revive thy work.' Most all of the religion of the world has been caused through revivals. It is necessary to produce a greater excitability in man for good than those interests which are pulling him away from Spiritual things."

Growth Dependent on Stewardship

You perhaps do not agree with the following statement: A church's spiritual growth is in a large measure proportional to its understanding and practice of stewardship. You say, what connection has stewardship with preparation for a revival? Very much! Yes, very much! Just the other day a member of a large denomination said to me, "We positively must curtail our foreign mission program. It is wrecking our church, and if we do not retrench, our church will become financially bankrupt." I asked him if he knew how much his denomination was giving; he did not. He was surprised when I told him that his denomination was giving only twenty-five cents per member per year for foreign missions, and yet they were bringing back missionaries by the hundreds. Think of it. Less than one-half a cent per week, per member, to evangelize the world! This is wrecking that wealthy denomination? You smile. The Brethren church does better than that, I grant, but even we should hang our heads in shame. Our denomination averages roughly a dollar and a quarter per member per year. This is less than three cents per member per week to give the Gospel to the World. Until the Brethren church gets out of the postage stamp class concerning missions, she will never grow and have a real revival! I am talking to you people right here, Christians, not the unsaved. We give less than a postage stamp per week to foreign missions, and I pay six dollars a year for a subscription to the Philadelphia Record, which is four times the denominational average of the Brethren church to foreign missions. If this is true with foreign missions, it is a disgrace to mention what we give to Home Missions. A few years back, the Christian Missionary Alliance gave twenty-four dollars per member per year to Foreign Missions. What a contrast!

I have heard, and used to believe myself, that the Brethren church was becoming top heavy on missions. A statement by Dr. Chalmers opened my eyes. His great law is as follows: "Foreign missions act upon the Home church, not by exhaustion, but by fermentation." Let us get out of the postage stamp class regarding foreign missions and then match what we do for the foreign, in home missions. I am concerned about this problem. Stewardship may not be the most important consideration in preparing for a revival but it is one of the great weaknesses of the Brethren church and for that reason, I am emphasizing it today. If the average Christian would give to the Lord, even a portion of what they spend upon knick knacks and unessentials, there would be no Foreign and Home mission problem, from a financial standpoint. It used to be that there were not enough laborers to go forth; that is true no longer. There are dozens of young people who would prepare to go but they know that the Brethren church will not be able to send them after they are prepared. Christ said that the harvest is white but the laborers are few. How true that is! And what a terrible indictment against the Brethren church when she does not send even those few who are ready. The breakdown of denominational missions throughout the world is in a large measure due to the fact that THE EVANGELICAL CHURCHES ARE ROBBING GOD!

I too was guilty of the same thing until recently. If you will pardon a personal illustration, I shall tell of the struggle within myself along this line. As a recent graduate from school with a school debt, the necessity of purchasing a car, furniture, and other things too numerous to mention; with a desire to save in order to attend seminary, I said to the Lord that as soon as I was out of debt

The old aqueduct constructed by Pontius Pilate before Christ was crucified is in use again to relieve a water shortage in the city of Jerusalem. Engineers say it is as effective today as it was 1,900 years ago when it was first built. The Moslem Supreme Council has put it into operation, and supplies 2,000 gallons daily to the reservoirs of the Mosque of Omar. Part of the water is piped to Bethlehem.

Officers and employes in the Government's civil service numbered 577,170 at the beginning of November. The Civil Service Commission reports a gain of 11,738 since the beginning of July and 13,067 more than on January 1.—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

SAMARIA'S RUINS LAID BARE

The Harvard Expedition has announced the result of excavations in Samaria, the capital of the Northern Kingdom of Israel. A massive stone structure, called by the discoverers "Jezebel's Tower," fills in one more item in the growing picture which archaeology has been reconstructing which verifies the Scriptures. It is interesting to see the Bible quoted in extenso in the great daily papers. It is impressive to know that scholarly men can take the Bible and go back to the places described and dig, and find what the Bible says was there in ancient times. I Kings 16:29 begins the story of Ahab, which is carried on through the many events. Jezebel, Elijah, Jehu, the priests of Baal, Carmel, the famine, the terrible climax years later when Jezebel is slain in II Kings 9:33, are all familiar figures and events in the sacred story. These external facts thus verified suggest to us the veracity which also belongs to the great spiritual realities of sin, judgment and redemption, which also fill the pages of Holy Writ.—The Presbyterian.

INSTITUTION VERSUS SPIRIT

It was not a great ecclesiastical institution which "turned the world upside down" in the early days of Christianity, for there was no established church except the Pharisee-ridden synagogue of the Jews. It was the spirit in humble, unlettered followers of the Christ.

It was that same indwelling Christ spirit which converted the Roman catacombs—"full of dead men's bones"—into a sanctuary where men met God and enjoyed the beautiful fellowship of those who had "been with Jesus."

Useful as the institutions of men may be made as instrumentalities, let us not forget that the Kingdom of God comes only as human lives yield the "fruit of the Spirit."—The Presbyterian Advance, Nashville.

INVITING WAR

It seems peculiarly inappropriate to have the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy issued around the Christmas season, especially when we are told, as Secretary Swanson tells us, that the American Navy is so "impaired" as to invite war, that the welfare and protection of our country is "dependent upon the relative strength of our fleet," and that the time has come when the United States "can no longer afford to lead in disarmament by example."

Without presuming for a moment to question the sincerity of the Secretary in making these statements, it is already obvious that the chief effect of his utterances to date has been to increase greatly the prospect of a competitive race in naval armaments between Japan and our country, at any rate if the Congress of the United States can be brought to accede to the Secretary's desires. It is difficult to believe that any considerable number of people can be persuaded to take the view that such a naval competition would be the best way to preserve peace in the world. We would do a thousand times more to cultivate friendship with Japan by rescinding the un-Christian and un-American discrimination in our immigration law, than by building hundreds of battleships. We can only hope that there is still enough of the Christian spirit and ideals in the hearts of our statesmen to induce them to put their trust in right rather than might.—Reformed Church Messenger.

THE OXFORD GROUP MOVEMENT

The Oxford Group Movement is again active in our city. We are astonished at some of the names we see connected with it. However, men matter not. It is a bloodless "social gospel" movement under a new and very deceptive guise. One single statement from its "Bible"—"For Simmers Only"—ought to be enough to settle forever the attitude toward it of any real believer in the gospel of the grace of God, and, that is the statement that its members "do not stand for a point of view as the price of a safe seat in Paradise, but for a quality of life."—Page 117.

If that is not an emphatic statement to the effect that salvation is to be obtained on the ground of personal merit, then words are without meaning. And, what is "faith" save "a point of view?" As for an old-fashioned preacher who refuses to be entangled in the new fads that would supplant the old rock-ribbed gospel of salvation through the vicarious sacrifice of the Son of God, we shall continue on the job of telling sinful men the good news that "By grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast"—never forgetting, however, that "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:8-10). Let those who feel that they have attained unto "a quality of life" that is a sufficient "price" for "a safe seat in Paradise," boast in their own sweet righteousness, but as for one sinful man—

"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." (Gal. 6:14).—Calendar of First Church of Long Beach, California.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

James

"Yea, a man will say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: show me thy faith apart from thy works, and I by my works will show thee my faith." James 2:18.

The entire Catholic epistle of St. James revolves around the problem of faith and works. No text in the Bible on the foregoing topics could possibly be such an excellent crumb as this one from the Divine loaf. The great epistle of St. Paul to the Romans is a book of faith, but not faith alone, for it has a practical section which stresses the way faith expresses itself in everyday action. The book of St. James is primarily an ethic of Christ—eminently practical in content and emphasis—illustrating variously the proper relation of works and faith. Good works, to St. James, are the fruit of faith.

Salvation, let us remember, is a matter of faith, apart from works. By faith is a man justified before God. Works follow. By no conceivable amount of effort could a man save himself although he might give all his possessions to the poor and live an ideal worldly life.

"Nothing in my hands I bring,

Simply to thy cross I cling, is first, last, and all the time, the Biblical order in matters pertaining to regeneration and the new life in Christ Jesus, our Lord. It is furthermore the order of the evangelical preaching of our day and every day.

The Catholic Epistles

Already the writer has used the word Catholic in connection with St. James' letter. By its usage we have in mind epistles which are generally addressed to a larger constituency than the epistles of St. Paul. They are addressed to the church general, rather than to the church or churches local. Seven epistles are embraced in the group: James, I and II Peter, I, II, and III John, and Jude. It is true that the Johannine works—second and third—are not addressed generally, and consequently are not Catholic in the already defined sense; yet at an early date they were linked up with the first epistles so closely that they were allowed to remain under the broader designation.

Gloag says: "Subsequently to the time of Eusebius the whole seven Epistles were admitted into the Canon, and are mentioned in the various ecclesiastical catalogues, which were promulgated by the Councils of the Church, or given in the works of the celebrated Fathers." Gloag's witness is true.

Which James? Jesus' Brother?

This letter has been ascribed to four different persons who bear the name "James," namely, James, our Lord's brother; James, the son of Alphaeus; James, the son of Zebedee; James, an anonymous writer who assumed that name in order to gain authority for his writings.

Most scholars agree, having sifted the evidence thoroughly and conclusively, that the Lord's brother, once a doubter of Jesus' mission and later the famous Jerusalem bishop, is the true writer of the book. Without enumerating the many details and considerations involved in the matter, the writer will declare that he believes that none other than the Just James, the Lord's brother, could have written the material we have at hand.

To Whom Written?

"James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the Twelve Tribes which are of the Dispersion,"—that constitutes the Jewish Christian group to whom the Epistle is addressed. Lange avers: "James put this Epistle into the hands of Jewish Christians that it might influence all Jews, as it was a missionary instruction to the converted for the unconverted and the truly converted for the half converted."

Though the book is Jewish in tone, it is meant for Gentile Christians as well as Jewish Christians. Both are under grace. Robertson aptly says of the book: "It is Christian in point of view, spirit and ideal."

When Written?

In all probability James the Just wrote this book around 50 A. D. prior to the Council of Jerusalem in which the writer was a prime mover. He introduced the resolution in that assembly which settled the controversy. However, this letter contains no reference to that matter.

On the other hand, it must have been written before the Destruction of Jerusalem in 70 A. D. That is not even hinted at by James or by another probable writer. The Lord's brother suffered martyrdom in 62 A. D. we know. And we conclude logically that the earlier date from 50-60 at the most is the better one.

Interesting Features

This Epistle abounds in rich and vivid natural imagery. Note the following:

1. "The waves of the sea driven with the wind and tossed" (1:6).
2. "The flower of the grass." (1:10).
3. "The sun risen with a burning heat." (1:11).
4. "The fierce winds." (3:4).
5. "The kindling of the fire." (3:5).
6. "The beasts, birds, serpents, etc." (3:7).
7. "The fig, olive and vine, the salt water and fresh." (3:12).
8. "The vapor that appeareth . . . then vanisheth away." (4:14).
9. "The early and latter rain." (5:7).

Key Words

The word "faith" occurs 12 times.

The word "works" occurs 13 times.

The word "doers" occurs 5 times.

The Seven Fold Perfection of Divine Wisdom

The wisdom which is from above is:

1. "Pure,"
2. "Peaceable,"
3. "Gentle,"
4. "Easy to be entreated,"
5. "Full of mercy and good fruits,"
6. "Without variance,"
7. "Without hypocrisy." (3:17).

The Outline

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan analyzes the epistle thusly:

1. Introduction. 1:1.
2. Faith as a Principle of Victory in Temptation. 1:2-27.
3. Faith as a Principle of Action Toward Men. 2.
4. Faith as a Principle of Wisdom in Speech. 3.
5. Faith as a Principle of Purity in Character. 4.
6. Conclusion. 5.

Doctrinal Truth

1. Faith, works, love,—are brought together.
2. The Second Coming of Christ is foretold and patience is the key word relative to that coming.
3. Divine Healing by means of the prayer of faith is taught.

Inasmuch as there are many things in the book of James which remind us of the Proverbs of Solomon and The Sermon on the Mount, the writer takes liberty to adapt a soul-winner's arrangement of the book into a tenfold series of beatitudes:

The Beatitudes of Real Religion

(Based on the Book)

1. Blessed is the man who is tried.
2. Blessed is the man who endures temptation.
3. Blessed is the man who is a doer of the Word.
4. Blessed is the man who is no respecter of persons.
5. Blessed is the man who is perfectly obedient.
6. Blessed is the man who accomplishes good works.
7. Blessed is the man who is careful of his speech.
8. Blessed is the man who is slow to yield to sin.
9. Blessed is the man who looks for the coming of Jesus.
10. Blessed is the man who is prayerful.

The Larger Course

The Larger Course of Teacher Training Units which the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church is announcing and sponsoring, is a strictly Brethren set-up of study to meet the needs of Brethren people.

This Course is a combined one. The Shorter Course, consisting of five units, has been in existence for some time, and, because those Sunday schools which are about to complete it and receive the diploma which is given at its completion, it has been thought best to enlarge it sufficiently to meet the needs of our more progressive schools. The Shorter Course becomes in the Larger Course, therefore, the first five units or Required General Units or courses.

The additional required "Special" and "Elective" units, plus the substitute "Elective" units, constitute the curriculum in its entirety.

Where Taken?

The Shorter or Larger Courses may be taken in the local school or in connection with one of our Young Peoples' Training Camps. In local schools it has been found best to meet for one hour during some evening of the week for class instruction. The same thing is true for combined school effort.

Wherever it is possible, students should endeavor to complete the twelve ten-lesson units or courses within a period of four years. If it can be done in three, so much the better.

*The Teacher

Teachers of course, should have the highest and best educational background possible. They should know the Bible through definite Christian experience. It is unthinkable that an unregenerated Christian should endeavor to teach the potential pedagogues of our children, youth, and adults.

In many, many cases the local pastor will be sufficiently prepared to teach the course at hand. Or, some consecrated day school teacher may serve well in the teaching capacity. Or, again, some highly successful Christian layman whose judgment and common sense are widely recognized, could aid materially in cases where teaching ability and experience are not immediately at hand.

However, College Bible Institute or Seminary training will be found to be highly beneficial in instructing high school and college graduates in the Scriptures and work of the Sunday school and church.

All teachers should be approved by the Educational Director who resides at Ashland, Ohio.

The Pupils

Age. All students should be of high school age and above. Young people who have reached the age of sixteen and have had two full years in an accredited high school will do better work than those who are just fourteen. Its equivalent in experience will also do. Those over eighteen years of age are not excluded by the above regulation.

Study and Investigation. In order to complete a unit of credit each student should spend one to two hours in preparation for each fifty minute class session. All outside reading assignments should be carefully studied. While one to two hours is a minimum requirement for credit, it is assumed that many students will desire to read and reread their lessons and spend some time in reviewing class work notes.

Attendance. If the absence is unavoidable, one absence in a ten-lesson course is granted, or two from a twelve period course. The work thus missed should be satisfactorily made up by meeting whatever requirements—written or otherwise—which the teacher may impose.

Grades. 65 is a passing grade for an examination for credit. Those who have failed should be urged to try again. No student should be made to unduly fear an examination.

Getting Started

Teacher training classes do not grow on trees. They are the result of interest which is created by the pastor and the officers of a Sunday school. General discussion followed by personal solicitation of good prospective church leaders, etc., will bring results.

The selection of a suitable time for a regular class session must be left to the teacher and pupils. Week nights, Sunday mornings, etc., these are only suggestions.

It is necessary to order text-books. In cases where paper bindings are available, they will be sent out to pupils for the reason that they are less expensive. If books are too expensive, two pupils or even three may share a single book. Or to aid some who cannot afford books, the local Sunday school may place copies in the library for the use of interested parties.

Order all teacher training books through our Ashland office. We save you postage and make a small profit on the books with which we pay diploma fees, postage, etc.

Teachers have the privilege of erecting their own examination questions. Having done this, they should be sent to Ashland for inspection and additional suggestions. They will then be sent back to the teacher who will give the examination to the class. No time limit is set for examinations.

Teachers are asked to grade every paper for the reason that an absentee grader does not know the capacities of various pupils. Such grades should be sent in on a separate sheet with the enclosed papers of the students. They will then be inspected, approved, and records will be made of the work of each pupil.

Unless definite word is received back by the teacher from the Ashland office, the grades will stand as the teacher has given them. He or she should give out the grades before they are sent in, thereby making it unnecessary to send out recognition slips.

(Additional Summarized Instructions)

1. Fold manuscripts from top to bottom.
2. Write with pen or pencil on reasonably good paper in a legible hand.
3. Write subject, name of text and author, and your name at the top of the page.
4. Leave margin and skip a line between numbered questions.
5. All papers should be carefully graded by the teacher.
6. Examination questions should be sent in with the students' papers.
7. Arrange for graduation exercises upon the completion of the Shorter and the Larger Courses.
8. Diplomas are furnished free by the Association.
9. Manuscripts should be mailed as first class matter.
10. Let the teacher's name, as well as those of the pupils, be spelled out in full. For instance, do not say Sam Jones one time, Mr. Jones the next time; or Mary Jones one time, and Mrs. S. B. Jones the next time. We must know which Jones is meant.
11. Manuscripts will be returned upon request, provided the necessary postage is sent. Otherwise they will be destroyed shortly after they are received and the grades are recorded.

Credits

All credits are recognized only by the National Sunday School Association of our denomination. The courses are designed to aid Brethren teachers and officers in doing the work which their church calls them to do.

If the examination is successfully passed and the work is satisfactorily completed, each ten-lesson course earns one unit of credit.

Local Records

It is highly essential that local records be kept of the text used, name of teacher, grades, absences, and time spent by each pupil in preparation. The Sunday school secretary should be given this record. Then he may file it away with the permanent records of the Sunday school.

*Additional material for teachers will be furnished on ways of studying and conducting courses later.

Diplomas

Diplomas are provided by the Ashland office free of charge to the student. There is one for the Shorter Course and also one for the Larger Course.

Recognition Services

A recognition service or commencement should be held when a class completes a full course. Students who are ready to receive diplomas should notify the Ashland office. At the close of each year's class, a public service might be held to recognize the meritorious work done by those who are teachers and officers, or prospective ones. If diplomas are to be granted, of course a commencement occasion is in order.

THE BIRTH AND INFANCY OF JESUS

(Lesson for January 7, 1934)

Lesson Text: Mt. 2:1-12; Golden Text: Mt. 1:21

MONDAY

The Word Made Flesh. John 1:1-14. How appropriate to begin the first devotional study in the New Year with the theme of the Coming of the Son of God into this sullen world as "The Word"; into this disintegrating world as "The Maker"; into this dying world as "The Life"; into this darkening world as "The Light". John traces the Divine Son from "the beginning" before creation down to the ministry of John the Baptist. At the incarnation he informs us: "The WORD became flesh and dwelt (lived as in a tent) among us". On the threshold of 1934, let us seek to behold the "glory of the Only Begotten Son of God—full of grace and truth" and having received him appropriate "grace for grace".

TUESDAY

The Virgin Mother. Mt. 1:18-25. What promise these six months of study in the Gospel according to Matthew hold! Let us note ten evidences of the "Virgin Birth" which should be palpable to everyone: (1) Jesus' biographers stated it as a matter of fact; (2) the prophet predicted it (Isa. 7: 14); (3) the angels repeatedly announced it; (4) Peter, (Mt. 16:16), Thomas, (John 20:28), and John (20:31), so recognized him; (5) Satan, (Mt. 4:3, 6), and demons, (Lk. 8:28, Mk. 1:23, 24) acknowledged him; (6) His enemies insinuated that he was not Joseph's son (John 8:41, 48); (7) God the Father, on three occasions so acclaimed him (Lk. 3:22; John 12:28, 29; Lk. 9:35); (8) Jesus so represented himself (Mt. 11:27; John 10:30); (9) Stephen, Acts 7:56, and Paul, 1 Cor. 15:8, saw him in glory; lastly (10) has he not manifested himself to YOU and to ME?

WEDNESDAY

Jesus Born in Bethlehem. Mt. 2:1-12. What a wonderful quest: "WHERE IS HE Who is BORN KING of the Jews?" Truly,

"salvation is of the Jews" (John 4:22). Joseph, his legal father, was of the royal line of David through Solomon; Mary also was "of the house of David" through Nathan (Lk. 3:31). And we, living in these days of the soon return of the King, can take courage in the promise of Jesus that: "All things must be fulfilled which were written in the Law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms concerning me" (Lk. 24: 44). These predictions of "the glory that should follow" (1 Pet. 1:11), have not yet been fulfilled. Surely, the world stage is being set! Also, let Israel "look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh!" (Lk. 21:28).

THURSDAY

The Flight into Egypt. Mt. 2:13-18. How the Heavenly Herod stayed the murderous hand of King Herod from slaying him who was to be "a Light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of thy people, Israel!" (Lk. 2:32). Even so, the Son prayed the Father in our behalf: "not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the Evil One!" (John 17:15). How comforting and reassuring Jesus' pronouncement: "And I GIVE unto them Eternal Life, and they shall NEVER Perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand!" (John 10:28). Just as the Author of our salvation was kept, so are we born again "to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away—reserved in heaven for you who are kept by the power of God through faith unto a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time!" (1 Pet. 1:4, 5).

FRIDAY

Jesus at Nazareth. Mt. 2:19-23. How those "silent years at Nazareth" intrigue our imagination! Luke draws aside the veil to give us these glimpses: "And the Child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon him" (Lk. 2:40); "And he was subject unto them . . . and Jesus increased in wisdom (mentally), and in stature (physically) and in favor with god (spiritually) and man (socially)." (Lk. 2:51, 52). We also know "it was his custom" to go into the synagogue (Continued on page 14)

A Message from Our C. E. President

Waterloo, Iowa, Dec. 12, 1933.

Brethren Endeavorers:

Christian Endeavor Week is not far away. The exact date will likely be from the last Sunday in January to the first one in February. February 2, 1934 will be the 53rd Anniversary of this YOUTH MOVEMENT in the world. But I am writing you about our own denominational anniversary, the 40th anniversary of Christian Endeavor in our own church.

In a recent article in the Brethren Evangelist, Vol. 45, No. 35, under date of September 16th, there is all the information relative to the starting of Christian Endeavor in our own church. It is not so much, and yet perhaps it is all that can be had and that much is of some importance.

Why not every Brethren church, where there is Endeavor work being sponsored, have a celebration of our own anniversary? Now is the time to begin. We suggest that an evening be given over to a well-planned program. Other nearby Endeavorers may be invited. Where our churches are near; that will be a fine arrangement. February the 2nd, coming on Friday, offers a good time for a banquet in keeping with this celebration. Then too, the following Sunday afternoon or evening might well be used in a big C. E. Rally, with speaker or planned program as each society or community can arrange.

Our church at Waterloo, Iowa, is already planning for a banquet with a well arranged program. Details to be decided upon later.

Not the least in the program or celebration is the appeal to make a pledge or present a good offering for our goal—EVANGELISM—this year. This money will be used in the Brethren church for the salvation of souls. It should be sent to Miss Gladys Spice (address on this page). What better thing could we do? ENDEAVORERS! Come On—Let us make a creditable showing this year. Let us concentrate on this one thing, instead of scattering our gifts far and wide, where we cannot get a record.

Finally, we want a report of your celebration for the Christian Endeavor page of the Evangelist. Write it up and send to C. D. Whitmer (address on this page also).

Now, since this will be my last message for this year, I herein add "My best personal good wishes and a Happy New Year to all Brethren Endeavorers."

E. M. RIDDLE, President, Brethren C. E. Union.

P. S. Are you making C. E. posters to advertise your meetings? Are you keeping them to be sent to Winona Lake next conference? We want them there. Two worth while prizes are being offered for the best. Decisions will be announced at the annual C. E. Banquet. E. M. R.

Seeking the Living Way

By C. D. Whitmer

Theme:—When is Christ My Master?

This question is one that comes to us all, and it persists until we have answered it fully. The twelve disciples probably never realized how vividly this question was before them until the time came for the Last Supper. Picture, if you can, the twelve disciples as they arrived in the little room to partake of a meal with Jesus for the last time. They began to argue as to which of them should have the chief seats, at the right and left of their Lord. The Master rebuked them. "This would be child's play if it were not a serious matter." I am to eat with you for the last time before I suffer and die—and you open the meal with a quarrel. You struggle for the high seats. You think only of yourselves. Which is greater—he who sits down and eats or he who serves? I am here to serve!" Jesus left the table, girded himself with a towel, and began washing the feet of the disciples. When he had finished he went back to the table. As the Master looked at them he said, "Do you know what I have done? You call me Lord and Master—and I am that. If I wash your feet, if I serve you, what about yourselves? I have given you an example. Surely the servant is not greater than his Lord."

A little later, after Judas had left to betray the Master, Jesus again spoke, saying, "I have a new commandment for you. Love one another as I love every one of you. Here in the future years will lie the test. (Continued on page 14) that his ware may be advertised as our friend, Mr. R—, runs. He has spent the long day surrounded by heavy timbers, sawed lumber, buzz saws and saw dust. Now he has come to pray before he goes to rest in preparation for another day at the mill.

Next to him is our friendly Mr. K—, another Korean. He never has much to say but his graceful bow and pleasant smile speak volumes of appreciation and happiness which he is enjoying as a result of several years of Christian living.

Number three of the Korean trio is Mr. B—, who has also come directly from work. These Koreans are hard workers. They are immigrants and often made to feel inferior and do the drudgery. He is only a boy of twenty and consequently the effect of the day's work does not show markedly on his face as he sits quietly on the folding chair while the knees of his overalls shine with the accumulation of grease acquired in the shop and continuing to accumulate there since the overalls were new, probably several months ago.

Mr. O—. Who is this later comer? (He arrived just one hour and 20 minutes after the meeting was scheduled to begin.) "Who is he? Why doesn't he get around on time?" you say. Dear friends! he has come when most of us would have sought an easy chair and our newspaper for just a few minutes before consigning ourselves to the mattress for the night. He has probably worked until sundown in the carpenter shop. Even in his occupation, this little five foot fellow, takes after his Lord. Then he hopped on his bicycle, which he rides because it costs less than riding tram cars, and rides home. He grabs his towel and soap and makes for the nearby public bath where he scrubs up and takes a good soaking in steaming hot water. He hurries home, eats his rice and pickles, puts on his white collar and his only "good suit," says goodby to his wife, jumps on the bike again and is off for the church. From the pastor I learn that out of his meager earnings he must pay his rent, probably amounting to one-fourth of his salary; he must pay rent for his brother's widowed wife and three children and provide for them. Moreover, he has just buried his aged father-in-law, and few things are more expensive in Japan than to bury the dead. In addition to this he must provide for other relatives, none of whom are Christians. And yet! he is always wearing a smile. He is happy in Christ! He bears his burdens manfully in spite of a childless home—the greatest of all possible disappointments to a Japanese husband and wife. He too came—though late—to pray and praise.

Mr. A— is the fellow wearing an old coat displaying two holes in the back. These people do not come to the church to display their clothes, neither does the lack of good clothes keep them away from the meetings, and why should they? He too is a young day laborer but faithful to the God he loves.

Mr. K— is always dressed up. His hair is sleekly oiled and combed but not to the point of vanity, merely in keeping with the position he holds at the city office. He is just a "babe in Christ" but is showing remarkable growth and promises to be a great help in the work of the church.

Next to him sits the writer, the only light complexioned person in the group but seemingly none the less welcome because of that. There is nothing strange about his being present at a prayer meeting. It is now more than forty years since he learned to pray

Who are These that Gather for Prayer?

A Look-in at an Evangelical Church Mission in Japan

By REV. HARVEY THEDE

Missionary of the Evangelical Church in Osaka, Japan

The fact that Oriental people should worship the same God as you and I, seems more wonderful to us who have been privileged to live among and work with them, than to our friends at home. The reason for this may be that we here see how greatly the background and present-day life of these people has been and still is, subject to the influence of various religions which, through a long existence here, have become an intricate part of their culture, whereas we in the homeland though academically familiar with the fact that other countries have their own religious system, never really escape from the thought that all the world is familiar with Christianity as we are. We rather expect them to worship our God. So when I gather with my Japanese Christian friends for prayer I often think of what a wonderful and beautiful thing it is for different people, in different parts of the world, to meet to pray to the same heavenly Father. At the same time my heart rejoices at the knowledge of our kinship through Christ. Thus I thought again as I sat in the prayer meeting at our Osaka, Izu Church, sometime ago. There were just eleven of us—the twelfth may have been anyone who was willfully absent—and there we sat, according to our custom in a semi-circle facing the leader, our young pastor. But who were these eleven and why did they come?

Miss Y. . . ., the only feminine number of the church out this evening, is the caretaker's daughter and probably the only one in addition to the writer brought up under Christian influences. But why does she look so tired and worn? She has begun to share the worries of her fast aging mother, who through an unfaithful husband must bear the entire burden of providing for the home. This faithful daughter has spent the day at a sewing school far across the city from which she has returned just a little while ago. But fortunately she has learned to pray and she is not too tired to appreciate the value of an hour of prayer. Other members of her sex would no doubt be present but some must work and others live too far to permit their coming out in the evening to the service.

Next to her sits Mr. K. . . ., a young man dressed in Japanese kimono. He was once a communist. While merely a boy he spent three years in prison because of his communistic sympathies but by the grace of God has become a changed man. Once he was willing to give himself to the propagation of the Marxian doctrine, but now he gives his time, his money and talents for the extension of the Kingdom of God.

"How does that fellow with the scar on his cheek come to be numbered among the eleven," you ask, "and where did he get that scar?" You mean Mr. U—? He never says how he came by that scar. It may have an interesting history. It may be the relic of his pre-Christian experiences, but that is of little consequence now. The fact remains that he has found Christ and salvation and that is why he is present on this night. He is the "Village Smith." He, too, comes to church on Sunday, now however, to sit among his boys, for they are not yet Christians but his prayers and the silent testimony of his daily life is sure to have a wholesome effect and influence upon them and the community.

Our Korean friends are also present. The first of the three sitting next to each other, Mr. R— has just come from his work at the saw-mill. Perhaps he hasn't even stopped long enough to eat a bite or if he did he hurried off without taking time to change his clothes. There he sits with his coolie coat; not the gorgeously colored kind our ladies wear for an evening wrap—but an honest-to-goodness coolie coat made of blue denim bearing the name and business of his employer in Chinese ideographs, so and the habit of gathering with God's people for prayer has long been a habit with him. For this he is inexpressibly grateful.

The last man is the student pastor, Mr. W—. He is a busy man. Having fought the call to preach for a number of years, but having no rest, he finally yielded three years ago. In spite of being married and having a wife and child to support he at once entered the seminary. He travels nearly fifty miles per day going to and from school. He is at present enjoying a short spring vacation from the school and therefore is the more active at the church work. He is a product of this very church. It was he who suggested that he with his family move into cheaper and much less desirable quarters in order to save rent. He still has three years of his grind before he can devote his full time to the church. He is a fine fellow, understands his people, preaches a sane gospel, has a sense of humor and is not afraid of work. He comes to pray with his people and for his people. There are many who need his help, some cannot come and some will not come. He must carry upon his heart all of them.

Come and join us. Hear their prayers and thanksgiving, humble, sincere and full of faith. Come and learn of their temptations and their victories. Come and compare their past with their present, compare their ambitions in Christ with their ambitions in life before they knew him and answer for yourself the question, "Should Missions Go on?"—The Evangelical-Messenger.

The Lord is giving in other parts of the brotherhood. We shall continue to pray that all our churches may recognize the privilege of preaching the Word of God in these uncertain times. "Heaven and earth shall pass away but my words shall not pass away." (Luke 21:33).

ALBERT E. NEHER

The Second Brethren church of Los Angeles, California, has suffered another tremendous loss in the passing of Albert E. Neher on November 17, 1933. Unspeakably lonesome for his wife who went to be with the Lord less than eight months before, Brother Neher was anxious for the time of his departure. Knowing this, the more than four hundred friends who gathered from all over the Southern California district to pay their last tributes to a life well spent, were perfectly resigned to that which had transpired. All pastors of the district were EVAN enging ession L. .N TextF 2 present at the last rites which were conducted by the writer, the pastor of the church the deceased loved so well. Brother Neher was a deacon of the Second church for 23 years and was the much loved Sunday School Superintendent for 17 years. He was also an active member of the district mission board for a long time. As treasurer of this board, it was his lot to disburse the money for the beginning and early growth of the thriving South Gate mission church where his son-in-law and his daughter, Leila Polman, have been so greatly used of the Lord as pastor and wife. In addition to this daughter, where he made his home during his last eight months on earth, one son Gerwin, also survives, along with three grandchildren and one brother, Benjamin Neher. Before slipping away to experience that happy first moment of seeing face to face his Savior whom he loved and served, and the reunion with his devoted wife, he requested his pastors to use Romans 12:11 as the text for his parting message to all who might gather for the funeral service. Pray that other such diligent and fervent servants for Christ might be raised up to supplant these who have gone on, "so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

A. D. CASHMAN.

SECOND BRETHERN CHURCH

Los Angeles, California

Another year has passed and our church has been blessed in many ways.

In these days when we see so much falling away from the "faith once and for all delivered to the saints," we thank our Heavenly Father for the faithful ones in the church and the new faces that have come in.

Our pastor, Brother Cashman and wife have surely been faithful and sincere servants of God. They have both worked untiringly in their efforts for a better and more spiritual church. We can truly say, "We have gone forward and not backward."

A most unique series of services were planned by our pastor for the month of November which proved a great spiritual blessing to our church. Five popular radio preachers on the coast appeared in person and gave messages on five successive evenings during the first week. Such men as Chaplain Hogg, Dr. Stewart MacLennan, Milo Jamison, Dr. Talbot and Dr. Fuller

LINWOOD, MARYLAND

The Linwood evangelistic campaign has now passed into history. These services began on the 19th of November and continued three weeks. They were conducted by Dr. Charles A. Bame of Ashland, Ohio. He preached the truth with clearness, force and power. As an exponent of great Bible truths he has few superiors. His exposition of the book of Romans was so interesting that many came to get these fine expositions which were aside from the regular evangelistic campaign. His audiences grew from the first. In point of additions to the church the number was not so large. Eight have been baptized and received into the church and two will probably go to another church. Five had been received just before the meeting began. Brother Bame had his home with us while here and his stay was greatly enjoyed. The additions were of a type that will give standing to the church and as a result of clear explanations as to what the church really stands for the church has a higher standing in the community than she has ever had. Seed was sown that will produce a harvest in the future. Only those of us who know the real situation can appreciate the fine work that was done by Dr. Bame in the evangelistic campaign.

A feature that is worthy of special note is the splendid way in which the members of the Church of the Brethren supported this work. Night after night delegations came with special music and in every way possible showed their interest in the work. We certainly are grateful for their aid in this campaign. Some of their members did not miss a night after they started. A few more revivals like this one and there will be a wedding of these two churches and I would like to be the officiating clergyman and I do not believe any divorce suit will follow, either.

J. L. BOWMAN.

WHITTIER, CALIFORNIA

The Lord is with us in Whittier. We praise his Name!

The Evening Bible School is functioning enthusiastically with two classes on each of four evenings a week. A weekly popular hour is open to the public at which time we enjoy hearing some of the greatest preachers in Southern California. Seventy-eight enrolled at the beginning of this Semester.

Our Sunday school is growing with an average attendance of from fifty to seventy-five more than one year ago.

We marvel and praise the Lord for the way he has blessed the Sunday services. We sometimes have two hundred and fifty in the morning service and occasionally over three hundred in the evening.

Our auditorium has been enlarged twice in seven months. Once we added eight new pews and the second time we placed eighty-nine opera chairs in the balcony.

Our Young People's Christian Endeavor Society has just moved to larger quarters made possible by putting two rooms into one. These changes bring about a serious cramped condition for our Sunday school.

At a recent business meeting, it was decided to build a new building adjoining the present building on the south. The work has been begun, but is delayed on account of rain. The new structure will have a basement and one floor. This will give us an addition of about twenty-six hundred square feet. We hope this will be ready to occupy by the middle of February.

The W. M. S. and Junior and Senior Sisterhoods are active, holding regular and profitable meetings.

Three of our young men are now in Ashland in preparation for the ministry. Two are in the College and one is in the Seminary.

Our prayer meetings are times of spiritual refreshing with great emphasis placed upon praise, thanksgiving and intercession. One special meeting on Tuesday morning at 9:30 continues to be the power generator for the church.

As a result of the blessing of God almost every Sunday, people are coming forward either to accept Christ for the first time, or to give their lives in surrender to the Lord, or for fellowship in the church. We have averaged a baptismal service every other Sunday since the first of September. For these blessings we give the praise and glory to the Lord who alone is able to move people in these difficult days.

We rejoice greatly in the victories which were engaged. During the second week our pastor preached on timely topics and the third week Brethren pastors in the district brought fine messages each evening. A. L. Lynn on Monday, Dr. L. S. Bauman on Tuesday, C. W. Mayes on Wednesday, John Lienhard on Thursday and Leo Polman on Friday. All services were donated and all offerings were turned over to the building repair fund to care for much needed repairs on our church building.

We have lost two saints of God during the last year, Brother and Sister Neher. Sister Neher passed away in March and just eight months later Brother Neher slipped away to be with our Lord and his faithful wife. It seems like there is such a vacant spot for they were always in their places when there was a church service. Brother Neher had been the Sunday school superintendent for seventeen years, so you see it will be hard to fill places that they had so beautifully filled.

We hope that the coming year will find us ready to go forward better prepared than this year. Although the depression has hit us here we know that our Father is rich in houses and lands and that with him all things are possible and we know that "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord."

Preparing For a Revival

and had finished my schooling, I would then more than tithe and be a real steward. This did not work, however, for my conscience pricked me so much, that it was impossible to rest at night. Finally the victory came. Upon my knees I decided what I should give to the Lord and, debts or no debts, the next check was amputated—with no little struggle on my part—but the Lord received his portion, and has from that time on. The victory was won. Have I suffered from it? This last year, the Lord has blessed me immeasurably.

It is impossible to give to God. It cannot be done. He sees to it that the individual who freely gives, freely receives. It may not be so much materially, but what a wonderful blessing we receive, spiritually. The children of Israel, at the height of their success, gave thirty-five percent of their incomes to God; what is the matter with the Christian of today in this dispensation of grace? These people were Jews, and under the law; according to historians, they were blessed as long as they feared the Lord.

Prayer and the Spirit of Expansion

In preparing for a revival, we should establish LIVING prayer meetings. Nearly every revival has started because some individual, or group of praying Christians, had the burden of souls so heavily upon their hearts, that they agonized before God for lost sinners. The Holy Spirit should have the right of way in the heart of the individual Christian until rivers of living water flow out. The Brethren must be convinced that revivals are essential to growth and power, as well as for the salvation of the sinner. Christians must pay the cost; must be willing to sacrifice; must be true stewards, and not rob God. Our Foreign mission program must be multiplied many times and a Home program to match.

It is time for our larger churches to branch out and establish mission points as we did in the past. In this manner, the great surplus of living talent in those churches can have a personal interest in the project receive wonderful training, and be built up spiritually. It was my privilege to attend a Baptist church in Michigan for three years. There was not a wealthy member in the church. This church had a vision of stewardship and, although much smaller than many in our own denomination, had three missions (one a Russian). We young people organized Gospel teams and worked in these mission points. Not only did the Lord honor his Word—"for out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger," but also blessed us wonderfully. We supplied workers, music, and some financial assistance, and when I left that community, one mission had 100, the second 80, and the Russian 40 members. This church also gave two thousand dollars a year to Foreign Missions. Don't tell me that the Brethren church cannot grow in this manner! I know another church in Chicago, which is right now running four missions in outlying towns, and gives over five thousand dollars to Foreign Missions. What these other churches are doing now, during the so-called depression, the Brethren church can do. We need a revival of this method of expansion, supplemented, of course, by the work of the General Mission program. It works! I've seen it work, and have helped to make it work, in other churches.

The Brethren church is unique in that it is the Fundamental church of the so-called Fundamentalists. It has truly the "full Gospel message." It is not, however, living up to its privileges. Let us awake from our lethargy, and arise from the dead, and God will give us light!

on the Sabbath day (Lk. 4:16), and that he was known about town as "the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James and Joses, and Juda and Simon" (Mk. 6:3), and that he had at least two half- (or step-) sisters. We also understand he was not popular with his family (John 7:2-9).

SATURDAY

Jesus in the Temple. Lk. 2:41-52. Many are the sublime implications of this narrative of the visit of Jesus to the temple in Jerusalem in his twelfth year. But let us consider some very practical lessons for those of us confronted with the "boy problem". Not only did his (foster) father, Joseph, go up to Jerusalem every year to the Feast of the Passover, as was required of every adult male, but his mother also made the pilgrimage—attesting that she was more than a nominally devout woman. Then, there was the tragedy of his parents "supposing" their Son to be in the proper company! Not all taken-for-granted-absences turn out so auspiciously! Again, where would one of our Junior boys be likely to be found today alone in a capitol city which was just emptying itself of festival throngs which numbered thousands from all over the world! Finally, there is the indictment due hundreds of parents today: "They understood not" their son!

SUNDAY

The Promised Child. Isa. 9:2-7. A Child born to be a King—after that he hath suffered. . . ! Simeon, in the Temple, on the occasion of the Child's presentation, "said to Mary his mother: "Behold, this Child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel, and for a sign which shall be spoken against!" (Lk. 2:34). How Israel has fallen for nineteen centuries! And how the faithful Remnant will rise again when they accept their Messiah! Then, and not before, will the prophecies be fulfilled: "Wonderful" in his majesty and power; "Councillor" in justice and equity; "Mighty God" in his power to subdue all things unto himself; "Everlasting Father" in his dealing with his people as a father; "Prince of Peace" in that he not only can GIVE peace, but in that he will ENFORCE peace!

It is my test. By it men shall know that you are my disciples—if you have love one to another."

The Last Supper then began. Jesus served the wine, broke and served the bread. After this was completed, he spoke to his disciples at length, telling them many things that were to happen. In the 16th and 17th chapters of St. John is told exactly what Jesus said. This time he spoke so that all the disciples understood. They knew exactly what was expected of them. Jesus was soon to leave, and the building of Christianity was to rest upon their shoulders.

In our lives we must recognize the higher power as did the disciples. We must accept the challenge given by Jesus in that we must show love to God, our Master, by doing his bidding.

Jesus told us many things we should do, especially concerning our attitude and actions toward others. We must make our lives attractive with a personality like to that of Jesus.

Every life is faced with the danger of temptation. The ruling passion of many a life is personal pleasure. Some are lured on by the lust for power over their fellowmen, while others, less self-centered, strive for the supremacy of their particular group. Still others live for the purpose of accumulating material wealth. Do not let these evils creep into your life, for these motives of living fall far short of the ideals of Christ.

We need again to ask ourselves the question, when is Christ my Master? You say: "He is my Master all the time." Truly, he is your Master all the time, but just insofar as you live, as an example, his life. Remember, Jesus was always ready to serve as he did at the Last Supper. Each of the disciples felt, at that time, that he must live the ideals of Jesus, remind others of him, continually enjoy fellowship with him for courage to go on, and extend his cause to the whole world. If we will but accept these challenges, we will discover that Christ is truly our Master.

FETISHISM IN AN ARMENIAN CHURCH

The interpretations scientific explorers attach to their finds do not always matter greatly for guesses are easy deductions and imagination plays one many tricks when it becomes too volatile. But what they sometimes bring to light by research may shock and enlighten those who are firm believers in the Christian religion, but are deficient in any knowledge of superstitions which early crept into the churches and persist unto the present time. Mr. Carveth Wells, who has a reputation for exploration in the jungle latitudes, has found his latest adventure in a remote corner of Soviet Russia, where he found, almost untouched by the conflicts, the monastery of Echmiadzin, seat of the primate of the Armenian Church, forty miles from Mount Aarat.

Here is a great group of buildings, surrounded by brick walls thirty feet high. But the real interest is in the relics which the cathedral harbors. There are early manuscripts, among them copies of the gospels and the whole Bible. More interesting than even these, strange to say, are the relics, such as the piece of reddish petrified wood, in a frame studded with jewels. For centuries it has been venerated as a fragment of the original Noah's Ark, "a piece of the rudder." The grain of the wood still shows clearly, Mr. Wells states. Another relic, mounted in the same manner, is a spearhead, which is reputed to be the very one that pierced the side of Jesus as he hung on the cross.

But the relic valued most is the coat for which the gamblers rolled dice at the foot of the cross on the day of his crucifixion. In making this claim they dispute the claim of Trier, in Germany, which makes the very same statement about the "holy coat" which was exhibited there this very year. Too precious to be seen, Echmiadzin's relic is kept in a sealed cavity beneath the ancient pulpit.

The legend about the coat is that the soldier who won it sold it to a Jew who took it home. When he put it on the shoulder of his sister, however, she fell dead at his feet. The monks explain that her body was exhumed years later, and the coat in which she was buried, was found to be in perfect condition.

This sort of fetishism permeates the Greek and Roman churches, and has entered in various ways into Protestantism. A pulpit used by John Wesley in Wales sits in the chapel of Emory University. A spoon used by Alexander Campbell was exhibited at a recent convention, and the ladies invited to "lick" it. In the early centuries of the church nobody dreamed that Christians would adore relics, or that a simple bishop would become "the Pope." But behold—Selected.

FEDERAL LAWS IN PRE-REPEAL ADVERTISING

The rejuvenating whiskey traffic, apparently encouraged by the expected triumph of prohibition repeal, and claiming some sort of tacit pre-repeal government sanction for a sudden burst of nation-wide advertising, runs afoul of, not only a single government statute, but by their action, it is now discovered they have violated three distinct and separate federal legal bans upon their publicity," declares a statement issued from headquarters of the American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation in Chicago today.

"The three federal laws specifically prohibiting the carrying of liquor advertising through the United States mails, are:

1. "The Reed Amendment to the Post Office Appropriations Law, approved March 3, 1917, more than nine months before the Eighteenth Amendment was even approved by Congress, still acknowledged to be in full operation; 2. Section 17, Paragraphs 613-614 of the National Prohibition Act, adopted January 16, 1920; and 3. The Congressional Act of March 22, 1933, Sections 3 (c) and 7, in which, by specific statement, the Act of March 3, 1917, including the Reed Amendment, is recognized as being in full force.

"These three federal enactments agree in prohibiting the transporting through the United States mail of any advertisement of 'spiritous, vinous, malted, fermented or other intoxicating liquors of any kind . . . when addressed or directed to any person, firm, or other addressee at any point or place in any state or territory in which state or local legislation makes such distribution or solicitation illegal.' A fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for

TWO "BRETHREN" CHRISTMAS GREETINGS

Strange as it may seem, the morning paper today (Dec. 26) carries a statement that this year, there was less of the sedate and "regular" sort of Christmas greeting and more of the more secular. In confirmation of this, the scribe would like to produce some of the evidence. Perhaps in the failure to get the consent of both the parties, one will not dare to disclose the names of these Brethren, but here are the (doubtless) original verses:

*"The wolf is howling at our door,
The raven echoes, "Nevermore,"
Dark shadows hover round about,
The coal is gone, the fire is out.
Our purse is empty, credit's gone,
Of worldly goods we ain't got none,
And yet, despite this sad array,
We still have cheer enough to say,
"Merry Christmas."*

—Signed.

Swift on the lap of Uncle Sam went the reply:

*Too late! Too late! Your Christmas cheer Came after Christmas Day was here.
But "better late than never," still;
"Cheers" always good, if sick or ill,
Depression's o'er; so sad your lot,
No coal you have, no wood you got?
So we advise you, come back here;
You'll surely have a glad New Year.*

not more than six months on first offense, or for not more than one year on a second offense, is imposed by the Reed Amendment.

"The Reed Amendment concludes with this statement: "The Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to make public from time to time in suitable bulletins or public notices the names of states in which it is unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors."

"In view of the fact that the present Postmaster General of the United States, James A. Farley, so far as known, has issued no recent bulletins in accordance with these federal instructions, a list of states and lesser sections in which liquor advertising is still barred, is of interest: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, and West Virginia. In addition, there are hundreds of counties and townships, representing areas in most of the other states, thus protected by these federal statutes.

"The claim that official government approval has already been secured for pre-repeal whisky advertising is unqualifiedly denied by three letters just received by the Foundation: The Department of Justice, which advises that the Attorney General, spokesman for that department, has issued no ruling on the subject; the Post Office Department advises, 'This office has made no ruling with respect to the status of the so-called Reed Amendment'; and Commissioner J. M. Doran of the Treasury Department writes 'You are advised that this office is not aware of any ruling made to the effect that there will be no prosecution henceforth under what is known as the Reed Amendment', and concludes by quoting verbatim, Sections 3 (c) and 7 of the Act of March 22, 1933, the Beer Act, which specifically acknowledges the present calidity of the Reed Amendment.

"In view of the above, whiskey advertising is likely to find a thorny path back to legal standing, even if the Eighteenth Amendment is repealed."

She was 75 years, 11 months and 8 days old at her passing. She was a member of the Center Chapel Brethren church. MCCRACKEN—Joseph Milton McCracken was born June 15, 1854, and died August 15, 1933, being in his eightieth year. Fifty-three years ago he married Phoebe Parker. To this union five children were born, all of whom survive with their mother. There also survive fifteen grandchildren, one sister and four brothers. Brother McCracken was one of the pioneer members of the Aleppo Brethren church in Green County, Pennsylvania, half a century ago when Elder J. A. Murray and Elder Henry Wise were active in building the Lord's work in southwestern Pennsylvania. The family called this writer, who had the privilege of being Brother McCracken's pastor from 1923 to 1925, to conduct the funeral which was held from the home place. Upon urgent invitation, we remained over Sunday in this former congenial parsonate, and preached at the Sugar Grove church where the McCracken family have worshipped for many years. At the close of the morning session it was our privilege to receive the confession of one of Brother McCracken's sons who is himself the husband and father in a splendid family. During the afternoon he was baptized along with three children who were relatives. So we see, that, while the Lord calls home his workers, he raises up others to continue his work. May the zeal and conviction of these pioneers rest upon those who take their place in the ranks of the church militant.

OUR LITTLE READERS

HAPPY NEW YEAR

By Louise M. Oglevee

Once there was a boy who said,
In the politest way,
"A happy New Year to you,"
To folks on New Year's Day.

But he surely didn't mean it,
For before the day was done,
He frowned and sulked and scolded,
And was cross to everyone.

A little girl that morning,
In the politest way,
Said, "Happy New Year to you,"
To folks on New Year's Day.

And she surely must have meant it,
For before the day was done,
She had helped a lot of people,
And been kind to everyone.

Now a year is made of days,
And this fact is clear;
Happy, friendly, helpful days
Make a happy year.

THE GIFT OF HAPPINESS

By Bertha Wood Godshall

One day, early in the winter, a little package arrived for Ruth from her Aunt Sara, who was a missionary in China. Eagerly the little girl tore off the wrappings, hoping that it was a beautiful gift for her.

"Why, it isn't much of a present," she sniffed disappointedly, holding up the contents of the box. "It's only a couple of queer-looking balls." There was a note enclosed, which she read aloud:

"Plant these lily bulbs in a bowl on a sunny window sill," was what Aunt Sara wrote. "They will grow into sweet-smelling flowers. The Chinese people believe that if they bloom on New Year's Day, they bring happiness for all the year."

Ruth looked disgustedly at the little dry, brown bulbs which she held in her hand.

"If she'd sent me a doll, it would have brought me a lot more happiness," she exclaimed angrily, throwing the bulbs back into the box. She picked up the new doll that had come on her birthday and sang it to sleep just as if it had been a baby.

"Why, you never planted Aunt Sara's bulbs," declared mother, a few days later, when she found them still in the box.

"What's the use?" demanded Ruth crossly. "Nothing pretty could ever come from those dried-up lumps."

"Suppose you plant them and see," suggested mother. "Flowers come from tiny brown seeds!"

Frowning sulkily, Ruth placed the bulbs in a bowl on her bedroom window sill.

Although she carefully watered and tended them, there was no change in their appearance for many days. Now she was sure that she had been right about them. She was about to tell her mother this, when, to her surprise, one morning she saw tiny green shoots coming up.

After that she watched them closely, her first thought each day upon waking being to see if they had grown any in the night.

On New Year's morning, when Ruth opened her eyes, she noticed that the air was filled with a wonderfully sweet perfume. Glancing toward the window, she gave a delighted cry. There were four beautiful gold-and-white lilies smiling back at her, as if to say, "Happy New Year!"

"Mother, look, my bulbs have turned into flowers!" exclaimed Ruth.

"Suppose you had left the bulbs in the box," said mother, gazing at the fragrant, starry blossoms.

"Then I would never have had the happiness of seeing them bloom right here on my own window sill," smiled Ruth, bending to smell the blossoms which had journeyed all the way from China to bring her this joyous holiday greeting.—Selected.

BOOK REVIEW

From time to time a number of Brethren have requested names of readable books on the subject of Archaeology and the Bible.

This fall Revell Company has given us a posthumous publication of Dr. Melvin Grove Kyle, entitled, "Moorings Masts of Revelation." Dr. Kyle is well known in Brethren circles because of his most acceptable lectures on the Winona Bible Conference platform, and through his writing archaeological notes in the Sunday School Times over a period of many years. For some years he was President of Xenia Seminary, in which more than one-half dozen of our ministers received their theological training.

The book is divided into six parts as follows:

1. Walking in the Morning Twilight with the Patriarchs.
2. Walking at Sunrise with Moses.
3. In the Footsteps of the Prophets, in Sunshine and Shadow.
4. In the Footsteps of Our Lord; the Galilean Ministry, the Way of Service.
5. In the Footsteps of our Lord: Judean Ministry, the Way of Reconciliation.
6. In the Footsteps of the Apostles and Evangelists.

This two dollar book, purchased by your Sunday school and read by every teacher, would develop a Palestinian appreciation, an understanding and love for the Word, and enrich Bible teaching.
